The convention voted to meet at the same time and place in 1908. A committee of three was appointed to consider the wisdom of meeting on the assembly grounds each alternate year. This committee is composed of R. E. Elmore, F. T. Sutton and C. H. Walker. The report will be made at next year's convention.

President Josephus Hopwood, representing Virginia Christian College, addressed the convention on education. The college received a gift of $2,000 during the convention. This leaves only $1,700 lacking of the $50,000 which the college began to secure one year ago. Virginia is proud of this record, and is thoroughly convinced that Brother Davis knows his business. Northern and Western states, please take notice. G. O. Davis belongs to Virginia. Hands off.

The following officers were elected for the board and for the convention: President, W. F. Fox, Richmond; first vice-president, J. S. Ellett, Richmond; second vice-president, H. P. Atkins, Richmond; secretary and treasurer, E. N. Newman, Richmond; T. A. Cary, Richmond; F. T. Sutton, Richmond; R. M. Kent, Richmond; R. H. Walker and J. G. Holladay, Norfolk; L. C. Shelburne, Dot; F. W. Eheart, Blacksburg; C. H. Walker, Charlottesville; R. E. Elmore, Roanoke; J. D. Hamaker, Strasburg. H. C. Combs.

Kansas State Convention.

The Kansas State Convention will be held with the Central church, Wichita, September 30 to October 3. Half-fare rate has been granted on all railroads. We are planning to entertain 1,000 delegates, and present prospects are for the largest and most popular convention ever held. The program that has been prepared is the best yet. It is nearly as good as a National Convention program. The out-of-state speakers are: C. E. Hill, national superintendent of Christian Endeavor; H. H. Moninger, Sunday-school expert; B. B. Tyler, of Denver; W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg; Secretaries Rains, Wright, Muckley, Mohorter; President Zollars, of Oklahoma Christian University; Mrs. Anna Atwater, editor of the Missionary Tidings. De Loss Smith will have charge of the convention music.

E. W. Allen.

The Norfolk Convention.

To the Brotherhood:

Norfolk, August 8.—We have sent out facts, figures and invitations with reference to the national convention in October, and we stand ready and willing to welcome you in large numbers. The churches are urged to send their ministers in order that these workers may get in touch with the forward work of the brotherhood.

Has your church acted on this suggestion? Have you arranged for your minister to come? If not, why not? We of the East are anxious to have the other religious bodies of this section know who and what we are. Will you be one to come and assist in the good work?

The historic features of this section of the world are sufficient at any time to repay you for a trip, and at this time special reasons can be urged. Each one of us should keep shoulder to shoulder with the work of the Disciples of Christ, and no place is better calculated to bring us in close touch with the great work done by our people than at these national conventions.

The educational value of a national convention is such as to give enthusiasm and inspiration to your home work. We therefore, brethren, trust that you will let the people of the Atlantic coast know something of our remarkable strength.

On to Norfolk, Va., we trust may be your desire and action. R. E. Steed, Chairman Publicity Committee.

Illinois State Convention.

The state convention of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society meets at Jacksonville September 9, 10, 11 and 12. Large posters to advertise the convention are mailed to each church and minister and it is hoped that they may be hung up in the church buildings.

The C. W. B. M. work, educational work, state and district missionary work, as well as various other interests will be represented.

Last year we had the largest convention of any in the history of the society. There were 600 delegates. This year fully 1,000 are expected and both the church and minister at Jacksonville invite them.

There will be no special rate granted by the railroads. The fare is 2 cents per mile, straight, each way.

Lodging and breakfast will be furnished and meals served for the day can be had at very reasonable rates.

A Double Convention.

The Indian Territory and Oklahoma conventions will meet together this year in Oklahoma City on September 5-9. This will be one of the most important conventions ever held in the Southwest. Oklahoma is just coming into statehood. The former organizations of two strong missionary societies will seek to be formed into one by the adoption of a new constitution. This calls for a general attendance, clear thinking, and deep spiritual insight. The new University of Oklahoma is being inaugurated. The educational problem will be added. The old interests of the missionary work, with living link evangelists, and church building enterprises, with the C. W. B. M., Bible school and C. E. interests, will also be considered. A phenomenal attendance for the Southwest is expected. O. L. Smith, El Reno, Okla. For joint committee.

Oklahoma Christian University.

Inquiry is frequently made as to whether Oklahoma Christian University will open at Enid at the appointed time. We are making no other plans than to open on September 17. This is the date according to the calendar published in our prospectus and 5,000 copies of this have been distributed. It would be practically impossible for us to change the date of the opening now. Work on the buildings is going forward rapidly. If necessary another relay of workmen will be put on. We have bought an equipment in the way of furniture and school furnishings, amounting in the aggregate to about $15,000. This will all be delivered early in September.

Twelve different schools and colleges will be opened up in the very beginning. Many of our faculty are already here and others are expected during the present week. We will have a fine library covering the various departments; four well-equipped laboratories and all the furnishings belonging to a thoroughly equipped university. The indications are that we will make a phenomenally large opening. The University Investment and Development Company and the Chamber of Commerce have contracted to furnish us 200 preparatory students, 100 college students and 100 music students from Garfield county. We hope that the full quota of students promised will be on hand at the opening, as we would far rather have the students than to have the tuition without the students. The location, the buildings, the equipment, the faculty all combine to make this a most attractive and profitable school for young people to attend.

Send for our full 186-page prospectus.

N. J. AYLSWORTH

N. J. Aylsworth, the subject of this obituary, was born in the township of Cuba, Lake county, Illinois, January 15, 1843, and died at the home of his son-in-law, James A. Macbeth, in Auburn, N. Y., June 24, 1907, aged 64 years, 5 months and 9 days. He was the brother of W. P. Aylsworth, of Lincoln, Neb., known throughout our brotherhood as the successful chancellor of Cotner University. His wife died nearly a year before his own death, and he left of his immediate family two daughters and a son—Ella Moore, of California, and Ruth Macbeth, of Auburn, N. Y., and William Macbeth of this state. His brother and the two daughters were present at the funeral. Brother Aylsworth was a successful student from the beginning of his student life in the common school, and he began to teach at the early age of 15. He entered Chicago University when 17 years of age and was graduated in a little over three years, taking the four years' course in that time. He studied medicine for a while in connection with his work as a teacher, after his graduation from the university; but being called by the brethren into evangelistic and pastoral work, he abandoned his medical course. He was so well acquainted with the theory and practice of medicine that, during the closing days of his life a doctor who attended him said he knew more about medicine than very many of the doctors. He was eminently successful in ministerial work, and was the main human factor in establishing the church in Angola, Ind., and afterward the church at Fort Wayne, in the same state. It was owing to the hard work at the latter place, done during a time of great financial stringency, that he lost his health, and he came to New York hoping to recover. He labored as strength would permit, first in Syracuse, and afterward in Auburn, where in 1881 he was completely prostrated, and was compelled to give up all labor. His intellectual vitality and force were greatly impaired by the disease which made him a physical wreck, but after a few years from the beginning of his collapse he began again to read and write, though physically comparatively helpless. The writer of this sketch was summoned by telegraph from our state convention in New York City to preach his funeral. I have been intimately acquainted with Brother Aylsworth and his family for many years, and not only gladly officiated at the funeral service, but strove to say such words of appreciation as are fittingly suggested by the text chosen from 2 Sam. 3:38: "And the King said unto his servants, Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" It is no disparagement to the excellent and gifted ministers of our great plea for a return to Apostolic Christianity, to say that this highly gifted brother was a peer of the most richly endowed among them. The conditions of the last thirty years of his life, during most of which he was unable to walk, were not conducive to intellectual efforts. Burdened as he was, with physical prostration and the cares of a family, few would expect him to do anything in any line of activity. As he had been compelled to leave the ministry for which he was so thoroughly equipped by his native and acquired gifts, his income for support cut off, none but a brave soul could have undertaken what he did, and none but a princely Christian nobleman could have accomplished so much. In such a state he entered the arena of religious discussion to make clear questions of supreme moment in the development of the church along lines of progress that cannot safely be ignored. I am sure that no one has read his contributions in our periodical literature without profit, nor without being impressed with his striking originality, and his remarkable clearness of intellectual and spiritual vision. It may be that out of the incomprehensible providence which laid him upon his bed for so many years, the Lord enlarged and intensified the spiritual forces that dictated his articles for the press, and the two books he produced and left to enrich our libraries. The first of these, "Frequency of the Lord's Supper," though not an elaborate or pretentious contribution to the subject discussed, is worthy of a place in all our libraries. Like everything he wrote, it brings into deserved prominence the subject under discussion, and makes clear the importance of this neglected ordinance to our church life, and especially shows the intellectual and cultivated mind that originated the line of argument. The second book that Brother Aylsworth produced and left to us is one of the classical marvels of our literature. It is entitled, "Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism."

The subject of baptism had been for more than a century a hackneyed subject of debate in pulpit and press, with the attention mainly fixed on the outward form and the proper subjects, with slight attention to the holy names connected with it and the philosophical connection of the outward form with the inner and spiritual life. Brother Aylsworth took this hackneyed and much misused ordinance from the commonplace environment with which theologians had obscured it, and by reason, analogy and scripture, with masterful logic and clearness, made its connection with the remission of sins and the beginning of the spiritual life so apparent, that unprejudiced and intelligent readers of the book can see the ordinance in a new light. Now that the author is dead, let us emphasize the importance of this classical production of a gifted and consecrated intellect to all the preachers among us, and to preachers of other religious bodies. It should not be neglected nor be permitted to become obsolete for want of purchasers and readers.

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." A. B. CHAMBERLAIN.

Clarence Mitchell's Good Work.

Clarence Mitchell, Lima, Ohio, who will continue in evangelistic work, is filling in his vacation by holding "fellowship" meetings with former pastorates in the third district of Ohio. He was secretary of this district for three years while pastor of the Lima congregation. While minister at Lima the congregation purchased a lot and built a fine brick church, which was dedicated by Z. T. Sweeney. Over four hundred members were added; and in one meeting held by Brother Mitchell with home forces, two hundred and eight people were added. He was pastor at Wellsville, N. Y., where two hundred and forty persons were added, including Hallsport. He was pastor-evangelist at Mannington, W, Va., where he effected a permanent organization, purchased a lot and built, as President Cramblet, of Bethany College, said, "perhaps the second best building in the state among the disciples of Christ." At this place Brother Mitchell was on the ground only during the summer vacation. At Grover Hill, Ohio, he held nine meetings. A new church has since been built there, as at other places, following his revival meetings. Two new buildings are now being constructed at Jackson Center, Ohio, and New Berlin, Ohio, as the result of meetings held in 1907.

Brother Mitchell is a member of the South Side Church at Lima, his former pastorate. H. W. PEARS, Elder.

Vacation in the Ozarks.

During July I spent a strenuous but a most happy vacation in Missouri, fishing every day, preaching every night and visiting the kin at meal time. Each of these items was enough to engage one strenuously. My father was one of fifteen, my mother one of thirteen, there are ten of us children, and my oldest brother has set the mark with ten children of his own. No racial suicide here! No half day task to visit all the kin!

Should I tell about the fishing? All varieties and sizes, numbering hundreds, from the little sunfish to the twenty-three pound yellow cat. Affidavits furnished on application. We fished in Pomme de Terre and in Lindley.

Sweetest of all, we found a bee tree in the woods, and took 201 pounds of honey. Sitting one day on the bank of Lindley, where I first administered Christian baptism (fifteen were baptized at that first service, fifty-three during my first meeting), my reverie soon fell into accompaniment with the music of working bees, and looking, I discovered that the great oak under which I was sitting was a bee tree. I soon made a bargain with the owner of the land to cut the tree, and give him the bees and keep the honey for myself. No affidavit here is needed—just come and take dinner with me and have some honey. A Scandinavian brother living near said that after twenty years I was just getting the pay for my first meeting. He remembered that the brethren were not as thoughtful as the bees. But I have always been more than well paid for all my work, and now that I found honey for my beginning, it will not be hard to "keep sweet."

I killed a rattlesnake and saw another get away. Kept the rattles for confirmation. So I am safe here. But "the biggest one got away." That is like the fish song, is it not?

I made a Fourth of July address to a great crowd at Buffalo. Also another patriotic address to a greater crowd at "The Old Settlers' Picnic," at Lewisburg. I preached once at Buffalo, eight times at Lindley—the old home church, and where my father lies at rest—also preached eight times at Polk church, where we baptized twelve. May they be twelve good apostles. One was Eugene Willis, nephew of S. T. Willis, of New York City. This made a bright and happy crown to a most delightful and recreative vacation.

Our work at Clifton starts with a meeting with Lockhart and Wilkinson, September 1. We have 240 souls on our prayer list, and doubtless many others will come into view as the meeting makes progress. Our Bible school is now in the midst of an August rally, getting ready for the meeting. We are happy. An early start for our fall harvest is a good thing. Pray for us.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Western Canada.

J. A. L. Romig, our Western evangelist, is engaged in a union meeting with Baptists and Disciples at Revelstroke, B. C. He is assisted in his work by the Cane sisters of Milestone, Sask. ——A. Theo. Waters, of Regina, Sask., delivered an illustrated lecture on mission work at Milestone August 15. Brother Waters is preparing to take up mission work in South Africa.——The membership of the church at Milestone has been doubled the past year, all missionary apportionments met in full and one young man set apart to the work of the ministry. This is the only organized church of our faith in the province and the work accomplished here shows what we might do in other places if we only had the men and the means. A. R. Adams.

And So We Went Toward Rome.

Almost two thousand years ago St. Paul said, "I must see Rome," and later he writes, "We came to Rome."

St. Paul's was a missionary journey full of hardships destined to end in imprisonment and death.

Almost two thousand years afterward one thousand Christians residing in America said with one accord, "We must see Rome." Ours was a missionary journey. The good ship Neckar resounded continually with prayer and sacred song. Our journey was a triumph from beginning to end. We took every opportunity to visit mission stations along the way. So we called at Ponta Delgada in the Azores, Gibraltar, Algiers and Naples.

At Naples many of us visited ancient Puteoli, for it was here St. Paul landed, found brethren and tarried seven days. Puteoli is the filthiest city I have ever seen. The Arab quarter in Algiers does not compare with it. We found no brethren there when we landed. They certainly need a Paul to preach to them. In spite of the uninviting conditions at the landing we read the twenty-eighth chapter of Acts which gives the meagre account of Paul's experience at Puteoli. How we wished for a journal of his seven days in the old city. The railroad parallels the Appian way more or less from Naples to Rome. We made the trip by daylight and entered Rome as the evening shadows were falling.

Rome is bewildering in points of interest. We looked up with especial interest points associated with Bible history. We journeyed down the Appian way and with our feet upon the original pavement, our faces turned toward Rome, we sang "Onward Christian Soldiers." Not far from the historic way is the entrance to the catacombs of San Calixto. We entered the celebrated underground, gruesome, endless labyrinth of tombs and beheld on every hand evidences of ancient Christian occupation. We viewed with awe the bones of the nameless dead and filed into their venerated cavern chapels with becoming reverence, and emerged from their taper-lighted darkness singing Alexander's "Glory Song."

A small party of us visited the celebrated Mamertine prison where St. Paul was confined and where he wrote several of his letters. The prison is well preserved and could easily serve its ancient purpose, if Jesus had not set the world forever free.

Perhaps the climax of our trip was the session of the world's Sunday-school convention which was held in the Coliseum. History records no similar meeting in Rome. One thousand Christians representing 29,000,000 of adherents to the great world's Sunday-school movement; preachers, laymen, missionaries and religious workers from every land under heaven helped to make the old walls of historic structure resound with prayer and song in Jesus' name. Every foot of the pavement on which we stood had been stained with the blood of thousands of martyrs and their blood seemed to cry out from the ground as we proclaimed a triumph for Jesus Christ. No intimation of threat from Caesar now, his ashes have been scattered long ago and his palace is a hopeless ruin; the roar of the lion was not heard even in the distance, the gladiator was no more and the Roman soldier was present only in the capacity of a spectator.

We came from that meeting which is destined to be historic, with the missionary fires kindled and burning; we went down from Rome with enlightened eyes and a determination to live lives of more earnestness and consecration in His service. H. Randel Lookabill.

Churches in the Land of Early Gardens —South Texas.

State Evangelist Boggess and Singer Fred Carter have been exalting the Simple Plea of "Christians only" in South Texas, at Beeville, Mathis and Corpus Christi. Until recently Beeville had the southernmost church in Texas that was regularly organized and had regular preaching. W. J. Battenfield, recently of Illinois, is pastor there, and was assisted in a two weeks' meeting that just closed with 18 additions—12 of them by baptism, one from another body.

The church at Mathis, twenty-five miles south of Beeville, was reorganized and strengthened in a two weeks' meeting. A Bible school was organized with 52 enrolled. Enough money was subscribed to move the church building from Lagarto. It is a building, the lumber in which cost over $2,000, when building material was reasonable. It will be ready for dedication August 25.

Corpus Christi, a place on the bay, with 8,000 inhabitants, is rapidly growing into a city, and with deep waterway in prospect and rich early garden country, to back up and stimulate a rapid growth, was next besieged in a month's meeting. A church was established and fully organized with 53 substantial members, composed of new converts, members from several denominations and scattered Disciples. A Bible school was organized with 50 enrolled the first Sunday. Not least in significance for permanency, at Mathis and Corpus Christi and for planting other New Testament Churches in South Texas, is the locating of Charles H. Caton from Missouri as pastor. Brother Caton is an able preacher, with a large experience, and seems to be just the man for a growing health resort like Corpus Christi. For a long while Corpus Christi has needed an established New Testament church. With a substantial line-up such as is there, a bright future is in prospect. I have not had part in the establishment of a church in Texas with more splendid promise than Corpus Christi Christian Church. A most commendable feature of the work of the Texas state board and workers of late has been their effort to give permanency to every point besieged and follow meetings with regular work and preaching. Of the nine meetings held by me in South Texas since the first of the year all have had a pastor present, or located, to follow up the meeting and to nurture the work to greater permanency.

Siege will be opened in a winter campaign in other centers of influence in South Texas, for establishing and giving permanency to New Testament churches, but for several months intervening interests will be centered in other sections of the state. W. A. Boggess,

State Evangelist of Texas.

A Letter from England.

I had the pleasure of supplying for Mark Wayne Williams at the West London Tabernacle the first couple of Sundays, Brother Williams with his family visiting relatives in America. This scholarly, consecrated man of God has done a splendid work at this great tabernacle and is justly held in high esteem by the membership.

The West London Tabernacle was erected in 1865 by Mr. Henry Varley and his father-in-law, Mr. Pickworth, became responsible for the cost. The property cost $40,000. Dr. W. T. Moore succeeded Mr. Varley in 1882 and was pastor of the church nearly eleven years. It was at the beginning of his ministry that the church became identified with the Disciples of Christ. Dr. Moore was succeeded in 1893 by George T. Walden, of Australia, who was followed in 1896 for a few months only by John A. Brooks, of Memphis, Tenn., in 1897 by W. A. Foster, of St. Louis, and from 1898 to 1903 by E. M. Todd, of Chester then, and now at Manchester, N. H. Then Mark Wayne Williams became the minister.

The metropolis is a perpetual revelation. The large hotels and boarding houses are well crowded with American globe trotters, some to see places of historic interest, others to see the international horse show at Olympia, and still others to see and participate in the Derby races. The writer attended service at Hornsey Tabernacle, where L. W. Morgan is minister, on the occasion of their Sunday-school anniversary and enjoyed the splendid meeting.

Our work at Southampton is progressing nicely. We have had 21 new members since May 5. There were seven last Sunday, six confessions at evening service. We have raised within the last few weeks sufficient money to clean, paint and repair the exterior of our church. Much of this is due to the great generosity of F. Misselbrook. Brother Misselbrook is one of God's noblemen. He is one of the leading merchants of the city and has made a moderate fortune and is unusually liberal to his church.

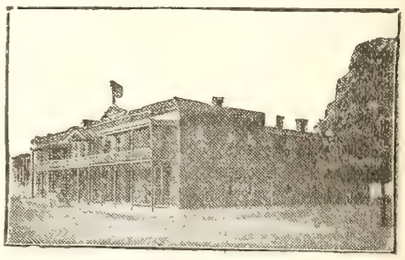
In and About Pittsburg, the Centennial City.



C. L. Thurgood has returned from his vacation of two weeks up in the mountains, greatly renewed in strength. He is better able to handle the problems that arise about Central, our real downtown church of Pittsburg.——Brother Brewster, of Observation Hill, is doing a fine work and his church shows its appreciation by giving him a month off that he may be stimulated for the autumn campaign.——Wallace Tharp, of the First Church, Allegheny, is at Bethany Beach this month. He preached there August 4 and delivered a lecture on August 6 which was a delight to all who heard him.——F. A. Bright, of Waynesburg, had rather a painful, but we hope not very serious accident, caused by the carelessness of some plumbers who had been repairing gas pipes and left a jet open. When Brother Bright went to light it the gas blazed into his face. Brother Bright is doing a good work at Waynesburg.——Brother Taylor is taking hold of the work at Elwood City in earnest and they have begun to appreciate his efforts. You will soon hear of another mission point having grown into a self-supporting church. He seems to be the right man in the right place.——We are looking with expectancy for Clayton Brooks to be enrolled as one of the ministers of Western Pennsylvania, and with the old First Church of Newcastle back of him we will not be disappointed but will see all the churches in that section in line for the Centennial.——Howard Cramblet is proving himself to be a master in the way he is directing the work in McKeesport. Not only the First Church, which is preparing to build a beautiful new house, but the East End McKeesport Church and the White Street Mission are moving forward at the same time. The work being done there is a marvel.—— R. H. Sawtelle has been giving the last six months to evangelizing in Indiana county with excellent results. He has accepted a call to continue as county evangelist for another year. This is another "the right man in the right place."—— C. H. Frick is encouraged with the outlook of things at Crafton. But the brethren are a little discouraged at Butler. But we have reason to believe you will soon hear of the Butler mission becoming one of the strong churches of Western Pennsylvania.——O. H. tian Worker," has been made the corresponding secretary of the Centennial committee and he is making a tour of the churches in Allegheny county and organizing them that they may be prepared to entertain the great convention in 1909. The financial part of the convention is the one that is especially interesting at the present time. The financial committee has planned a system of rewards to those who by their contributions will help us raise the money to meet the expenses of this convention. The system is an excellent one. They offer a copy of a special library edition of the souvenir program to every one raising and paying $1, an unframed copy of the pictures of the forefathers, Thomas and Alexander Campbell, B. W. Stone and Walter Scott, ornamented with the insignia adopted for the Centennial convention committee, and the colors of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society, or a copy of "The Church of Christ," in cloth, to any one paying $5; a framed copy of the above pictures with the photograph of the donor or a copy of "The Church of Christ," in leather, to any one giving $10.—— We are making extensive preparations and intend giving you the most hearty welcome to the Centennial you have ever had at any of our general conventions. We expect to entertain at least 50,000 Disciples and make it the greatest convention ever held in America or any other country. —J. D. Dabney.

New Pastor Holds Meeting.

The revival at the Central Christian Church of Greenville, Texas, conducted by the pastor, W. T. Hilton, closed August 4, having continued since July 7. It is believed that this series of revival services has been one of the most encouraging, inspiring and altogether beneficial meetings in the history of the Greenville church. Brother Hilton's sermons were full of Jesus Christ and him crucified. The excellent services of J. E. Lintt as director of music were enjoyed for three weeks until he was called to duties in another state. For the last week Theo. Fitz conducted the musical services. He delighted the Greenville people with chorus work and his solos, which were sermons in song. The sixty-one additions throughout the meeting, as well as eight on the final day, attest the sustained interest. Thirty-eight were baptized and twenty-three received by letter or statement. Members of seven new families uniting with the church brought present and probable future strength and eight families were united in Christ. The Christian Church and the city of Greenville are thankful for the blessings of this meeting, the influence of which is inestimable.—Hubert Harrison.

Overcoming Obstacles at Pittsfield, Ill.

Our tabernacle meeting two weeks old, and seldom does a meeting ever start with so many discouraging circumstances. The cyclone destroyed our church and tore up the roofing of our tabernacle so that the constant rains following went through in spite of several days of repairing. The first Sunday we were rained out completely and found refuge in the Congregational church which was kindly loaned to us till we could dry out and repair. Then every rain for some time found some places for leaks and at the same time kept the farming people away. Not till Sunday night, August 11, did we seem to have a real meeting on hand. Sixteen answered the invitation that night, 33 to date. We are hoping and praying for a better chance at the people with our message. Wilson and Lintt are leading. We secured $4,870.91 of insurance for our wrecked church. Will rebuild as soon as possible.

W. E. Spicer, minister.

Constructive Evangelizing.

The meeting at Howe, Texas, conducted by Evangelist S. J. Vance, of Carthage, Mo., with some assistance by myself, closed with 14 additions, 12 being baptisms. Taking all conditions into consideration this was a good meeting. Brother Vance is an able evangelist of the constructive style; he denounces sectarianism and division by announcing Christ and pleading for unity. A question box was one of the features which aided greatly in revealing the disturbed condition of denominationalism. The evangelist's disposition of the questions was very pleasing. The personal efforts of the Howe church was a great help. A sunbeam chorus, led by Miss Nina Vance, was inspiring. We feel that we are better prepared to do the Master's will by having been in this meeting. We are to begin a meeting at Ross Avenue Church September 1.—Leroy M. Anderson, Dallas, Texas.

Ie was never a mission of either of the old churches but by self-sacrifice and dint of energy has supported itself from the beginning. Every member seems to appreciate thoroughly the fact that the present pastor is pre-eminently the man for the place.—John A. Stevens.

Raleigh, Aug. 14.—The Sunday-school is doing well. I baptized two last Sunday evening at Skelton where the little church is faithfully holding forth the Word of Life.—A. M. Dial.

Ministerial Exchange.

W. Thompson, M. D., has open time for the last of September and the first weeks in October. He will be glad to hear from any church needing a good meeting. He prefers Nebraska. For references address President Lockhart, Christian University, Waco, Texas. Dr. Thompson may be addressed at the same town.

The church at Cuba, Ill., wants an evangelist for a meeting in the latter part of October. Address A. Immanuel Zeller, minister.

Wanted: An assistant minister. Address R. H. Crossfield, Owensboro, Ky.

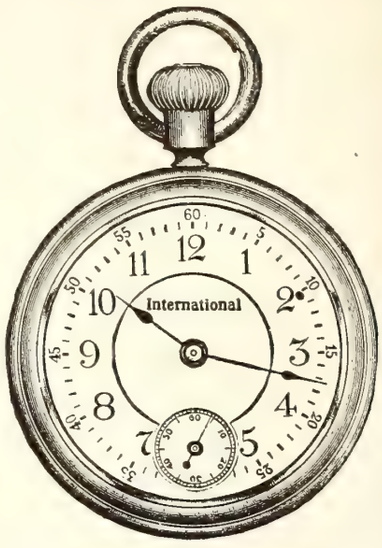
Wanted: A good man at once for a new church in a beautiful western city. A good church on one of the finest lots in town. Address Ada L. Forster, Fairmont, Minn.

S. B. Russell, Memphis, Hall county, Texas, says the churches in Kansas or Oklahoma in need of help in special meetings could be put in correspondence with a brother who is strong in developing the church along spiritual lines.

C. F. Ladd, evangelist, can be reached at his permanent address, Mendota, Ill. An article from Brother Ladd appeared in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.



I. N. Grisso strongly recommends Orlie Jordan, of Plainfield, Ind., to any church needing a male singer for revival services. He is a good soloist, can direct a chorus and is a young man of fine character.

Charles C. Smith, of Maroa, Ill., writes that any church wanting a good preacher and successful minister could be put in correspondence with such a man by addressing him.

Churches wanting a preacher of twelve years' experience may address J. L. Smith, at Sigourney, Ia.

A young minister who has had several years' training in college and university, and who is an able preacher, would like to hear from some wide-awake church that is able to pay at least $100 a month. Address E. D. L., Angola, Ind., box 459.

In preparing for this consecration meeting the indicated Scriptures should be read carefully. Christian Endeavorers are pledged to respond in answer to their names at consecration roll call with at least a verse of Scripture. A single verse of Scripture is fine for a response provided you know what the verse means. This can be ascertained only by refraining from acquiring the verse habit of Bible study. To study it by verses is to make it nearly always impossible to know the meaning of the verse.

This is true of the verses suggested for this lesson. Whoever selected them for general use evidently had the verse habit of reading and studying the Bible.

The Bible must be studied in a large way as we study other writings, to know the larger meeting and the large construction. This is true of all Scriptures, especially true of the prophet Isaiah from whose writings the immediate lesson topic is taken. For the purpose of this column the first eighteen verses of Isaiah thirty are taken.

The kingdom of Judah with Jerusalem as its capital, lay between two great kingdoms, rich and powerful at the time, Assyria and Egypt. Assyria was moving forward in a great world conquest and Jerusalem was filled with dread concern at the impending threat. What should Judah do? This was a political question which occupied the mind of court and people. What can Judah do? Great discussions were evidently being carried on. Some were saying Judah can, others saying Judah can't. One party believed Judah could withstand invasion and siege and assault by trusting in Jehovah. Others—and they had strong friends at court—believed that Judah could not thus withstand the invader, but that help must be had in the armies of Egypt with its horses and chariots. Indeed, the court party had prevailed so far as to have sent messengers to Egypt to meet ambassadors. They had their conference at Zoan, and also at Hanes? (verse 4). The representatives of Judah had not gone to this conference empty-handed, but had carried rich treasures upon asses and camels (verse 6).

The conference was of little value, as Isaiah foretold. Egypt was a boaster who sat still. The return of the embassy to Jerusalem must have stirred anew the discussion. Can Judah resist alone? One party saying we can, another we can't, it looked hopeless.

What grounds had the one party for saying that little Judah and Jerusalem could alone resist Assyria? If they would accept the rejected counsel of Jehovah,—"in returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

There were those who believed that word of Jehovah. Many doubted it, and would feel stronger with the help of Egypt.

There are times in our own lives when we are torn by the question, Can I? and we say, I can, and then we say, I can't. Where shall we find strength to do, to answer confidently, I can?

In faith in the same God who had promised to keep Jerusalem if its people would believe in him. It is to-day, as then, the same old question of faith or no faith in the word of the living God.

Jesus said "all things are possible to him that believeth." In relation to our life in Christ, to Christian duty and security, the words are true to-day. We surely need a revival of faith in God and in the scriptures as his Word.

What a beautiful assurance, "in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

May we consecrate ourselves to the diligent study of his Word, that in times of danger and doubt we may have the strength of the quiet confidence of faith.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

Discharging a Duty to God and the People.

Topic August 28, 1 Chron. 29:1-5; 2 Chron. 2:1-3.

The sense of duty is, after all, a great thing in every truly devoted life. The word duty has a ring in it that spurs the spirit of great minds. There is something splendid in the call of duty to a great service or sacrifice. The ringing words of Nelson to the sturdy seamen, just before the battle of Trafalgar—"England expects every man to do his duty"—has been an inspiration to multitudes of Englishmen in the stress of the hard places, in times of peace as in times of war.

We have the "Call of the Wild" and the "Call of the Sea" in literature. And there is something invigorating in these appeals to the primitive instincts, half brutal though they be. Perhaps there is something in what we call duty that is selfish and primitive; but while we are in the world we are not likely to get clear above and beyond the things of instinct. For the most part, however, this thing called duty grows out of that principle which Henry Drummond calls the great civilizer and humanizer of the race—the care of others. The call of duty is not very strong in the selfish man or woman. The indolent and trifling are simply selfish. The sense of duty, the finer sentiment of love, the mighty impulse of faith, the uplift of a great hope are wanting in their lives. They are the creatures of to-day. Paupers or princes, their doctrine is "eat, drink and be merry," with little or no thought of dying, less of serious living. To do our simple or our sublime duty without dawdling comes near being the divine thing for most of us. If to this sense of duty and devotion be added the inspiration of unselfish love, of faith unfeigned, of hope unfailing, life takes on its noblest outlook and uplook. Then it is we become co-workers with God. And whether we prepare the material or build the house of the Lord our works abide.

This story of the preparation of the material for the house of God by David the king is inspiring. The tender thought of David's great heart, for Solomon, his son and successor, and his truly splendid and altogether kingly conduct, his perfect simplicity, his fine humility, all mark him as a man worthy of high honors and generous remembrance by the race. His motives were the purest that can move the minds of men. "The work is great; for the palace is not for man but for the Lord God." In this is shown the sentiment that moved the heart and hand of the king. We may well be moved by such lofty impulses of reverence and generosity, of genuinely magnanimous manhood. David, the king, never appeared in better light than in the devotion with which he began and carried on this work. He could say, without boasting, "I have prepared with all my might for the house of God." A noble sense of duty called him to do this thing. To do with our might what our hands find to do is kingly. Thus David wrought. Thus Paul labored. Thus the Christ toiled. Thus the ones whom the world delights to call great have toiled and triumphed.

"Moreover also, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own treasure of gold and silver given unto the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house, three thousand talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents of refined silver, to overlay the walls of the house." It was love, warm, ardent affection for the things of God's house, for its service, for the worship of the sanctuary, that inspired David's songs and his unselfish service. Faults he had, serious and unseemly. He was a confessed murderer. He was a man of war and had shed blood. Therefore he could not build the house of the Lord. But with all his faults, he was a man after God's own heart, in humility, sincerity, simplicity, lofty sense of duty, genuine affection for the things of God. So he prepared the house of his God which his son Solomon was to build. And he died in a good old age, full of days, riches and honor. The house for which he prepared and which Solomon builded in more than royal magnificence has perished, but David lives in his songs immortal!

The Two Reports of the Spies.

Memory verses, 30, 31.

Golden Text.—The Lord is with us; fear them not.—Num. 14:9.

In about ten months of wandering in the wilderness the children of Israel came from Sinai to Kadesh, on the southern border of Canaan. Some details of the journey are given in Num. 11 and 12. The people wearied of manna and sighed for the meat and fresh vegetables of Egypt. Being free from the burden of their bondage and brick-making, they remembered the advantages which they had enjoyed in Egypt, as the pleasant features of any disagreeable experience are alwys remembered after the unpleasant features are forgotten. It is human nature to long for the good old times. Even the good old times of their Egyptian bondage seemed attractive to those who forgot to compare their present freedom with their past slavery, and remembered only to compare their past plenty with their present monotonous diet of manna.

The seventy elders were appointed to share with Moses in the responsibility of leadership and to bear with him the burden of the people's inevitable complaints. Two of them, prophesying in the camp, aroused the loyal Joshua to jealousy in behalf of Moses, but Moses expressed the unselfish wish that all the people might be prophets. He desired no monopoly of the spirit of Jehovah.

The quails were sent, and along with them a plague which carried off many of the people in punishment for their grumbling about the manna.

Aaron and Miriam became jealous of the pre-eminence of their brother, Moses, and "spoke against him," perhaps going so far as to plan a revolt. The infliction of leprosy upon Miriam brought them to their senses. It was in connection with this incident that we find the famous declaration of the meekness of Moses. Num. 12:3. (Did Moses write it?)

The sending of the spies was a precaution which any wise leader would take on entering a strange country. Jehovah's leadership with the pillars of cloud and fire did not render care and wisdom unnecessary. God's help never takes the place of the existence of man's powers. It supplements but does not supplant them.

There were two classes of facts which the spies were instructed to observe: First, the land; second, the people. First, whether it was a desirable country; second, whether it would be easy or hard to take. When they came back, bearing the grapes of Eshcol, they all agreed that it was a rich and fruitful land and much to be desired. But ten of the spies said that the inhabitants were so powerful that Israel could not hope to conquer it. Only two believed that, with God's help, they could occupy it.

The difference between the two groups of spies was not in their estimate of the land or of the Canaanites, but in their estimate of God and their faith in him. It was not a question of agricultural or military judgment. They were agreed about the land and they all knew that the Canaanites had the natural advantage. In fact, the Canaanites had reached a more advanced stage of civilization than the Hebrews. They were dwellers in walled cities while the Israelites were still dwellers in tents. But Caleb and Joshua saw that the issue was not to be decided by a comparison of the visible forces of Israel and her enemies. The invisible factor was really the dominant one—namely, God.

Caleb and Joshua showed courage. The rest were cowards. To have one's eyes open to see God as a factor in the fight, and on our side—as Elisha's servant at Dothan saw the horsemen and chariots of Jehovah round about them—is to have the best possible basis for a reasonable courage. The lack of it made cowards of the ten and doomed the nation to a generation of weary wandering in the wilderness.

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Here is a letter which came in too late to be printed in the leaflet illustrating the quick fruitfulness of Bible schools in growing into churches; but this letter is so much to the point it is passed along in this column that our readers may take the hint and go and do likewise. If they could do it you can:

We organized a Sunday-school here in 1889 and the following year organized a church of about 24 members; purchased a lot and began the construction of a church building which was finished in 1891 at the cost of $13,200. We then established a mission in a village nearby, and built a house there where a school is being conducted as well as church services. Later we built a second mission church, and also a parsonage, and have a total membership of about 600 in all. We have purchased two lots of land, one on either side of our main church lot, and are now finishing a new church building at a cost of $24,000, and $7,000 for the lots, making $31,000 for present extensions. Our present additions consist principally in extending our old auditorium and erecting an entirely new and up-to-date Sunday-school room, the best one in this section of the state.

Our real estate all told is well worth $60,000. We will rededicate our church this spring. We have over 400 pupils on our Sunday-school roll and are fixed to accommodate 700 or a roll of 1,000. We have a large finished basement with dining-room that will accommodate 200 at tables.

M. M. Cochran.

Since this letter was written the church, I believe, has been dedicated.

Here is still another letter relating to the extension of the cause in the capital of the great state of Nebraska. These letters lose nothing of their point by not being published for several months after they were written:

J. H. Hardin: Your letter of February came to me during my absence from the city. The one instance which I recall hurriedly is of a Sunday-school organized early in the 90's in Lincoln, Neb., on the east side of the city.

This school grew within one year's time into a strong, self-supporting church, whose building has been the second time enlarged to accommodate the people, and whose work in Lincoln is to this day of the very best. The church now has between 300 and 400 members, and is an active and aggressive force in the city's life. Trusting that this may in some measure inspire others and wishing you every success in the world's greatest field of Christian activity.

Charles B. Newnan.

Field Work.—R. B. Havener held meetings during July at Crocker and Belle. At the latter place he raised $346 to complete payment for the building. He had 19 additions at the former place and 8 at the latter, and at Crocker organized a teacher-training class of 21 members with Otis Wright as leader. He is now at Hopewell in Morgan county. W. S. St. Clair is spending all the time he can spare in the field holding institutes, attending county meetings and protracted. Address R. B. Havener at Windsor and W. S. St. Clair, Columbia, and keep them busy. My own engagements now extend beyond the middle of the autumn with calls for work coming all the time. Write me and I'll do my best.

Great Gains for Foreign Missions.

The receipts for foreign missions for the first fourteen days of August amount to $6,995.85, a gain of $2,869.31.

The total receipts to date amount to $230,377, a gain of $24,052. Let it be noted that a gain of nearly $7,222 in the next six weeks insures a $300,000 mark. We must not fail when we are so near victory.

The churches, as churches, have given $100,947, a gain of $13,229. The Sunday-schools have given $71,620, a gain of $10,534. These are the greatest gains in the regular receipts in the history of the foreign society.

ROMANCE ISLAND. By Zona Gale. With illustrations by Hermann C. Wall. The Bobbs Merrill Company, Indianapolis. Price $1.50.

This is quite a noteworthy piece of fiction. The story's interest is well maintained and the start is with a mystery. An enchanted island, some inquisitive Americans and we can anticipate a striking romance, with some bright newspaper men and a charming heroine on the track of the prince from the land of mystery. With the gift of imagination the author is well endowed.

UNDER PONTIUS PILATE. By William Schuyler. Funk & Wagnalls, New York. Price $1.50.

This is supposed to represent a part of a correspondence between two Romans, one in Judea and the other at Athens in the years 28 and 29 A. D. In a kind of story form we get here one picture of the Christ and his times. The early part of the book shows us the procurator, the Magdalene, the Master, the daughter of Herodias, etc., while in part two we have a nearer view of the Master. Mary Magdalene is represented as the heroine of the book and one of the Romans' is in love with her. To us the story lacks in interest and is unconvincing.

LADY BALTIMORE. By Owen Wister. The Macmillan Company, New York. Price $1.50.

This is a delightful book. Not as breezy as the "Virginian," it far surpasses that book as a piece of literary art. It is perfumed with the delicate fragrance of a heroine rather than the force of a Western hero. It is inspired by true Americanism and its charm holds the reader from the first chapter to the last. There are quotable things in it, such as, "We've accomplished hospitals and the stock market—a pretty even set off between God and the devil." There are good hits at up-to-date foolishness. There is a stand for ideals. It is a novel to be read.

WHITE FIRE. By John Oxenham. American Tract Society. Price $1.25.

This story of a great enthusiasm, which brought two glowing souls together in somewhat conventional fashion and carried them across to the islands of the Pacific, is a romance of pioneer mission life in the south seas. One sees very vividly some of the trials of the intrepid soldier of the Cross. No doubt the story is founded on fact. Among the incidents presented is a vivid account of the modern slave traders who still occasionally harass the natives of these far distant islands.

GRAY MIST. By the author of "The Martyrdom of an Empress." Harpers. Price $1.50 net.

A story of Breton life, the plot following the fortunes of a little waif brought up in a fisherman's cottage in ignorance of his parentage. This, when discovered later, involves him in strange and dire confusion. The matter of fact reader will find it hard to get interested, but he who can appreciate a background of soaring cliff and tempestuous sea, of primitive old world usage and hitherto unwritten folk lore, will find plenty of it in this novel. It is illustrated in color from paintings by the author.

THE PORTREVE. By Eden Phillpotts. The Macmillan Company, New York. Price $1.50.

This might easily be characterized as one of the strongest pieces of fiction of the year. It is a great advance over much that Mr. Phillpotts has written. While we say this we would class it among the literature that we have no business to circulate. There is a great deal of religion in the book but our objection is not to the discussions between those who are sincere believers and those who have doubts, but to certain situations and conversations or hints that we must put among the things to be avoided. Can not Mr. Phillpotts get enough sweet breeze from the moors of old Devon to keep out from his stories the miasma that comes from bogs and sloughs of filthiness?

THE LONG ROAD. By John Oxenham. The Macmillan Company, New York. Price $1.50.

This is a fine story and a book to be read. It is a picture of life unfamiliar to most of us, for the scene is in the far-off provinces of Russia. It is doubtless a true picture of much that has happened under the system which sends men to Siberia for real and fancied political crimes. Nothing can be imagined more horrible than the affliction, so strikingly presented in this book, that can be meted out to one under the ban of a Russian governor. But there is nothing horrible in the way this is presented by the author of this striking story. His methods are those of the literary artist. His theme is one that entrances, while it makes our hearts quiver. The book has many vivid descriptions of the far-off land and its people. It opens our minds and it opens our hearts.

THE BISHOP OF COTTONWOOD. By John Trotwood Moore. The John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia. Price $1.50.

This is one of the most "alive" stories of the year. It is full of movement, intense in its interest, breathing in every chapter the passions of the South and withal didactic. Melo-dramatic it is, no doubt, but good moral preaching on the whole. There is some excellent character drawing. The old bishop has a very striking way of expressing his opinions about certain denominational relationships. Here, for instance, is what he has to say about some folks who are called Campbellites in some places: "From them (the Baptists) to the Cam'elites was easy, for I seed they was webfooted, too. They only diff'rence betwix' them an' the Baptis' is that they are willin' to jine in with any other rigiment, provided allers that you let them 'pint the sapers an' miners an' blaze out the way. Good fellers, tho', an' learned me lots. They beats the worl' for standin' up for each other an' votin' allers for fust place. If there's a promotion in camp they want it; 'n' when they ain't out a-drillin' their companies they're sho' to be in camp 'sputin' with other rigiments as to how to do it. Good, hones' fighters, tho, and tort me how to use my side arms in a tight place. Scaterin' in some localities, but like the Baptises, whenever you find a mill-dam there'll be their camp an' plenty o' corn."

Chapter IX. A Modern Conference.

"Thought is deeper than all speech,—
Feeling deeper than all thought.
Soul to soul can never teach.
What unto itself is taught."

God only knows how blessed he could make us if we would but let him.

—Alex McLaren.

The evening was such as would tempt people forth from their homes, if there had been no particular interest in other things; but there was a deep interest in the president's healing and a curiosity to know what would be said and done at that meeting, so the opera house was quite as full as in the morning.

Some had come out of curiosity. Some had heard of the wonderful healing, and themselves having maladies, which they had long hoped to find a similar deliverance from, had come despite the fact that they had not been to church for many months before, supposing that they were not able to endure the fatigue. Then there was a class, known as "come-outers," who scarcely ever entered any church, other than some obscure meeting or special effort of their own fellowship; of these there was a goodly sprinkling. But the body of the congregation was made up of the membership of the various churches in the city, and yet there were many who made no profession of Christianity, nor scarcely ever darkened a church door.

Mr. Brown walked in with some of the former vivacity and spring to his step that was his before he was hurt; yet he showed signs of his great sickness and it had told upon his frame and features to such an extent that a single day of health had not sufficed to eradicate its effects. He knelt in silence behind the scenes before appearing upon the rostrum. The congregation had been singing for some moments, and when he came out they arose at the motion of his hand and bowed in silence, while he invoked a blessing upon the meeting.

Opening the Bible, he read:

Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name;
Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits:
Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases;
Who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies;
Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.

"This corresponds to the song of my soul to-night," he said, "for I am passing through the most blissful experience I have ever had, and I can just call on all that is within me to bless the holy name of our God; for he has wrought marvelous things for me this day and crowned me with loving kindness and tender mercies. Let us make this a praise meeting for past, present and expected blessings.

"I will say that my healing seems to be complete, and I am gaining strength and flesh every hour. Praise the name of our God and Father, for this manifestation of his power and goodness. I can see how he makes all things to work together for good to those who love him, if they heed the call according to his purpose and will. Let us hear from you, brethren, if you have anything to praise him for. I know that you must have, if you will only stop and think."

Judge Taylor arose and shouted from one of the galleries: "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me bless his holy name!" and proceeded to say: "This day has yielded more real gladness to my heart than all other days of my life, and I feel that my youth has been renewed like the eagle's. I went home from this morning's service and asked God to give me just ten years more of life to serve him in, and I know that he has heard my request for this old back that was so lame and stiff, has been limbered to such an extent that I feel I could almost turn a handspring as I used to do in younger days. My head has cleared out, and I do feel young again. Why, I came off without my cane, and did not realize it until I went to hang my hat in the rack and put the cane in its accustomed place beneath it. I saw my daughter smiling, and asked her if she had taken it, and she said that I had left it at home, and sure enough, I had not felt the need of it and have walked this whole distance and climbed these stairs without knowing that I was without a cane.

"O my brethren, these are glorious days to be living in. I do want to stay a while and help on the coming Kingdom which I see at hand, nay, among us now, into which we may be adopted and redeemed, body, soul and spirit. I see that I have crowded out several who were rising just as I got up, so I will give way to them, and yet I have something to tell you which is good enough to keep."

"I have waited and longed to see this day, these eighty years," said the aged lady who prayed so effectually in the morning, "and now I can say, 'Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word.'"

As she sat down, the audience burst forth with:

How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word.

A gentleman, part way down the main floor, arose and stood during the last verse, with the evident purpose of speaking when he should get the opportunity. He was well dressed and bore the appearance of a man in a large business concern of some sort; and there sat by his side a lady of refined appearance, his wife. As the song drew to a close, he began with an accent that at once betokened that he was a Scotchman, not long away from his native soil, and yet his English was perfect indication that he was well educated. He began:

"Fathers and brethren in Christ, I left my home land to seek and obtain a better knowledge of God and his will in the earth to-day. I am what is called well-to-do in earthly goods, but these do not satisfy the inner cravings of the heart, nor do they answer a questioning brain. I have had leisure and have delved some into literary and philosophical research, and it has been of that nature that has befogged my mind as to the realities of spiritual things and the certainty of the word of God. My mother taught me the Psalms of David and fed me on Proverbs and oatmeal broth from my wee boyhood; and yet I confess to you that I have been shaken in faith by the higher critics of Germany and of this country, and they are to be found in the home land. I do not deny, and there are multitudes like myself, who are certain of nothing, because of this teaching.

"Now, brethren, my wife's sister is a trained nurse and stenographer, in some city in the middle West, and she has been writing us of a family with whom she is acquainted, and who have had a most remarkable healing of a son, who was hurt near unto death by some bad fellows who left him to freeze in a coal house at some college, east of there. We were journeying to see them, and passing through this place, we thought to keep the Lord's Day with you, and so we are here, and glad we are too; because we seem to have come upon just what we are seeking after. I never in all my life felt so much like blessing the Lord for what he has done for us as since we left the old country, and for what we have seen and heard to-day. He has redeemed our lives from destruction, in fact, several times on the trip. While in mid ocean we encountered a storm and the steamer parted her shaft and we were about to be swamped and to make our graves in the deep, when a godly man stood forth and prayed for deliverance, and upon my honor the sea grew calm almost in the time I am taking to tell it, and our ship rode out into the sunshine, as triumphantly as the fisherman's craft came to land when Jesus came walking upon the sea.

"And we were marvelously delivered just last night from the wreck of the train upon which we were traveling, had we not chosen to stop here for the Lord's Day, for that train went through a trestle just west of this place, our landlord tells us.

"O it is marvelous how God has redeemed our lives from destruction and crowned us with tender mercies. I can doubt no more. I see that the word of God is true and reliable in every line of its inspired pages. My dear wife wants to stay here for some days and send for the sister to meet us, and I think that we shall do so, since this seems to be a city of no mean proportions and opportunities, and we like the preaching we have heard very well. I am looking for an opportunity to establish some large factories, where I can use thousands of men and women in profitable and co-operative employment, preparing a kind of food for beasts of burden, which can be transported with small bulk in quantities sufficient to last contractors and those moving long distances from their base of supplies, and yet have ample provisions for the poor beasts.

"But I must not take the time now on this matter. I want to simply say that from this business we intend to derive the revenue for sending the gospel to the benighted people over seas and in the regions beyond. And I am so happy to have been led here to hear a full gospel and to see the power of it. I shall pursue my object with greater zeal, since having my faith confirmed as it has been to-day." So saying he sat down, and Doctor Reid arose from the other side of the room and asked the gentleman's name.

"MacDonald, Hugh MacDonald, from Dundee," was the reply.

"I want to tell the gentleman that he is in the very town in which the tragedy that he mentioned occurred. This is President Brown, and there are others here who had a part in that matter, and Mr. MacDonald, there have been several other as striking incidents as the one of which you speak, but the Lord has delivered us from them all, in his own marvelous way, for which I too bless his dear name to-night, as I never before knew how to do."

"I rejoice in the business scheme of which Brother MacDonald speaks," said President Brown, "for I can see in it an opening for the Lord's people here, and in the regions beyond as well. There are thousands of good honest men and women who are under obligations to violate their consciences, by laboring on the Lord's Day; or by crowding their fellow men from positions upon which their children are dependent for bread, or cutting their wages below a reasonable living. They must constantly add to, instead of bearing others' burdens, and in so doing they are forced to violate the law of Christ. I hail with delight any move in this direction, for it means emancipation to millions of toilers. Eventually co-operation must be the watchword of the poor and the masses, and especially Christian people, henceforth; for the world will love its own and will have its own in its employment, and the time is coming when men will not be able to stand up under its oppression, unless they have some one to stand by their side and see that they get their rights; such is doubtless the purpose of the numerous brotherhoods and fraternal organizations, but they are failing to meet the needs of distinctively Christian people. These captains of industry are of the Lord, to satisfy the hungry mouths with good things, to prepare for them a table in the presence of their enemies, hunger and want. O friends, I can see glorious possibilities in the ways God is opening up before us. What would hinder us to plant a colony in some of these fertile states, where these advantages could be had, and move out and possess that land, with the best that the world affords, to build up a community with. The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; why may not God's children claim their Father's bounty as well as his saving and healing presence. I am strongly of the opinion that these Utopian schemes which have failed in the past, have failed because they did not conform to the word and the will of God. They have either been over-managed by some domineering tyrant, or let run to ruin by no management and slack-handed indolence. So far as I have known, they have been founded upon some misinterpretation of the plain word, or upon principles entirely opposed to the teaching of the Bible. Might we not select wise and consecrated men to formulate a plan that would be entirely in harmony with God's revealed will? It seems to me, as I look at it now, that this is a very necessary thing to do, that an example might be put forth to the world in these days that might become a model upon which others could pattern, and thus spread the kingdom of righteousness through the earth. Clean cities, temperate people, healthy bodies, prosperity consecrated to the glory of God, and the spread of his word to the less fortunate, ought to bear its own reward, in a successful and long life upon the earth. Godliness is profitable, having the promise of the life that now is as well as that which is to come.

"By the way, I must inform the gentleman from Scotland that Mrs. Gordon and her son will be here this week, and it will be possible for them to meet and to get the story from her own lips. However, Doctor Reid is the man who knows as much as all of us about the case. Mrs. Gordon will keep house here while James and the rest of the family are in school, I am told. Shall we now engage in prayer for a season, that God's will may be fully revealed in all that he would have us do and know at this time and in years to come?"

The president kneeled down and invoked God's blessings upon what had been said and asked a blessing upon the remainder of the meeting. Then prayer after prayer arose, some in sobs of repentance, and others in triumphant praise. Then quiet seasons of meditation followed, when stillness reigned and souls were blessed with God's grace and pardoning love.

When the time came to close, an opportunity was given to those who wished to enquire the way of God and blessing, to assemble in the reception parlor behind the stage. As President Brown stepped down into the reception room, he saw about two hundred earnest faces awaiting him, among whom he recognized many of his former students from the college. A second closer look revealed to him that those who had spoken that evening, and other earnest Christians whom he had known for years, were there, too. A hush came over the audience as he stood in silent meditation before them. He felt his own inability to proceed, a weakness such as neither the physical nor the intellectual man seems able to meet at such times. He had not prepared a discourse for this occasion, and in fact it did not seem to be needed; yet something was expected, and he had not foreseen what that should be, when he asked them to remain. In fact, he did not expect to see as many—not more than a dozen, if any at all. But here was an opportunity such as he was glad to see, and he would not shrink from meeting it as best he could. After a few moments of silent meditation, he began to speak, almost mechanicallly at first, but the words came as from an almost unknown source and with amazing power as he proceeded.

"You are all here before God, each with a purpose known only to him and yourselves. I commend you to God and the word of his grace, which is able to build you up and give you an inheritance among all them that are sanctified. The Master has said that whosoever cometh unto him, shall in no wise be cast out. Now, if your purpose is to truly come to him, and I am persuaded that it is, you can have no fear of being cast out. And again he has said: that whosoever believeth in him shall never perish. I am sure that this applies to every one of you who have with true purpose of heart come into this room to enquire concerning these things." With many such assuring words he spoke, and closed with a proposition for all who truly repented of all known sin to stand, and each repeat after him, these words: "My loving and forgiving Heavenly Father, I have come into this thy presence to consecrate myself, body, soul and spirit, to do henceforth thy will and to live for thy glory. Forgive all my sins and cleanse me thoroughly from all iniquity. Thou hast said in thy word: that if we confess our sins, thou art faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. O God, I do confess before thee and in the presence of this congregation, my sins. Thou only knowest what they are and how great my guilt is. In Jesus' name, let all be washed away in his cleansing blood, and to thy great and holy name shall be the glory now and evermore. Amen."

All repeated this prayer after the president, clause by clause, and he assured them that they were to accept the fact of their salvation by obedient faith, since the word of God had promised it, and they were to take it as it read, just as they accepted the offer of any reliable person, whom they had dealings with in this life. He also reminded them that they had promised God in their prayer, that they would do his will, and that will was the written word. "Now," said he, "whatsoever he saith unto you, do it. Take the Word and read for yourselves, and go forth to obey in every particular this more sure word of prophecy, that has been revealed through Jesus Christ."

Here he had a large number of New Testaments, which a Bible colporteur had piled up on the rostrum for the occasion, distributed. "Now," said the president, "open to the last chapter of Mark, 16th verse, and read what the great Captain of our salvation says:

"Who has a right to refuse water that this sacred and important rite may be properly performed, that these may have the assurance of having fulfilled this great command of our Lord?"

"Is not this the thought which Peter had when he said that baptism was the answer of a good conscience toward God? Turn to 1 Peter 3:21, and read it. Now turn back to Acts 2:38, and see what the inspired Apostle said to those who asked what they should do under a severe stress of conscience. Go now rapidly to the 8th chapter and begin at the 26th verse. See how this devout man accepted the words of the preacher and the word without a question, and was ready to obey. Are you all ready to obey this command of the Gospel at your first opportunity?" With one voice, all answered, "We are." "Then meet me at the Natatorium tomorrow evening," said he, "and we shall be prepared to assist you to obey in a manner that shall admit of no question in the future."

"You have confessed Christ and obeyed from the heart the form of teaching which has been delivered unto you. Go now, trusting and believing." So saying, he began to sing: "I do believe," etc.

All joined in the song with grateful tears and joyful faces as they filed out into the street and separated in every direction, singing as they went.

"I am glad that the Gordons are coming to Eaton," said the doctor, as he and the president walked toward home, "for I believe that they will be a power for good in this work. Mrs. Gordon can doubtless be persuaded to assist in women's meetings, and her knowledge of divine power in the recovery of the sick is something remarkable."

"I shall want to hear her teachings at length myself," said the president, "for I feel like a primary pupil as yet, before this great subject." Thus saying, they each bade the other good-night and entered their homes.

Mrs. Brown was waiting somewhat anxiously for her husband, since she had so recently been attending him as a helpless invalid. He clasped her in his warm embrace and whispered an assuring word of love and praise, saying that he never felt better in his life. As they knelt in their chamber, with their sleeping children about them, their hearts were too full of thanksgiving for expression. She for a loving husband, restored to perfect health and strength, and he for a wide field of usefulness opening up before and about him, with strength to do the work again; and all the glory was alone due to God.

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Day in Mexico City.

We should have reached the City of Mexico at about half-past eight, but it was nearer three in the morning of March 29th. As we had long since gone to bed, the porter let us retain our berths at pleasure; at least to the pleasure of all the passengers except Morton. By seven all but he was stirring, and by eight all but he was ready to go, or had gone. Jebly and I and the porter finally persuaded him to dress so the berth could be made up, but after that he insisted on shaving. There was a crew of Mexicans waiting outside the car to dust and clean it, and they glared through the windows like dark spirits of rage while Morton coolly took one hair after another. He knew the Special laid over there all day, but I didn't, and was every moment expecting the engine to back up to us and carry us away. The porter was in a nervous fever. He came into the toilet room at least fifty times, as if he had forgotten something, and would mutter to himself and go away. He didn't know how big a fee Morton meant to give him, so he didn't rebel openly; and Morton, knowing how small a fee he had to bestow, kept perfectly calm. When he couldn't shave any more, I thought he might make inquiries about that curious kind of suspender he desires, but instead, he called for a drink. The porter, with fine irony, said, "Evaht'ing is closed down fah de day, boss;" so we got Jebly's tricycle away from some officials who had it in custody, and left the station, while the Mexicans, with rags and brushes and brooms and shouts of agitated eagerness, swarmed upon the train we had so reluctantly left.

In regard to the general appearance of Mexico, it is enough to say that to me it appeared astonishingly beautiful. Perhaps the effect is heightened by the journey through desolate wastes, barren mountains and squalid villages; but I think it one of the loveliest cities I ever saw. Every city like Damascus ought to be approached through a desert to be appreciated. In regard to the particular attractions of the capital, I take for granted the reader has as many books describing them as are in my library, so I spare him an account of the Cathedral, the president's palace, the Aztec relics, etc. We put in a good part of the morning trying to find an authority from whom we might expect our unused tickets to be redeemed. But it was Friday, and every office, every store, every bank, everything in short that should have been open, was closed. It was unlucky Friday for us, and Good Friday for the Mexicans. We had not even remembered that it was Friday; yet every one of those hundreds of thousands of citizens were aware of it; they knew next Sunday was Easter Sunday, and consequently the entire nation was on a holiday. Since the budding of this republic, there have been 400 revolutions; but all factions are as one man when it comes to doing nothing; they call doing nothing a Feast Day. After all, I count it particularly lucky that we reached the city on a Feast day, for it was our only day in the city, and we were enabled to see all the sorts of people there are, without stint.

Easter Sunday is, of course, a great occasion everywhere, but it is not so much to the Americans as to the Mexicans. The way we observe it in our churches, with our few poor lilies (made of paper) and our Easter sermon on the resurrection, and the extra religious glow of the ladies' bonnets, must seem indeed a feeble imitation of the Catholic real thing. The Mexicans stop doing anything two days before; and they mourn—as to their garments—and rejoice as to their behaviour, with perfect abandon. On Friday evening, cart-loads of hideous effigies are driven about to be purchased by the pious. They represent Judas Iscariot, and look as little like a human being as anything with two arms can be imagined. They are stuffed with tortilla, sweetcakes and candy, and contain also a goodly quantity of powder. They are strung upon ropes in the street—this is called "hanging Judas"—and the fuse is lighted that carries fire to the old fellow's inwards. He is blown up. The cakes are scattered everywhere, and the peons scuffle and crowd and snatch and gorge, and feel mighty pious afterwards. In the meantime the ladies are in mourning. Wherever you see a Spanish lady, or Mexican of high estate, she is wearing a black lace veil which, carefully arranged so as not to hide any of the face, falls over the shoulders and down the back in rich gloom. You see them by the thousands. They are walking to the cathedrals on their high-heeled shoes, or sauntering in the plazas, or sitting in the Alameda, or, likelier still, they are speeding by you in their automobiles. Surely no city boasts of so many automobiles. The carriages and horses are most distinguished, as befits the descendants of Castillians; but the automobiles are more numerous. They are such a matter of course, and so inevitable, that they hardly ever "toot," or perhaps we should say, "wind their horn." They come down the broad streets in droves and flocks. In order to have their spiritual fires rekindled by participating in the festivities of Good Friday, Mexicans—that is, the Indians—have come to the capital from I don't know how many hundreds of miles. There they are from the tiny villages of the desert, and from the holes in the mountains, some of them treading asphalt walks for the first time, and most of them filled with a never-ending interest in city sights and sounds. Sometimes you see a whole village community, with the exception of the pigs, in a stampede of terror out in the middle of the street; and half a dozen policemen take them in tow and persuade them to get upon the sidewalk. Those policemen are said to be the most efficient in the world. They will walk two miles with you to show you a place; there is nothing they will not do in time of need, except to try to get back to you something that has been stolen.

The Mexican government passed a law some years ago that thieves should, upon conviction, be imprisoned. Diaz vetoed it, saying, "Do you want half of my people confined behind iron bars?" I can't imagine how the government passed that law, or any other, without Diaz's knowing about it and approving. Maybe it never happened. But the fable, if it be one, is founded upon truth. The Mexicans take things as naturally as a duck takes to water. When the railroads were built they stole the ties until they were fastened so securely that the taking of them involved an amount of labor too distasteful for the instinct of confiscation to overcome. When our engine stopped at a tank apparently far beyond any human abode, some peons swarmed on the end of the observation car, and carried off one of the pretty camp-chairs. I was only grateful that they did not take the one I was sitting in. The porter, on being called, said quietly, "Dat de fo'th dey taken." He made no effort to regain it. Imagine "Gawge Pullman" had to pay for it. When you miss any property in Mexico City, go to the Thieves' Market. Maybe they will sell it back to you. Judging from the display there, the thieves are unlucky in stealing things that anybody besides the owner could care for. It is not a place for bargains, Morton declares. Perhaps he means suspenders.

To Morton, who has lived in Mexico about two years, the throngs on the pavements were so far from being a source of interest that he took them in dudgeon, because, being the exponent of the holiday, they reminded him that every business office was closed up. Unfortunately, he was acquainted with a good many railroad men, and that made him feel it his duty to hunt every one of them up, hoping thus to get our tickets redeemed. But none of them were in town. In beating back and forth between their locked doors, we saw a good deal of the business part of the city. The shops appear as retiring as the dwelling houses. There are no signboards overlapping one another, no ostentatious displays at shop windows. You might pass a dozen stores without knowing they were stores. There is just a plain front, with a small window in which nothing particular is to be seen. One form of industry, however, was very conspicuous. On the corner was a stall for the selling of flowers; and such flowers! You could smell that corner a block away. Its exquisite perfumes were only to be equalled by the gorgeousness of the blossoms. Many bought for holiday purposes at the cathedrals, I suppose, and when bunches of dewy violets and rich, creamy roses were carelessly dropped, no one thought of picking them up; and still three days until the first of April.

Our dinner was economical and thoroughly Mexican in texture. We hunted for a candy store, and having prowled up block after block, at last caught one that had not successfully disguised the nature of its business. There was a little door—too narrow for Jebly's tricycle—and a little window that showed something that we thought might be candy. It was candy; not the barber-shop peppermint and muddy chocolate of the East, but fruits turned to candy; pineapples, oranges, bananas and the like, all sweetly petrified; also blocks the shape of maple sugar blocks, but made out of Mexican sugar. We bought some of this beautiful ware, and took it to a shady park and browsed upon the candied fruits. For entrees we had pecans. We found the candied oranges not so good as the candied pineapples, which in turn were surpassed by the block sugar; and the block sugar was poor, indeed. However, you cannot expect good American cooking in Mexico. I have been asked if I found the Mexican dishes hot; no, rather did I find the dinner sickening and lingering in its effects. These Mexican dishes are insipid rather than stimulating.

After an extensive course of water, Morton wanted us all to go to a room where he used to lodge, and there sleep away the afternoon. Considering that I had only this piece of a day to spend in the city, and that I had come so far to see what was to be seen, I voted "nay" to the proposition. Jebly stood manfully by me. He had paid $17 duty on getting his tricycle over the Rio Grande, and he did not want to moon away the afternoon on a hired bed, when at nightfull he would have to turn his back on the capital of the Aztecs and hark homeward. Morton, who has his own way even when he is in the minority, went off to have his nap alone.

I spent the greater part of the afternoon in the Alameda. Instead of having to hunt up the people, I rested on one of the settees or stone benches, and they came to me. There were ever so many fountains—none of them running—with walks radiating among shrubbery, trees and picturesque greeneries; and there were 14 acres of seats over at the Plaza Mayor, and every one of them was occupied. And there was a band that was going to play, and it kept the immense concourse in pleasing anticipation while the uniforms lounged gracefully over the cigarettes. They didn't ever play, at least while I was in the city, but we never knew but they might begin at any time. There was a street-fair which had set up solid lines of booths and tents and had spread over the broad street and encroached upon the parks. Here one found the native Mexican in all his simplicity. The vendors had for the most part come from a distance bringing all sorts of fruits and candies; the ladies sat upon the ground so naturally and the men stood so flatfootedly that one saw they were unused to chairs. It doesn't matter how dirty the ground is, or how dust-blown and littered with trash, the ladies can sit anywhere without soiling their garments or darkening their bare feet. There was an incessant clamor in Spanish, and much laughing and yelling of wares, and gesticulation, and in a word, a whole-souled celebration of approaching Easter worthy of the event. The women without exception—I speak of the underclass—wore dresses too long for them, as if wearing for themselves and children—for the little ones were scantily clad, indeed. The women walk in great strides, partly to keep from stepping on their clothes, and partly, I imagine, because in private life skirts are an unknown nuisance. I saw girls of thirteen or thereabouts, frequently step upon their robes and fall in the plaza and get up with unbroken gravity, while the Mexicans looked on without emotion, "to see if they could make it." It is hard to tell when a girl is a woman, because even the little children wear long dresses, and when you see a child of twelve or thereabouts playing with a baby boy you don't know whether she is the sister or mother.

The pleasantest feature of the Alameda is furnished by the children. They are full of play and gaiety, and while they haven't learned to do much mischief, or to disobey their guardians, they run and shout and jump the rope, and seem to be as happy as American children. I even saw children wheeling about on roller skates, too, but they were also Americans. Morton found one face which excited him so that he insisted on my going to see that the city had really one pretty woman in it; but she, also, was an American tourist. However, the young Mexican girls have faces that lend themselves more readily to one's fancy than the Spanish faces. Of course all the romance of the dead-and-gone Aztecs rests upon the present-day Indian, though he is undoubtedly ignorant of his inheritance. Still the younger faces, dark and serious, always, are rather attractive in a way. There is, I suppose, no such thing as an Indian growing old beautifully, but some of them are almost pretty before they have a chance to outgrow it. Maybe civilization would help. It struck me as curious that the statues adorning the plazas, have neither Mexican nor Spanish faces; but likely enough, no artist dreaming a dream of beauty ever surprised it in that guise.

I know a little Spanish, and now if ever seemed the time to use it. I went to one of the booths and inquired, "Tienne-usted lemonade?" The sitting-lady held up a bottle which bore the inscription, "Limon." I shook my head, pointed at a pile of lemons and indicated that I wanted to drink. "Si, signor," says the lady; she gets up, kicks her long skirt as far away as it will swing, and dishes me out something frozen. I don't know what it was, but I gravely nodded as though to say, "And very good lemonade, this!" "Quanto?" I said; "como quanto?" She consulted with two or three bandets and among them they deciphered my meaning "Tres," she says, holding up three fingers, as if I didn't know what tres meant! To be sure I had not called it "trace," but I considered her fingers effront to my intelligence. "Oh, muy buen," I returned with quiet irony, "yo comprendo tres muy buen; Si, signora; tres centavos? no mas?" I swelled with pride over this little repartee and was much surprised when she took my saucer away from me, dumped the frozen mystery into a huge tumbler, poured a red liquid upon it, handed it back and said, "Cease—cease!" She meant six, but I did cease my linquistic exercise, took my mixture in dignified silence, paid my pennies and went away with a queer feeling. I wonder what that could have been? I had just one scrap of Spanish left; the phrase for "how are you getting along?" or "hello!" but there seemed no provocation for its use. However, I held fast to it and waited for an opening.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

The ice cream social given to the readers of The Christian-Evangelist has now been held, but all the counties are not heard from. It takes a good while to get guests together from one end of the country to the other, so we can not give a full report until another two weeks. Therefore, if there is anybody still on the way, don't turn back because August 3 is past, but use the rest of your ticket and you will arrive at Bentonville in time for the last freezer. Moreover, it may be that some one has held a little social for Charlie's benefit, or is going to hold one, and we will have to keep open house until we hear from all such enterprises.

In looking back at the receipts of our orphan's social of last summer, I find that we have not done nearly so well this year. I am not at all discouraged, because I feel that I have done my part, and it's for those who haven't to feel the disappointment. I know there are a great many people interested in the Advance Society orphan, but most of them are hoping other people will send the money to give him an education, while they feel just interested. It is more interesting to be interested when it's free. Anyway, some have responded promptly to our invitation, and we are not going to shed tears over those who didn't, for that wouldn't be a very cheerful reception for the guests seated at the table.

You ask why it is that we did not take in so much as last year? You say, "Are people getting tired of ice cream?" Oh, no; it is not ice cream of which they are getting tired; it is helping orphans. Now let all of us smile and be jolly.

We must first grasp the hand of Harry Buckley, of Lawrenceburg, Ky., and without asking him if this is hot enough for him, hear what he has to say: "Please reserve $1 worth of seats for me at Charlie's social, right up in front among the little girls, with Col. Felix on the side. I am enjoying 'Around the Gulf to Mexico.' I hope you will draw it out as long as possible."

Here come three ladies from this very town of Bentonville, all good friends of Felix: Mrs. J. P. Burris, who was around at the back door last issue, telling us she had raised $1.75 from friends for the social, 1 ow steps upon the front porch, saying she has made it $2. Mrs. Julia McMichael and Mrs. Mary Cunningham, who are great lovers of ice cream when ice cream means helping a helpless orphan to an education, are calling for two dishes apiece, with their quarters in their hand.

Mrs. Fannie Newman comes all the way from Lexington, Mo. (there is a mighty good place there, just across the river, to change cars for Plattsburg), and says: "I came very near forgetting the ice cream supper. Your reminder in the last Christian-Evangelist was gladly read, so here is 25 cents. I hope Charlie's many friends will remember him prayerfully and substantially."

Mrs. A. H. Street, Tuskaloosa, Ala.: "Fifty cents for Drusie and the same for Charlie's ice cream social; only a mite, but it comes with my heart's best wishes. May God bless all who are trying to help the helpless."

From Murfreesboro, Tenn., comes a young lady wearing a mask, with some very pleasant words but in too low a whisper for the general public. She doesn't like ice cream, but brings 25 cents and asks that two dishes be served to hungry little folk.

Salina Ely, Joplin, Mo.: "One dollar for the ice cream social, unless you wish to send half of it to Drusie. Best wishes for the social and the Av. S."

Here is another disguised visitor from Warrensburg, Mo., no name to be found anywhere about her. She says: "I bring $1 to purchase several saucers of Charlie's education fund ice cream. I hope the day will be very warm and therefore bring you a large crowd in search of the cooling dish."

Annie Chapman, Albia, Iowa: "One dollar for our orphan's ice cream social, and may the Lord bless him."

George W. Dawson, Kansas City, Mo.: "I hope this social will be as successful as the one last year. I send $1."

Mrs. Ira J. Chase, Muncie, Ind.: "I wish to secure a table at Charlie's social that will treat my dear friends, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Trost, of Winona, Minn., Adelia Gale Trost and my son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Murphy. What an enjoyable trip that must have been to Mexico! I had the privilege last week of seeing our brother, Jasper Moses, and wife from Mexico, at the Bethany Beach Assembly."

Bertha Seelinger, Butler, Mo.: "Here is 50 cents for three dishes of ice cream, which I intend eating all by myself. I send the extra nickel so you will fill my dish real full. I prefer vanilla flavoring. I hope Charlie will be able to get a good education." (Do you know anything about pineapple flavoring?)

Jessie T. Vaughan, Eagleville, Cal.: "I enjoyed 'Bronze Vase' and 'Agnes of the Bad Lands.' The Av. S. is doing a noble work. I send 25 cents for two dishes of ice cream. I hope every one who hears of the social will go and buy some ice cream."

M. J. O'Dell, Fayette, Idaho: "Late? Yes, but not too late; $1 for Charlie's social, with best wishes to him and the Av. S."

Here comes another lady incognito. She has whispered her name to me, but she doesn't want it known abroad. Her address is Liberty, Mo., and she is the lady that Brother Frank (the Liberty preacher) couldn't find a trace of. You may remember I stated in The Christian-Evangelist some time ago that Brother Frank was looking for this lady, but hadn't found her. The lady says, not without spirit, "Not one of my neighbors read The Christian-Evangelist, and it is very hard to interest people in things they hear of so seldom. My own family send 60 cents to the social. There is an orphan home at Liberty, supported by the I. O. O. F.'s, and Clay County seems to think that is the only orphan home in existence. Nearly every one I told about Charlie, thought he must be from Liberty! Brother Frank hasn't had a harder time trying to find me than I have in trying to get people to understand that the Christian church has a home in St. Louis. I am enjoying that Mexican trip very much, although I get it in broken doses.

If Liberty thinks little of its own state prophet, it is not without honor in far away Philadelphia, from which interesting town comes $1 "for Charlie's educational fund," from some one who writes his name with two dashes.

Gerald Dever, N. Platte, Neb., who was one of the very first to join the Av. S., is at the door: "I planned to come early to this ice cream social, but have been making hay for three weeks which keeps me rather busy. Gladly I send $1 for Charlie and hope you will have to order 100 gallons more cream."

Mrs. Nellie Kirk, Woodward, Okla.: "Here is for one dish of Charlie's ice cream—I wish it were more for this is a very warm day—our usual sweet breeze is surely asleep to-day. I could not think of eating a dish alone, so please give it to some one else, and in that way I will have company." (As Bertha Seelinger has declared her intention of eating three dishes all by herself, perhaps she'll have no scruples about taking one more in the same way). "I must tell you how I enjoy that trip to Mexico. I travel with you by way of The Christian-Evangelist. How sorry I am for any one who does not read that dear old paper! For more than twenty years I have read it. It has been my best friend. May God bless the Av. S. and Charlie and Drusie, and all who work for the Master."

Here comes a girl who won't give her name or tell where she's from, but she has 50 cents for the social. I will have her play the piano while the guests are assembling, and I will accompany her on the violin. Yes, she says she plays the "Last Hope." She didn't bring her music, she says, but I have mine, so that won't do her any good.

Manie Bayless, Mulkeytown, Ind.: "Well, I suppose that social is now in full swing, and you are kept pretty busy dishing out the ice cream. Please reserve a few seats till we can all get there. Here is 25 cents for dishes for mamma and me. I am enjoying 'Around the Gulf to Mexico,' as I have all the stories by the same author. May the richest blessings of God rest upon all connected with the Av. S."

Margaret and Myrtle Searcy, Springfield, Ill.: "Here is 25 cents for two dishes, the exact amount, since you say you will give back no change. I hope Charlie's social will be a great success. I suppose Felix will be there with his 15 cents; or will he have to eat what cream melts?"

Harry Buckley has paid for Col. Felix, and he will have some of the best on that table.

Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky.: "Here it is, August 6, and my order for cream not yet in! However, if the ice cream holds out as well as it did last year I shall be in time, even if I am not very prompt. I hope this supper will be even a greater success than that of last year. I am near the end of the thirty-sixth quarter of Av. S. work. Jean and I send $1. We have good appetites and want a large supply of ice cream."

Several other guests have arrived, and in two weeks I will tell you about them.

An Old and Well-tried Remedy

OUR ANNUAL SUMMER SALE

OF GOOD BOOKS AT REDUCED PRICES IS NOW IN PROGRESS

That the price is reduced does not mean that the subject matter of these books is no longer of current interest, or that there ever was a large profit in the original price. But it is among the inevitables of the book business that there should be some left overs,—books as good as new, but too few to insert in our catalogue, or neglected in our advertising and needing to again be brought into merited prominence, or in the process of the suns having especially to do with these junctures of time and thought.

We find ourselves in possession of a great variety of books that ought to be distributed among church studies and home libraries instead of reposing in our storehouse.

These reduction prices are an earnest of our desire to scatter their light.

A Suggestion.

The sameness of the taste of one's food is almost as hard to bear as the sameness of the fault of one's domestics. But if half a dozen families arranged among themselves to exchange cooks at regular intervals, both the food and the faults would become much lighter.—Dorothea Gerard, in "Itinerant Daughters."

Simple and Strong.

There is a Mount of Olives lonely and forsaken waiting for us to climb. . . . There is a life—humble, lonely, obscure, very simple and very strong—which comes from climbing to that mount. We do not realise it, we can scarcely believe it, but its influence reaches round the world.—M. E. Thomas, in "A View of Life."

A Night-time Job.

Booker T. Washington says that in the early history of the institution of which he is the head, he decided to use a deserted henhouse of considerable size for a recitation room. While on the way with some students to clean it, he was stopped by an old colored man, who in a friendly manner asked:

"Whar you goin'?"

"We told him the nature of our errand."

"'See here, boss,' said he, with impressive earnestness, 'you sho' gwine ter git inter trouble. It am contrary to the habits of people hereabouts to clean out chicken-houses in the daytime.'"

Travels of a Bottle.

Numbers of experiments have been made to test the speed and endurance of corked bottles thrown into the sea in various parts of the world. The most remarkable of recent examples was that in which a bottle traveled 6,000 miles in two and one-half years. Roughly speaking, it floated at the rate of six and one-half miles a day.

Got His Sparrow.

T. V. Powderly, at the wonderful informal conference of capital and labor that Andrew Carnegie held in his Fifth avenue mansion recently, told a story about contentment.

"Contentment is a good thing," Mr. Powderly began, "but it should never be carried too far. It is discontent, we must always remember, that brings about improvement.

"Let me tell you a story about a too contented Scranton farmer.

"This old man might have had a good modern shotgun, but he was content with an old musket, a relic of the civil war. He was very proud of this antique firearm. When I lived in Scranton he was always boasting about his prowess at sparrow shooting with it.

"One day he took a man out with him to show what he could do in the sparrow shooting line. Before he set out he loaded the gun. He put into it a half dozen screws, some rusty nails, a handful of buttons and a bit of file that happened to be lying on a rubbish heap.

"The two men came to a tree, a great flock of sparrows rose into the air, and the farmer put up his gun and let drive. The report was tremendous. One sparrow fell and the old man fell, too. He lay unconscious for some minutes.

"When he revived he looked at his watch. Then he sat up, patted his gun affectionately and said with a contented smile:

"'She used me well this time. It mostly takes twenty minutes to a good half hour before I come to myself, but I always get my sparrow.'"

"Good—That is the Word."

There is an old hymn that has for its refrain, "He died to make men good." Good—that is the word. We should all strive to be good, to do right, to refrain from lying and stealing and murdering. It is all so simple—not at all a question of intricate policies.—Wm. T. Jerome, in N. Y. Times.

Entered at St. Louis P. O. as Second Class Matter

Unused Manuscripts will be returned only if accompanied by stamps.

News Items, evangelistic and otherwise, are solicited, and should be sent on a postal card, if possible.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a Year.

For Canada add 52 cents and for other foreign countries $1.04 for postage.

—The author instructs us to sell "John Sims," our new tract telling how a Disciple led his friend into the true light, at twenty copies for $1, and at $4 per hundred. Churches everywhere should make large use of Bro. E. L. Shelnutt's great contribution to our tract literature.

—We have added more new Bible schools to our list of patrons for this present quarter than for any similar period in many years. Our people are beginning to manifest practical appreciation of the invaluable additions to our editorial force and the many new helps we are sending forth.

—To get our specially conducted and scheduled train to the Norfolk convention, we must have at least 100 passengers engaged. You will help secure this treat for us all by writing at once a declaration of intention to go, so that we can in good faith present it to the management of the Big Four and Chesapeake and Ohio.

—Bible School Superintendents and Secretaries, Attention!! Do not wait longer to order your Bible school literature for the fourth and last quarter of 1907. The new quarter begins October 1. To guard against poor mail service and other hindrances, orders should be filed by September 1.

—Aa a temperance gathering an orator exclaimed: "The glorious work will never be accomplished until the good ship Temperance shall sail from one end of the land to the other, and with the cry of 'Victory!' at each step she takes, shall plant her banner in every city, town and village of the United States."

—We have arrangements with many book-buying preachers by which we send them new books that appear to us to be of especial value. Some care but for one new book a month. To others we send nearly all the best books. If the books are not desired, they are returned to us postpaid. Rarely is one returned. This gives our subscribers the privilege of examining the best books on themes in which they are deeply interested and at very small expense. Write us if you wish to become a member of our Ancient Order of Booklovers' Society.

—The seasons come and go, but the growth of our circulation, like Tennyson's brook, goes on forever. The following new clubs were added last week, in addition to the subscribers coming one and two at a time:

Bell Buckle, Tenn..... 4
Dixon, Ill., H. H. Peters, pastor 5
Pilot Point, Texas 6
Bolivar, Mo., J. H. Jones, pastor..... 7

—The Pacific Islanders. By Delavan L. Pierson. $1.00. In a series of fascinating articles the story is told of the progress of these far-away people from the depths of savagery to the heights of sainthood. It is a most important contribution to the missionary literature of the age. 354 pages.

—Between the Testaments. By David Gregg, LL.D. 75 cents. This deals with the times of inter-Biblical history. The 500 years between the two canons constitute a large but neglected chapter of religious history. It is really a period of thrilling interest. We heartily commend it to our patrons.

—The Saloon-Keeper's Ledger. By Louis Albert Banks. There must be a new education of the American people with reference to the drink-evil. Too many pulpits are either silent or speak "with bated breath." Temperance ballots are not self-made; they are the result of education. This book helps give it. Price 75 cents.

—A Hundred Years of Missions. By D. L. Leonard. $1.20. This is an inspiring story of the incidents and lessons of missionary work in every land since Carey began his labors more than 100 years ago; achievements of wonder and heroism thoughtfully and thoroughly told. It is arranged to meet the wants of the general reader.

—The Burial of the Dead. Duffield. This is a beautiful morocco-bound, funeral manual. It contains Scriptural selections, topics, hints, suggestions for special occasions, such as the funeral of a suicide, a public man, sudden death, a repentant criminal, a "sporting man," a sailor, and in time of penitence. $1.00.

—Forward Movements of the Last Half Century. By Arthur T. Pierson. $1.50. Dr. Pierson has written an accurate and interesting description of the conspicuous missionary, philanthropic and other religious movements during the past fifty years. The volume aims to give not only a valuable record of these progressive steps, but to present incentives for future efforts in the same direction.

In all the useful and eventful years of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the last has been the brightest, most charming and best in its efforts to "go on to perfection." It is contributing the most able and loyal editorials that it has been my pleasure to read from any source upon first perusal. May the shadow of age rest lightly upon its editor and his life be long spared to his work.—Joseph Lowe, Kansas City.

Enclosed find 3.00 for subscription to CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for _____ of Lincoln, Kansas. He is an inmate of the "Poor House." As he cannot pay for the paper himself, the congregation sends it to him.—A. Hartman, church treasurer. The Church as Seen by a Pastor*

By E. P. Wise

No relation in life aside from the domestic is more sacred than the pastoral. Mutual understanding and sympathy are absolutely essential to successful co-operation and "without co-operation there is no operation."

Two men argued, quarreled and came to blows, because one declared that a certain shield was white, while the other declared it was black. They were both right: The shield was white on one side and black on the other. Had they exchanged view points, they would have agreed. Disagreements and lack of co-operation are often due to partial visions. If people could exchange places now and then, things would be different.

Many a pastorate with great possibilities for good has been spoiled before its inception. The folly displayed by many a congregation in the selection of a pastor is astonishing. To pit a number of men against each other like fat sheep at a stock show, in order to select the prize winner is incongruous in the extreme. That will do in an industrial institution where only bungling work is needed, and when the price and quantity of work only are at stake. Many a church has been divided by selecting from rival candidates, and the new pastor has his share of heartaches, and much of "Love's Labor Lost," in trying to win the opposition over to himself. Sometimes he succeeds; more often this condition is a guarantee of failure. Let the children of the kingdom be as wise as the children of this world. The pastorate should seek the man and in a manner characterized by such wisdom as will guarantee success.

Congregational habits in the matter of receiving and dismissing pastors are often vicious. With great joy some churches receive a man, with great joy they dismiss him. He is brought in in a golden chariot, they haul him out on a wheelbarrow; he comes in riding over "palm branches," he goes out with the cry in his ears, "Crucify him." Many times he is in part to blame for this sort of thing, more often it is due to congregational habits and ideals. Frequently a general expectation of this kind prevails in a church. In six months the "knocking" begins. At the end of a year a committee on the pastor's resignation is appointed (always self-appointed) and that committee rarely is dismissed until it has finished its work. In many congregations a small minority is permitted to rule in order that they may always be kept sweet. Such congregations are always in a turmoil. Pastorates are always short; little progress is made. There is no continuity of plan or action. Church ideals as to achievement are inadequate. Pastors become discouraged, and failure becomes their habit. Our churches should be democratic de facto as well as de jure. Actual majorities, not fictitious ones, should rule.

Lack of appreciation on the part of the church is a serious embargo upon the pastor's spirits. No sensible man wants to be coddled. He is a man and wants to preserve his self-respect; and yet, as a man, he also hungers for appreciation. Christ's triumphant entry into Jerusalem must have filled him with a sense of satisfaction, and doubtless prepared him for the rebuffs which followed. Flattery and heartless praise are alike disgusting, but the expression of appreciation is not only welcome, but is the greatest spur to better efforts. "The greatest efforts of the race," says Ruskin, "have always been traceable to the love of praise as its greatest catastrophes to the love of pleasure." A man will toil late and early and dig deep, if he realizes that he is actually helping people. How shall he know it unless they tell him? A minister often receives more commendation from those on the outside of his congregation than from those on the inside. There is indeed often more appreciation felt than is expressed, and the minister hungers and starves for want of a little expression of gratitude of those he helps. "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so." We neglect the living and bring our flowers to the dead. We speak our words of appreciation often when it is too late. The whole church should cultivate the tube-rose kind of religion which led Mary to break her alabaster box and anoint the body of Jesus while he was living. "Many hearts are broken by unkind words, but more by kind words never spoken. Cruel speech has slain its thousands, but cruel silence its tens of thousands."

False ideals obtain in many congregations as to the responsibilities of a minister. Henry Van Dyke tells the following story: A man came into my study the other day from one of the vacant churches on Murray Hill and said: "I wish you would recommend a minister for our church." I said: "I can recommend a dozen." He seemed rather bluffed at that; thought that was a large number, and said: "Won't you suggest a name?" I went on suggesting one name after another. He had some fault to find with each one. Finally he said: "Well, what we want in our church is a man who will draw." "Oh no, my Christian friend," said I, "What you want is a church that will hold; you haven't got it. Twenty congregations have passed through your church in the last twenty years and they have passed through because you have not had a church which holds. You want a church that will hold the people when they get into it. The minister can not hold; success depends not half as much upon the minister as upon the church." The minister may draw, but the church must hold. A minister may feed but the church must warm with pure, earnest and devoted life. Slum workers have learned that before you can do anything for wretched people, you must give them food to eat and a place to warm themselves. When they are warmed and fed, you can talk to them about higher things. This expresses a universal condition. People are hungry for the bread of life, and they long for fellowship; they will go where they find these. When the minister feeds and the church warms, you have a church that will both draw and hold.

A church should rise to the dignity of a company of the sons of God. It is too often thought that a pastor must give tone and dignity and elevation to the church. This is rather a large task for one man. Does it not seem just that a church should have some part in giving tone and dignity and uplift to itself and the pastor? Parents often ask concerning their neighbor's children, "Are they fit to play with our children?" How rarely do they ask, "Are our children fit to play with their children?" "Is he a fit man for us?" the Church asks. Why not also ask, "Are we worthy of him?" "Like pastor, like people," is a true motto; but equally true, "Like people, like pastor." Lofty flights in the pulpit are secured by wings of inspiration furnished by the pew. It takes a great church to make a great preacher. Eloquent listening makes eloquent preaching. A faithful church will produce a practical preacher. A church must inspire its preacher as well as be inspired by him. Plenty of preachers

A Dash for the Pole.

Probably before these lines are printed, Walter Wellman and his party, representing an enterprising Chicago newspaper, will have left Spitzbergen on their dash for the North Pole in an airship. Active preparations for this trip have been under way for two years, and Wellman's vessel represents the results of the aeronautic experiments of the past few years. He believes that he will safely reach the Pole and return to civilization. A few days will tell the tale. He will either have accomplished the feat which courageous souls have been vainly attempting for over two centuries, or else the bodies of the entire party will rest forever in the frozen wastes whose rigors they defied.

Sunday Closing.

The efforts of Governor Folk to "put on the lid" (i. e., enforce the Sunday closing law) in St. Louis county have not yet been crowned with success. The city of St. Louis is entirely separate, in local government, from St. Louis county. Within the city the saloons are closed, front, back and side doors, on Sunday; but in the county, and especially just without the city limits, a great business is done in satisfying the desires of thirsty urbanites. The county officials, apparently, ignore these transgressions of law, and the next effort of Governor Folk will probably be to bring charges against these recreant officers, depose them, and fill their places with men who believe, with the Governor and all other thinking citizens, that laws are made to be enforced. Moreover, Governor Folk has declared that, if present laws are not sufficient to close every saloon in Missouri on Sunday, he will call a special session of the legislature to pass more stringent laws.

The President's Address.

On August 20 President Roosevelt delivered an address at Provincetown, Mass. The occasion was the laying of the corner stone of a monument to commemorate the landing of the Mayflower, but the President took advantage of the occasion to deliver himself on some of the issues now prominently before the American people. Concerning the federal control of railroads and other large corporations, he said: "I believe in a national incorporation law for corporations engaged in interstate business. I believe, furthermore, that the need for action is most pressing as regards those corporations which, because they are common carriers, exercise a quasi-public function, and which can be completely controlled, in all respects, by the federal government, by the exercise of the power conferred under the interstate commerce clause, and, if necessary, under the post-road clause, of the constitution. During the last few years we have taken marked strides in advance along the road of proper regulation of these railroad corporations; but we must not stop in the work. The national government should exercise over them a similar supervision and control to that which it exercises over national banks."

England's New Marriage Law.

After sixty years of incessant agitation, the British House of Lords has at last consented to a bill legalizing marriage with a "deceased wife's sister." Such a bill has passed the House of Commons eleven different times; but on each occasion it was rejected by the Lords because of the opposition of the Anglican bishops, who, for reasons which the ordinary American mind finds entirely too subtle to grasp, professed to regard such marriages as "immoral." The final passing of the bill was due to the efforts of King Edward.

The Telegraphers' Strike.

There now appears to be a fair prospect of the settlement of the telegraphers' strike, which for weeks has greatly interfered with business throughout the country. President Small, of the Telegraphers' Union, predicts peace within a week. The officials of the Western Union and Postal Union are rather less optimistic. Daily conferences are in progress, however, and it is to be hoped that a fair and mutual agreement may soon be reached.

The Prevention of Accidents.

It is expected that in his next annual message the President will include a strong recommendation that legislation be enacted which will permit the federal government to investigate accidents affecting interstate trains. During the past seven years 27,744 persons have been killed and over 400,000 have been injured on American railroads. During the same period it is estimated that the roads have suffered a monetary loss of over $75,000,000 through accidents. Had this amount been spent by the roads in safety appliances, they would to-day be in much better shape, and the number of those suffering loss of life and limb would have been greatly reduced. But it has been again and again demonstrated that the railroads adopt safety appliances only as they are forced to do so.

Secretary Taft.

After a month's vacation in Canada and a visit to Oyster Bay, Secretary Taft has started on a semi-diplomatic mission to Japan, from which he will return by way of Europe, thus encircling the globe. On his westward way across the continent, Mr. Taft is to make a number of speeches. The first one was at Columbus, Ohio. In an able address there last week he may be considered to have fired the opening gun of his presidential campaign in his own state. There have been several guns, of various calibre, fired in his behalf before this, but he has not been firing them. They have been merely the premature explosion of weapons in the hands of his friends. The speech was, in general, an argument in support of the policies of the present administration. It would have needed but slight revision if it had been intended to further the candidacy of Mr. Roosevelt himself. Mr. Taft devoted a good deal of attention to Mr. Bryan and combatted his ideas of government ownership and the "extirpation of trusts, root and branch." He reaffirmed his belief that the time had come for the revision of the tariff. Our whole commercial prosperity, he said, depends upon the maintenance of a protective tariff equal to the differential between the cost of production in foreign countries and in the United States. A tariff higher than that breeds monopoly. The evidence leads to the belief that the present tariff rate is, in many particulars, seriously in excess of that differential. It needs revision. But revision will be more satisfactorily accomplished if postponed until after the presidential election. At that time it can be considered more dispassionately and with less political bias; and, besides, he thinks that by that time the Republican party will be practically unanimous in favor of revision. We hope it will, but we do not share his confidence in its unanimity on the subject. The speech, considered as a campaign deliverance, clearly fixed the status of Mr. Taft as the candidate who stands for a continuance of the Roosevelt policy in general, with the addition of tariff revision. Since the deliverance of this speech, Senator Foraker has given out an interview, in which he asserts that Taft is growing daily weaker as a candidate in Ohio, and that the drift of opinion in the party is not in the direction of tariff revision, as Taft says. In both particulars, possibly, Mr. Foraker's wish is father to the thought.

Trouble in Morocco.

The pot of trouble in Morocco has been simmering for some months. Now, in spite of the fact that it is a decidedly watched pot, with the eyes of Europe fastened upon it, it has begun to boil briskly. The French are the European nation most directly interested, since they have long had a footing in Morocco, which was reduced to a definite and internationally recognized basis by the recent Algeciras convention. The French troops at Casa Blanca have been hard pressed, but so far have given a good account of themselves. Now the danger of the situation is much increased by the rise of the new sultan, Mulai Hafig, a fierce reactionary, who has usurped the throne of his somewhat mild and liberal brother. With this change of administration there has begun, to all appearances, a violent anti-Christian crusade, which will not stop, so its promoters declare, until every Christian dog is driven into the sea. The tribesmen of the southern part of Morocco, the fiercest and most fanatical Moslems, have come up against Casa Blanca 15,000 strong. France has been slow to begin aggressive measures for maintaining her rights, or even protecting her property in Morocco, but steps are now being taken to send troops without delay.

Big fines are becoming fashionable. Encouraged, perhaps, by the fine of twenty-nine million dollars against the Standard Oil Company, a Venezuelan court has imposed a fine of twenty-four million bolivars upon the New York and Bermudez Asphalt Company, on the ground of participation in the Matos rebellion and the losses and expenses which were occasioned to the government thereby. Needless to state, in this case, as in the case of the Standard Oil Company, the cheque in payment of the fine has not yet been handed over. There are three higher courts to which appeals may be taken successively.

Editorial

Some First Principles.

III. What We Find in Jesus.

In our last article we found that the soul, made conscious of its need of a truer and better life, and seeking to be loyal to its own high ideals, would inevitably come to Jesus as the highest ideal of righteousness which this world has ever known. It is in such a moral struggle that one becomes truly conscious of his own shortcomings and of his moral weakness so that he longs for the very help which Jesus Christ offers. What does such an one find in Jesus Christ?

1. First of all he finds in the character of Christ a higher ideal of character than he had hitherto known, and one which he feels under moral obligations to adopt as a model for his own character-building. It is a great thing for one who is aspiring to make the most of his life, to find a perfect ideal in character—one which satisfies both the intellect and the heart, and which lays hold of the conscience by its moral beauty and perfection and compels its homage. Such an ideal is Jesus Christ, and whoever catches a real vision of him henceforth feels that nothing less than that is the true goal of life. It is a marvelous fact that, in this age of criticism and iconoclasm, no one even suggests the possibility of giving to the world a more perfect moral ideal than is furnished in the life of Jesus of Nazareth.

2. The soul struggling after righteousness and coming to Christ in that struggle, finds in him moral redemption, even the forgiveness of sins. The consciousness of sin and the burden of its guilt has been increasing in the soul from the beginning of its struggle after a better life, but when such an one sees Christ he comes to know himself as a sinner in a deeper sense, and to feel condemned at the bar of his own conscience. After a fuller view, however, of Christ's character and mission, he sees in him not only a perfect ideal but a personal Saviour. He comes to understand that Jesus Christ came into the world, not simply to reveal to humanity its sinfulness by giving it a perfect standard of righteousness, but to provide forgiveness of sins whereby the conscience might be relieved of its burden of guilt and find peace with God. Learning that this forgiveness can be obtained only through submission to Christ, in faith, he yields his heart and life to Christ by open confession and obedience and finds in him that for which his soul had been longing—the knowledge of remission of sins and the peace which passeth understanding. He may not be able to fathom the mystery of the atonement, but he accepts the fact that Christ, the sinless One, gave himself for us, not only in a life of lowly, unselfish service, but voluntarily in his death upon the cross that we might have remission of sins and fellowship with God and that through faith in him we can obtain remission of sins and be at one with God. The day and the hour in which the soul feels itself relieved from the bondage of guilt through the forgiveness which is in Christ Jesus, is forever a memorable day in one's experience, and long afterwards the ransomed soul can sing,

"I never can forget the day
When Jesus washed my sins away."

The joy that pervades the soul at such a time is in proportion to the sense of guilt which had previously weighed upon the heart. While, therefore, the degree of feeling or emotion may vary in different individuals it is in all a blessed experience when one comes to the realization of the forgiveness of sins and of his adoption into the family of God.

3. But the truly penitent and obedient believer finds in Christ not only a perfect ideal and the forgiveness of past sins, but a new strength by which he is able to resist temptations to evil to which he had formerly yielded, and to live more in conformity to the high ideal he has adopted. This fact is often overlooked by those hesitating to enter the Christian life. They realize their inability, in themselves, to live the Christian life and fear that they will be a disgrace to the cause of Christianity. Surely this would be the result with all of us if we depended upon our resources alone for the power to live as those professing godliness. But, happily, we are not thus left alone in our weakness to battle with temptation and the sin which doth so easily beset us. With the importation of the new life in Christ Jesus there comes a new power from Christ so that the believer is enabled to say, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." When once the soul is identified with him and united to him by the bonds of faith and love he becomes our strength and our help in every time of need. Through the gracious privilege of prayer we are enabled to draw on his infinite resources of strength, in every struggle against evil and in every high and worthy endeavor. Thus is fulfilled in us the desire which Tennyson has expressed for us all:

"O that the man would arise in me
That the man I am may cease to be!"

In a word, the soul finds in Christ that which satisfies its deepest needs, its highest aspirations, its profoundest longings. He alone giveth the water of life that satisfies the soul's immortal thirst. He alone is the bread of life which can appease the hunger of the heart. In him we are complete and, having found him, there remains only the noble task and high privilege of increasingly appropriating him until we shall be transformed from glory to glory even into his divine likeness.

The Appeal for Church Homes.

September brings with it not only the autumnal equinox and the equinoctial storms, but no less certainly the appeal of our Church Extension Board for funds with which to assist, by well-protected loans, needy churches in the erection of church homes. There are no more urgent and pathetic appeals coming to any of our boards than the appeal of homeless churches for assistance in the erection of church buildings. A homeless church in the town or city has a precarious existence in the estimation of the people, and lacks the influence which comes from the idea of permanence and enterprise. It is putting a great burden upon those who hold to this Way which we call New Testament Christianity, to require them to worship in inconvenient halls, schoolhouses or empty store rooms, while their religious neighbors have stately and commodious churches in which to worship. But hundreds of poor but loyal congregations are bearing this burden without any thought of forsaking the cause they love. But they do appeal to the brotherhood of which they are a part, to give them temporary assistance in the building of a suitable house of worship. These feeble bands of brethren have told their religious neighbors that they are connected with a great brotherhood over a million strong, and naturally they expect to furnish proof of this fact in the financial aid extended to them in the erection of a church building.

If we could meet with these homeless churches in their inconvenient places of gathering, and could enter into their feelings as they have looked and longed in vain for assistance, there would be no question about the response of the churches to this appeal. What each one of us needs to do is to make real to himself the actual condition and needs of these homeless churches. Over 150 appeals from such churches have already been placed on file by the Board since the first of last January, coming from thirty-nine states and territories. Think of the membership of these churches as your brethren and sisters in the Lord, and do unto them as you would be done by under similar conditions. No investment we have ever made in any department of our Christian activity has brought greater returns than that we have made in church extension, and the investment is a permanent one, the results of which will continue through all the coming years. The effort to increase this fund to a million dollars, by the time of our Centennial, is one that should enlist our heartiest interest and co-operation. We urge upon the churches everywhere to make this offering for church extension a very liberal one and as nearly unanimous as possible. Imagine with what deep interest the hundreds of homeless churches will watch the reports from this offering, to learn the probability of their receiving the assistance for which they have asked. Let us not disappoint them, and especially let us not disappoint our Lord who taught us that as we have freely received so, also, we should freely give.

The Newest Philosophy.

It is very interesting and instructive to notice the oscillations of human thought on any given subject from one extreme to another. There was a time, not so long ago, when doing did not count for much in philosophy, and in religion it was positively useless, if not presumptuous. The movement of the Disciples of Christ encountered that phase of philosophy and laid great stress on doing the will of God as an essential condition of salvation. It was not enough to believe; the faith must find expression in acts of obedience. Later, it came to be recognized that obedience is "the organ of knowledge," as Frederick Robertson put it. It has come to be a generally recognized truth, both in religion and philosophy, that the highest and best knowledge comes by doing, and that without doing things there can be no adequate knowledge of any subject. This seems to harmonize with the teaching of Jesus who said, "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is of God, or whether I speak from myself."

The newest philosophy, however, is known as pragmatism, which according to one of its recent exponents, "values ideas by their consequences. Those that have no consequences it casts out of consideration." Another statement of the pragmatic method, by another one of its advocates, is as follows: "If it can make no practical difference which of two statements is true, then they are really one statement in two verbal forms! if it can make no practical difference whether a given statement can be true or false, then the statement has no real meaning." Professor James, who is the chief prophet of the new philosophy in America, and who has given up his Harvard professorship to devote himself to its propaganda, formulates the philosophy in two statements: (1) "The only meaning of truth is the possibility of verification by experience"; (2) "True is the term applied to whatever it is practically profitable to believe." Professor Slosson in the "Independent," says, "The pragmatist is one who believes in testing a theory by its consequences. The same writer says of Professor Dewey, formerly of the University of Chicago, now of Columbia, that his "test of truth is its satisfactoriness, its competency to give adequate satisfaction to all legitimate human needs and aspirations." This statement seems to leave things pretty wide open, and the criticism of its enemies that this is a denial of the imperativeness of truth and duty does not seem wholly unfounded. Dr. Patton, of Princeton, is quoted by Professor Slosson as saying this means that "religion is any old thing that works." Of course the pragmatist would reply that this satisfaction referred to must be permanent and all-inclusive, but, after all, it is too indefinite for ordinary mortals.

No doubt this new philosophy has some truth in it, but there are already indications of division among its advocates, and it is likely to be carried to untenable extremes and to be followed by another reaction. The consequence of any theory or action is, doubtless, an important criterion as to its truth and value. Here is where the affinity exists between the theory of doing in order to know, and the philosophy of pragmatism, which would test every theory by its consequences. But there are other criteria which need not be ignored and can not, with safety, be overlooked in testing the truth of any theory or doctrine. It is too early to predict the ultimate outcome of this new phase of philosophic thought, but our readers may rest assured of one thing, and that is that in Christianity neither pragmatism nor any other utilitarian theory or philosophy, can be a substitute for faith which is the apprehension of the spiritual and the eternal, and the soul's allegiance thereto.

Notes and Comments.

Prof. A. T. Robertson, writing on "Presuppositions of New Testament Criticism" in the "Baptist Argus," treats the following points: (1) "The New Testament cannot be and ought not to be excepted from criticism." (2) "There is no unprejudiced criticism." (3) "There is, therefore, no final criticism." On this last point, speaking of the reaction from certain extreme positions, he says:

> The world of thought to-day as a whole is turning toward Jesus, not running away from him. Christ never received the homage of so many human souls as he does to-day. There are strong counter-currents. Harnack has just thrown a fresh bomb into the radical camp by arguing in his new book ("Lukas der Artz", etc.), with great ability, that Luke the Physician was the author of both Gospel and Acts. William M. Ramsay has passed from the position of Baur to that of strong advocacy of the historicity of the Acts. The Gospel of John is the subject of fresh attack; but James Drummond, the great Unitarian scholar of Manchester, and William Sanday, the glory of Christ Church, Oxford, both, in recent books, champion the Johannine authorship of the fourth gospel. Dr. Bigg, of Christ church also, in the "International and Critical Commentary," accepts the genuineness of 1 and 2 Peter. Mayor stands by the Epistle of James; Swete, of Cambridge, in the latest and best commentary on the Apocalypse, holds to the Johannine authorship. Weiss and Zahn are by no means alone in Germany in open championship of the historical character and value of the New Testament writings. It is an utter mistake to think that criticism is all radical and destructive. It is not noise but argument that holds the field in the end of the day. The answer to wrong criticism is right criticism. The champion of the New Testament may be just as open-minded and just as scholarly as the hostile critic. The arguments are to be taken on their merits in either case. Uncle Remus says: "Truth ain't never been hurt yet by folks not believing it."

The statement that "the answer to wrong criticism is right criticism," and therefore not denunciation deserves to be written large in the study of every critic and anti-critic. When radical and destructive shall be completely overthrown, as it will be, we shall be indebted to the careful, conscientious scholarly critics for the consummation.

The "Examiner" of New York expresses the feeling of a large majority of common-sense Bible students in the following utterance concerning the extreme views of the documentary structure of the Pentateuch, as held by some critics:

> The theory of documentary stratification in the structure of the Pentateuch has always seemed to us more ingenious than probable. To the ordinary lay mind the attempt to cut up a continuous narrative into fragments, sometimes consisting of no more than a word or two, and assign these fragments to this or that widely separated writer or period, appears little less than preposterous. And so, when that curious example of misdirected scholarship, The Polychrome Bible, came from the press, we could not but feel that the demonstration of its absurdity was quite complete. We cannot conceive how any one capable of reasoning at all could look on those polychromatic pages, purporting to represent in various colors the alleged "results" of modern critical research, and not discern the folly of the whole contention.

The "Examiner" calls attention to an article by Professor Sayce in the current "Homiletic Review" on the subject, in which the learned Assyriologist deals a heavy blow against this theory by subjecting it to a practical test. Those interested might do well to secure and read the article.

On this whole question of the criticism of the Bible, the position of The Christian-Evangelist, from the beginning, has been that such criticism is inevitable and that we ought not, if we could, shield either the Old Testament or the New Testament from that critical inquiry to which all ancient documents are being subjected. We have also insisted that no ultimate harm can come to the Bible or to the cause of Christianity from such scientific investigation, believing that whatever wrong conclusions might be reached by radical critics would be answered by a saner and more scholarly criticism. We have steadfastly refused to be stampeded by alarmists into an indiscriminate warfare against all criticism. As Professor Robertson says, as quoted in the foregoing paragraph, "It is an utter mistake to think that criticism is all radical and destructive." As a matter of fact, we are indebted to it for a better understanding and a higher appreciation of the Old Testament and for its overthrow of a certain destructive theory which a quarter of a century ago was calling in question the Pauline authority of nearly all Paul's epistles, and seeking to undermine many of the other New Testament books which to-day stand on an impregnable basis. The friends of the Bible have every reason to be grateful for what criticism has accomplished, and may safely trust the defense of the holy Scriptures to the believing and reverent scholars who are devoting their lives to this work.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

"What went ye out in the wilderness for to see?" Had Jesus heard some one speak as if he were disappointed at the appearance of John the Baptist? Had the Master heard his forerunner criticised for the roughness of his speech and the coarseness of his apparel? Probably so; hence the question of Jesus quoted above. Men are always forming wrong impr ssions of persons and places which they have heard about but have not seen. A recent visitor to Garrison Park, while very appreciative of its natural beauty, had expected to see something very different. The word "park" had carried to his mind the idea of smooth-shaven lawns, level grounds, shade trees artificially grouped, with, perhaps, flower gardens and playing fountains! He had expected to see something like that here on the shore of Lake Michigan. "What went ye out in the wilderness for to see?" A city park laid out with mathematical order and precision? The word "park" does not necessarily carry with it the idea of cultivation and artificial preparation. Any piece of woods preserved in its natural condition is properly termed a park. After all, Nature's own parks are the most restful and satisfying. One soon wearies with artificiality, no matter how beautiful, but Nature never palls on our taste. For restfulness and untiring beauty, give us the park where nature has made her own ravines, thrown up her hills, and planted her trees and shrubs and grasses in her own inimitable way, where her children—the squirrels, the chipmunks and the wild birds—build their nests and have their homes secure and unafraid. In such a park one gets a little closer to the heart of Nature and to the simple life than he can amid the proudest monuments of man's artistic skill and architectural genius.

Can we give to the readers of the Easy Chair a mental picture, a bird's-eye view of Garrison Park? In front, a wide expanse of the most beautiful of all the northern lakes, now rolling in its white-crested waves which thunder as they break upon the beach, now smiling in the sunlight and reflecting the various hues and tints which sun and cloud can paint upon the face of the deep. Back of this and forming its barrier, a range of lofty sand dunes, covered with forests and pierced here and there at irregular intervals with ravines which lead back into the country or up to loftier summits. Back of this, still little Pentwater, shining like molten silver in a setting of low, green hills. Between the two lakes, a lofty hill whose crest is shaped like a horseshoe, with the open side toward Lake Michigan, and the closed side toward Lake Pentwater, from whose summit both lakes are seen, with a far-extended view of forests and fields. In these ravines and along their slopes are pines and hemlocks, with the oak and the maple and other species of trees. Such, in brief, is a general view of Garrison Park; but as one strolls through its ravines and over its hilltops, there is many a charming bit of scenery or cozy nook which is not seen in the general view, but which adds much to the quiet beauty and attractiveness of the place. One is constantly marking locations where heart's ease and quiet contentment might be easily cultivated, and where Nature's healing balm would soothe the wearied and troubled heart into rest. This is the fourth summer we have spent here by the lakeshore, and we scarcely ever take a stroll through the hills and ravines that we do not discover some new spot which we think of in connection with some of our friends, faithful toilers in the Lord's vineyard, who could find here a little of that quiet and repose which their wearied spirits so much need. One of our ministers who has just finished his week's vacation, and is returning to his work, says he feels as if he could plunge into his work now with all the energy of one who is fighting fire. No doubt his ministry during the coming autumn and winter will be more earnest and fruitful because of these restful weeks he has enjoyed here, breathing this cool and invigorating air and rowing over these lakes.

Last Lord's day was one of those ideal days of which we have so many during the season here at Pentwater. Bro. J. L. Deming, summering at Stony Lake, below us a few miles, came up and spent a couple of days with us, including Lord's day, speaking for the little church here in the morning in the village, and aiding us in the evening at our beach service. This was the largest of our beach services. The weather was perfect for the occasion. A bright bonfire which some of the young people had prepared served as a signal for the gathering of the people, and shed its radiance over the rippling waves on the beach, and on the faces of the gathered worshipers. The crescent moon, just rising over the hilltops, shed its soft, silvery light on lake and wood. Sweetly the old hymns rang out on the evening air, along the shore and far out over the lake. The songs of Zion never sound sweeter than when sung in Nature's own temple, domed with the starlit sky. As the people sat facing the lake, singing these songs, they scarcely could help from thinking of Faber's lines:

> "There's a wideness in God's mercy
> Like the wideness of the sea."

Very interesting talks were made by Dr. W. T. Moore, of Missouri; J. L. Deming, of Ohio, and James Mailley, of Indiana. Not less than seven states were represented in the little audience that sat upon the sands, and we have no doubt that those who attended that service will carry away with them impressions made upon them by the surroundings that will be as lasting as life.

One day last week, while a party of us were out fishing on the lake, we saw what seemed to be a stationary buoy consisting of some heavy timbers nailed together, with a chain suspended. As it was in a good situation for fishing, we anchored our boat to it and proceeded to fish. After several minutes we discovered that we were out nearly in the center of the lake, buoy and all! Instead of serving as a stationary buoy, it was a derelict, floating at the motion of wind and wave. While the incident amused us at the time, it suggested also a moral lesson that is worth heeding. It is a good thing to be anchored, if that to which we anchor is "both sure and steadfast." Otherwise we are indulging in a false security. Many people anchor to certain great leaders in politics, business or religion. These men often prove insecure anchorage and carry those who anchor to them whither they did not intend to go. This fact, however, illustrates the importance of leaders of the people in every realm of thought and action seeking to be led by Christ, seeing so many are influenced by their thought and action. Whether men will or not, if they be men of light and leading, others will be influenced by their example and teaching, and no public man has a right to forget this fact in choosing his course and shaping his policy. But the one secure anchorage for all our hopes, both for time and eternity, is the Rock, Jesus Christ, "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." He who anchors to him securely can withstand all the waves of temptation and trial, outride the storms of life, and find, at last, the haven of rest.

As the August days pass and hasten to its close, on the lakeside, it is customary to see bonfires gleam along the beach at night, with groups of friends gathered about them for a little social visit before they go hence, to meet again not for a year, perhaps, and possibly never again. The roasting of young corn and marshmallows forms one of the features of these evening entertainments at the beach. The bonfire is built of driftwood that accumulates along the shore, and during the first stage the party indulges in story-telling, in social conversation, or cheery songs, until the bonfire has been reduced to coals, and then the roasting ears are brought out and each one, with a long stick sharpened at one end, roasts his own ear of corn. And such eating as these tender roasting ears make, when well-browned by the coals and buttered and salted! Then come the roasted marshmallows for dessert. Last night our young people had such a function down on the sand in front of "The Pioneer." The Easy Chair had something to do with the erection of the bonfire, and a glorious one it was, as the gentle south wind fanned it into a roar of flames that shone out like a beacon light, visible for miles along the shore. Pieces of carpet and even cushions were spread upon the sand, and a happy group of young and old gathered about it and told their campfire stories and sang their campfire songs under the glowing light of the bonfire and the softer light of the moon which added its luster to the scene. A young man by the name of W. T. Moore sang a sentimental love-song, to the great delight of the young people. By the way, this young man is to celebrate his seventy-fifth anniversary next week at this place, and we shall tell our readers about it. We are having a delightful visit now from L. C. Stow and wife, of Grand Rapids, who are on their way to Colorado, where they will at least spend the winter with their daughter, but we are hoping they will return by next summer. The breeze that comes over the lake to-day has the breath of autumn in it. The fishermen have lifted their nets for this season, and in another fortnight the summer population of this coast will mostly have departed, and a greater silence will reign along this shore.

The Call of the Homeless

From the time that Abraham came up out of Ur of the Chaldees to create a band of followers whose number should multiply until it became as the sands of the sea, to the present day, the altar, the tabernacle, the synagogue and the church building have been closely connected with the progress of God's kingdom in the world. At these places of worship man met with man and God met with them and renewed their spiritual strength for life's struggles. God has always urged that his people assemble at a certain place and he has promised to meet with them. "The Call of the Homeless" then is the call of God and is also the call of the Board of Church Extension which is set for the purpose of housing our mission churches which God gave us by the preaching of the Gospel.

When Abraham came up out of Ur of the Chaldees, at the call of God, every place where the Father appeared to him in his journey he erected an altar of stones. After God had brought the children of Israel out of their bondage in Egypt and had given them divers laws and ordinances to be observed, the Lord spake unto Moses and said, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they bring for me an offering; from every man that giveth it willingly with his heart you shall take the offering and let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them." In order that his laws and ordinances might be kept he provided meeting places for his people. He knew the nature of man—that he got inspiration and help from the assembled congregation. When David conceived the idea of building the temple the prophet of the Lord came to him and said, "Do all that is in thy heart, for the Lord is with thee." Then David began the most beautiful and costly house of worship that ever decorated the face of the earth. And when, in Solomon's day that temple was completed, on the day of its dedication the cloud containing the presence of the Lord rested over it, God giving his approval. When the children of Israel came back from their captivity they first repaired the temple and as fast as the people multiplied and towns sprang up in Palestine, in every one of these the Jewish synagogue was erected in which the Christ was preached in type and shadow and prophecy who was to come as the Saviour of the world. When the Jewish elders, as recorded in the seventh of Luke, urged Jesus to go and heal the centurion's servant it was on the ground of his having built them a synagogue.

Why Voltaire Built a Church.

Voltaire, who did not believe in the divinity of Christ, tells that he went to a little Swiss village on the border of France to write a book against Christ's claims. He became interested at once in a little church in the village where the whole town gathered for worship. He went with the crowd, became interested in the sermon, saw that the people lived it in their homes and business and as a result of his observations he went away without writing against the claims of our Lord. Before he left he erected them a stone building and on a marble slab over the door the Swiss villagers inscribed "Built by Voltaire," and the traveler's attention is called to it to this day. The lesson is plain. The presence of the church building has its influence when the throngs that pour out to attend the service are witnessed by the unbelieving and careless, and especially is this true when the people who attend the services live the Christ life.

The French and English Sunday.

Montalembert, one of the most eminent French statesmen, in speaking about the English observance of Sunday as a result of the habit of cherishing their churches, said: "Men are surprised sometimes by the ease with which the immense city of London is kept in order by a garrison of three small battalions and two squadrons; while to control the capital of France, which is half the size, 40,000 troops of the line and 60,000 national guards are necessary. But the stranger who arrives in London on a Sunday morning when he sees everything of commerce suspended in that gigantic capital in obedience to God; when, in the center of that colossal business he finds silence and repose scarcely interrupted by the bells which call to prayer and the immense crowds on their way to church, then his astonishment ceases."

General Grant's Firm Stand.

When General Grant was in Paris, the president of the Republic invited him to attend the Sunday races. He knew that to refuse such an invitation from the president of France would be considered by the French people especially discourteous, and yet he politely declined the invitation, saying that "It is not in accord with the custom of my country, or with the spirit of my religion, to spend Sunday in that way."

Non-church-going Nations.

Wilber F. Crafts says that the Sundayless and Sunday-breaking nations are poor. Poor physically—Italy once and France twice in ten years, have cut down their standards for soldiers because they are not strong physically; poor mentally—they have the greatest illiteracy; poor morally—they have the most vice; poor financially—their workmen, despite longer hours per day and one more day in the week, get the lowest wages; and they are also the worst off politically, vibrating between the extremes of despotism and anarchy. Joseph Cook said: "It does not seem to me accidental that Switzerland, Scotland, England and the United States, the countries which are church-going, constitute almost the entire map of self-government."

Christ's Example.

"In the critical hour of Christ's life he went up to the village synagogue on the stated day of rest. What, had he not risen above that? Could the dull preachings and the drawling prayers say anything to him? What charm could he longer feel in these childish Sunday usages? The decent dress, the restful hours, the following together of families, the walking to the house of God in company? Did he not live above all in a constant air of divine communion? Do what he might, go where he would, was he not always with the Father? Himself a better sanctuary than he could ever find? Yet, at Nazareth, where he had been brought up, he went, as his custom was, into the synagogue on the Sabbath day."—Martineau.

"As his custom was." Do we all make his custom ours? Shall attendance at God's house be an open question with our families on Sunday morning? We don't say to John, if he is well and able to work, "John, will you go to work to-day?" A great statesman once said, when he was asked to grant a business interview on Sunday: "I must keep one day in which to realize what I am and where I am going."

But, suppose for the parents and their children who take up residence in new towns there is no church home of their religious affiliation. No home in which the Lord's table can be spread on every first day of the week. No place where a Sunday-school can meet. The saloon, the home of the tippler, the gambler's home, the house for the licentious, the school house, the court house, the business house are all there, but no house of God in which the gospel is preached in its simplicity can be found anywhere. A band of Christ's disciples is in town but they are homeless. No church building is there to preach a sermon by its presence, to advertise to the community that God's people are here to fight down sin. Our missionaries in the country, supported by state and national boards, will tell you that the "Call of the Homeless" should be heeded; that it is imperative in our new towns that are springing up like magic all over the land. The "Call of the Homeless" is not in frontier towns of the West and Southwest alone. The "Frontier Call" is wherever a new town or a new city ward is growing. The Lord's house should be first in these new towns and wards, not last. If God's words and Christ's words are to be heeded, and if the observations of Montalembert, General Grant, Wilber F. Crafts and Martineau are to count for anything, we can not set aside the appeal of our homeless congregations. Every consideration that called them into existence compels us to keep them in existence by standing between them and failure. They do not deserve cold indifference at our hands, but the highest respect and honor. And it is for us who are strong to say whether they shall perish in their helplessness or live by the power of the helping hand of church extension.

Here are 152 appeals to be answered by the forthcoming September offering. It will take more than $100,000 to answer these. List of churches, by states, asking aid since January 1, 1907:

Alabama	2	Kansas	8
Arkansas	6	Kentucky	4
California	6	Louisiana	1
Canada	2	Massachusetts	1
Colorado	4	Michigan	5
Florida	1	Mississippi	3
Georgia	1	Missouri	10

Hawaii	1	Tennessee	2
Idaho	4	Texas	20
Indian Territory.	6	Washington	3
Illinois	9	West Virginia	3
Indiana	9	Wisconsin	1
		Total	152

This is the number of appeals that have come from thirty-nine states and territories to the board since January, 1907, to date. It will require more than $100,000 to answer these appeals. The money now in the Church Extension treasury is more than promised, and loans will close very rapidly in anticipation of our annual offering in September. We ought to hasten the day when all appeals can be answered promptly. There never was such an era of church building among our people. This most surely speaks of permanency.

Is "the Call of the Homeless" a Worthy One?

We can only judge by the past. We have now more than 1,100 homeless churches. What a mighty and multitudinous call! Shall we answer these? Are they worthy for whom we should do this?

Up to August 19, 1091 congregations have received loans from this board to help them build. Of this number 564 have paid their loans in full; 72 have paid out this year. There has been $670,803 returned on loans and paid in interest by these 1091 congregations aided. So carefully have these missions used the money that only $563 has been lost where church property had to be taken in by the board—voluntarily deeded to the board to sell by the few left in the eight congregations that have gone down. The board has handled all funds contributed ($608,579), plus the amount returned on loans ($670,803), in all aggregating $1,279,382 in loans to these thus far aided with the slight loss of $563. "The greatest statement in the history of finance," says one business man. "Wonderful" exclaim others. It is wonderful. We believe the brotherhood has a right to expect as great faithfulness from the 1,100 homeless ones yet to be housed as has been shown by the 1,100 already housed. Let the answer of our churches be made and their confidence be expressed in the September offering.

This "Call of the Homeless" must be answered. The Centennial aim of the Church Extension Board is to reach a million by 1909, so that the 1,100 homeless congregations can be sheltered.

Testimonial Business and the Coon Center Missionary Society

By Hamilton Jefferson Lintwhite

Does I know 'bout de bustin' loose, en de consequent bustin' up, er de Coon Center Missionary Society? I suttenly do. Some un it I saw, and part un it I was—es de good book say. I suttenly stood mighty close to de death bed er that enterprise. In fac', I may be regyarded as de proximate cause er dat fun'al; what you all might call de testimonial business bein' de remote—er procu'in' cause.

De testimonial business? Well, sah, I ain't whut you all white folks call an educated colored man. Yit all de same I is sho' done a whole lot er readin'. Dey was a time—foh I git de call to preach—when I tuck up de study er medicine. I read up all de symptoms er all de diseases what dey is—in all de almanacks whut I kind fine. I do dis in de long evenin's en durin' one whole winter.

I notice dat every man what write one er dem little books is got some kine er medicine whut he done fix up hise'f. He try de remedy on dis pusson en dat pusson twel he fine out 'zactly whar she cures an whar she slip up at: en atter while, he fine out 'zactly whut she's good foh.

'Cou'se all dem folks whut he done cured dey's so grateful dat dey kaint rest twel dey write and tell him whut he's done foh dem. Dis man's been cured un a cancer, en dat man's tuck and tuck de medicine foh de chills and fevah, and git fat an' hearty; dis woman's been cured er deefness, en dat woman's been snatched back fum de very brink er bald-haidedness. Dem testimonials come a rollin' in, en a pou'in' in, twell de kivers er dat almanack kaint skacely contain de good news.

So fur, so good. De Lawd done call me to preach, but yit I ain't nevah fo'git de facks I acquiah in dem scientific mundications.

Every thing go long mighty smooth wid me, es a ministeh, twel de meetin' er de Coon Center Missionary Convention, two yeahs ago.

Dey was a colored man, Misto T. Razzus Wash'ngton, whut git up in dat meetin' en say he gwine to hep de good cause erlong. He git out one er dese old-time shot-sacks, en he tuck out fo' dollars en plunk her down on de table.

Brer Chairman he smile, en he ax de Lawd to bless de givah er dis splendid contribusion. He say what de worl' needs is mo' men lack Brer Wash'ngton.

Right den en dar, I feel lack dey's a few remarks due fum me. I rise up on dat flo', en I call attention to de repo't dat is flyin' round de community dat Misto Wash'ngton is got whut you all white folks calls a mixed income; dat some er de money he lay by in dat sack he make haulin' cawdwood, en some he make shootin' craps; some un it he git sellin' chickens whut he raise in his own hen house, en some he git selling chickens whut he raise off de neighbors' hen-roos'es. En I ax de chairman ef he is able to recriminate de honest money in dat sack fum de tainted money.

De Chairman he up an ax Brer Wash'ngton ef dey ain't no way he kin extinguish between de coins whut represent de cawdwood fum dem whut represent de crap income.

Brer Wash'ngton, he say dey aint. En he say dar de money is on dat table. Dey kin take it er leave it; yit, ef she stay dar more'n ten minutes by de clock, she go back in dat shot-sack.

Den de Chairman remark dat dis aint no time to shet de doah of repentance on Brer Wash'ngton, er any othah man. Hit seem lack to him dat ef a man whut win money at craps is willin' to donate some un it to counteract de pernicuss inflooence er de crap game, his desiah ought to be respected.

Den Brer Ulcimer White he up an move dat dis gift be accepted an set aside foh de use er de mission in Crapjint Alley. De motion carry.

Nemmine! I lay low. Next week I expose de whole business in de chu'ch paper. I prove dat Brer Wash'ngton done buy fo' dollars wuth er silence on de subject er craps. I say dat ef we keep dat money we is sho' bound, as honest men, to delivah de goods we done sell to Misto T. Razzus Wash'ngton.

Same time, I pass de word roun' to dem whut side wid me, dat now's de time to hol up my han's. I aint fo'got dem medical studies, en I let de word go out dat de onliest way dey can hold up my han's is to write testimonials—lack dey does in de almanacks.

Right dar's whar de post-office in Coon Center gits busy cancelatin' postage stamps. Some er de testimonials go like dis:

"Dear Brer Madison: I thank de good Lawd dey's at least one man whut is got de grit en de grace en de literary ability ter rip ole T. Razzus Wash'ngton up de back. He is suttenly de colosseum thief er de universe."

"Dear Brer Madison: Hit 'em agin! En ef dat aint settle 'em, hit 'em some moah!"

"Dear Brer Madison: You is sho' done wipe up de groun' wid Brer Chairman. He's a good man, yit he aint no moral expert like whut you is."

"Dear Brer Madison: Yoah last paper in de Flagstaff was suttenly a Jim Dandy. Brer Chairman is a nice man, but when hit comes to de true inwahdness of a moral proposition you done got him beat by fo' lengths."

"Dear Brer Madison: Sence de 'mancipation proclamation, dey aint been no document published, in dese Nunited States, dat is equal to yoah last letter in de Flagstaff. Hit suttenly warmed my heart to read it. Ong core! ong core!"

En so on, en so on. At de nex' convention I rise up, en I start in to prove I is right in dat 'spute, kase I done got de testimonials to sho' foh it.

De emotional side er de colored man's nature is de place whar de colored man break down at. Dar's de weakest pint, en de weakest place hatter stan de strain: in dis case she sho' aint equal to de strain.

My daughter, whut has been in de Lincoln Institute, say dat in spiritual matters de manners er de colored man lack de repose whut marks de caste er Veyrdyvere. (I dunner no who Misto Veyrdyvere is. I spec he's some o' dese yer high-up white folks.) My observation teach me de colored folks is got plenty er repose; but de repose come in at de wrong place, en don't come in at de right place. In dis instance, dey aint no repose foh nobody—atter I git started on readin' dem testimonials. Trouble bust loose fum the word go. She bust loose in der fawn er razzors; hymn-books an ink-stan's flyin' throo de air; words an actions dat aint fitten foh a horse-race—much less foh a 'sembly er de saints.

Yassir. Hit suttenly break up de Missionary Society; but hit sho' teach ole man T. Razzus Wash'ngton whar he stand in de estimation er dem whut got de true intrust er de Lawd's work most at heart.

Who? Me? No, sah. I aint givin' you no fable nur no alligator. Dis yer is jest a plain antidote. De moral un it is: Let dem whut de shoe fits go en do likewise.

The Letter and the Spirit

By I. B. Grubbs

Professor of Exegesis, Bible College, Lexington, Ky.

"The letter killeth but the spirit giveth life." What was the distinction before the apostle's mind in presenting the antithesis between the letter and the spirit? And how does the former kill, and the latter give life? We will see from the context that our translators are fully justified in printing the word "spirit" without a capital letter, which sufficiently indicates that "the spirit" here referred to, is not the Holy Spirit. It would indeed be in harmony with the teaching of the Scriptures, to represent the Holy Spirit as the source of spiritual life in believers; but that is not the thought before the mind of the apostle in this antithesis. What, then, is the important distinction with which the interpreter here has to deal? The meaning is brought out very clearly in the immediate context. And it is strange that very many have overlooked it, and treated us to a great diversity of erroneous explanations utterly foreign to the apostle's course of reasoning in this significant passage.

Without pausing to consider these incorrect interpretations, let us follow closely the connection of thought, and thereby determine the true meaning of the passage. Paul first affirms that God made him and others "sufficient as ministers of the new covenant." He then adds: Not of the letter, but of the spirit; for "the letter kills, but the spirit gives life;" to which he still further adds; "But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones came with glory." * * * "how shall not rather the ministration of the spirit be with glory?" Here, unquestionably, is a constrast between the two covenants—the old and the new, and such a description of the old as justifies the apostle in regarding it as "the letter that kills," since it is represented as "the ministration of death written and engraven in stones." Accordingly, the distinction that is here emphasized between the letter and the spirit is a distinction between the old covenant and the new, and his contention with his legalistic opponents with their Pharisaic adherence to the old covenant gains force from his telling argument in the case. They were clinging to "the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones," while he and his fellow-ministers were advocating "the spirit that gives life," the new covenant which brings salvation through the grace of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

This prepares the way for a correct answer to the other questions propounded above. "How does the letter—the old covenant, kill?" And "how does the spirit, the new covenant, give life?" Were men as sinless as angels, the legal covenant would not be to them any more than to the angels, the ministration of death, otherwise called the ministration of condemnation in the ninth verse. But "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God," and it is thus through personal imperfection and sinfulness that they have fallen under the curse, or condemning power of the law, which demands nothing less than moral and spiritual perfection as a condition of justification. "For it is written, cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them." The apostle illustrates by his own experience this effect of the law upon the sinful. After saying, in Rom. 7:7, that he "had not known sin except through the law," he adds the following in verses 9-12: "And I was alive apart from the law, once; but when the commandment came, sin revived and I died; and the commandment, which was unto life, this I found to be unto death; for sin, finding occasion through the commandment beguiled me and through it slew me. So that the law is holy and the commandment holy, and righteous, and good."

Now, Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law (Gal. 3:13). So that "there is now no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 4:1). By entering into him they have become justified through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus (Rom. 3:24), which, according to Eph. 1:7 and Col. 1:14, is to be justified or redeemed through the gracious "forgiveness of sins," secured by the redemptive death of Christ. Here then, lies the prime difference between the two covenants—the old and the new. The former visited upon the transgressor condemnation and death. The latter brings to him salvation through forgiveness on the condition of faith in and obedience to the gospel of the grace of God. And thus it is that "the spirit giveth life"—that the new covenant secures acceptance with God through the forgiveness of sins—that the gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to every one who believes," in the broad sense of a full surrender to its gracious demands.

By observing that the life-giving efficacy of the new covenant stands in contrast with the death-dealing power of the old, we escape the false exegesis of those—and their name is legion—who suppose that the former denotes the spiritualizing influence of the gospel on the heart, of which the old covenant is supposed to be destitute. Many would say with Waite of the Bible Commentary series, that "the old was a dispensation of external law, making exactions, but communicating no inward power of obedience." But if, under the old economy, there was no power to effectually influence the heart, how could David affirm that "the law of the Lord is perfect, restoring the soul"? This shows that the old covenant was not a mere "dispensation of external law, making exactions," but that it so enforced its requirements, by emphatic warnings and lofty motives, as to turn men from their evil ways and guide them into the Composition of the Famous Food.

A wide spread interest has been created among good livers, as to the composition of Grape-Nuts, the food that has become popular and famous the world over.

It has long been known to physicians, chemists and food experts, that the starchy portion of entire wheat and barley flours is transformed into a true and very choice sugar, by the act of intestinal digestion in the human body. This sugar is identical with, and is known as grape-sugar, and it is in condition for immediate transformation into blood and the necessary structure from which the delicate nerve centers are built up.

A food expert followed a line of experiments until he produced the food called Grape-Nuts, of which grape-sugar forms the principal part, and it is produced by following Nature's processes, in a mechanical way. That is, heat, moisture, and time are the methods employed and directed by scientific facts gained in research.

Grape-Nuts food is probably entitled to the claim of being the most perfectly adapted food for human needs in existence. Certain it is that the user's delight in the flavour and the perfect action of intestinal digestion during the use of Grape-Nuts is satisfying, and the added strength of body confirms the fact. A Surprising Experience

By J. D. Williams

I have recently returned from a six weeks' visit in my native state, West Virginia. I had many pleasant experiences, but none better than the one I am about to relate. While a Baptist I was secretary and programist for the Ministers' Institute of the Hopewell Baptist Association for about six years, and also president one year. I attended the semi-annual meeting at Russellville, Fayette county, June 27-30, 1907, having been absent about seven years. The meeting was well attended and a number of my old friends in the ministry were present. They gave me a cordial welcome and invited me to join in the discussions, which I was glad to do.

Before adjournment on Friday they voted a request that I preach Saturday at 11 a. m. I was confident that most, if not all of them, had never heard our plea, so I determined to use this opportunity to enlighten them. Indeed this was my purpose in attending the meeting. I had longed to preach to them the gospel also. So I took for my subject: "On the Safe Side." I think that before I got through some of them thought they were on the wrong side. I gave them the very best sermon I could, showing that to take Christ and the Bible alone as our guide is to be on the safe side, and that sectarianism is wrong, causing divisions more and more and blinding and confusing those without. I was surprised at the effect. The worst the president could say was: "The sermon can be criticised." I thought that mild enough for a compliment. One good minister, a special friend of mine, who took pride in being "sound in Baptist doctrine," said. "Brother Williams, you did well." Then he said: "What would I have to do to become a minister of the Church of Christ?" I said: "Simply drop the name Baptist and join a Church of Christ." Then he wanted to know how his church might become a Church of Christ. I told him, "Just in the same way, by dropping the name Baptist and taking the Scriptural name Church of Christ." "But," said he, "won't we have to practice open communion and teach that baptism is for the remission of sins?" I said: "We do not find either 'open' or 'close' communion in the New Testament, but we do find that baptism is for the remission of sins, so that you simply take the Bible as your guide and do what it teaches."

Another good brother, a minister, came forward and said that he heard a minister of the Church of Christ preach that it was impossible to be saved without baptism, and that he enforced his teaching by saying that if a person were to confess Christ and die on the way to the water he would be lost. That brother wanted me to give our views on baptism and in what view. I told him that the brother he had heard preach was not a representative of the Scriptural teaching on baptism. I said: "We believe and teach that remission of sins is an act of God, and takes place not in the penitent believer's heart, but with God, and that God has promised the remission of sins to the alien sinners only on condition that he believe, repent and be baptized. I told him that Baptists contend that the sinner is pardoned and saved before baptism through faith and repentance alone, provided, however, he is baptized to show that he was sincere, and that Baptists put remission of sins for conversion. Then to clear his mind I told him how that God healed the bitten, dying Israelites because they obeyed and looked at the brazen serpent, and that he healed Naaman of his leprosy because he obeyed and dipped in the Jordan seven times, also, how that a young man and a young woman may believe and trust each other and their hearts be united in love before marriage, but they are not legally one, nor married, until the ceremony is performed according to the law. His face brightened up and that old sectarian prejudice was gone, and he said: "That is all right, that is just what I believe." Out on the streets the people were saying, "That is the best sermon ever preached here. We never heard anything like it." I was asked to take a place on the program at the next meeting, December, 1907.

Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for the Baptists is, that they may be saved, for I bear them record that they have a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge. They need the truth in love. I am praying that I may yet be permitted to go back to West Virginia and preach the glorious plea to them.

Not Denominational

By W. O. Moore

Christ said to his apostles, "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, and I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Christ in his final charge to his apostles gives specific directions.

1. He says: "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations." In other words, they were to so preach the Gospel as to make disciples. One becomes a disciple of Christ by learning what Christ claimed for himself and espousing his doctrine. Those discipled to Christ are so taught and persuaded as to commit themselves fully in heart and life to Christ's authority. Is this work denominational? Do not all who preach the gospel claim to be instructing, to be winning souls to Christ? Should they not be satisfied to make people what Christ wants them to be and nothing more or less?

2. Christ also said: "Baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Is there a church that would hesitate to baptize those discipled—those constituted believers—into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit? Some might say: "There would be a lack of agreement as to what constitutes baptism." All agree that immersion is baptism. Is there a church that would refuse to immerse those disciled to Christ into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit? There can be union on what all concede to be truth. That baptism is immersion is not disputed. It is denominational to substitute something else for baptism.

3. Those discipled and baptized into Christ are assured of redemption from this? If a believer is saved is he saved without the obedience of faith? If a believer is saved, can one say that a bap-

BAD DREAMS

Frequently Due to Coffee Drinking.

One of the common symptoms of Coffee poisoning is the bad dreams that spoil what should be restful sleep. A man who found the reason says:

"Formerly I was a slave to coffee. I was like a morphine fiend, could not sleep at night, would roll and toss in my bed and when I did get to sleep was disturbed by dreams and hobgoblins, would wake up with headaches and feel bad all day, so nervous I could not attend to business. My writing looked like bird tracks, I had sour belchings from the stomach, indigestion, heartburn and palpitation of the heart, constipation, irregularity of the kidneys, etc.

"Indeed, I began to feel I had all the troubles that human flesh could suffer, but when a friend advised me to leave off coffee I felt as if he had insulted me. I could not bear the idea, it had such a hold on me and I refused to believe it the cause.

"But it turned out that no advice was ever given at a more needed time for I finally consented to try Postum and with the going of coffee and the coming of Postum all my troubles have gone and health has returned. I eat and sleep well now, nerves steadied down and I write a fair hand (as you can see), can attend to business again and rejoice that I am free from the monster coffee."

Ten day's trial of Postum in place of coffee will bring sound, restful, refreshing sleep. "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. Some physi-tized believer is not saved? Here some one may say that many claim that the remission of sins takes place before baptism. Suppose they do. Is it denominational to affirm that baptized believers are saved? Is it denominational to affirm that faith without works is dead? "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life; but he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

4. Christ directed his apostles to teach those discipled and baptized into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit to observe all things whatsoever he commanded. Is this denominational? This means teaching for doctrine the commandments of Christ and not the commandments of men. Is it not the aim of all churches to teach fully the will of Christ?

5. Christ assured his apostles that he would be with them. Is it denominational to assure those who are faithful to Christ that Christ will be with them to aid and comfort?

Fifty Minutes of the Sunday-School Hour

How it may be Devoted to the Actual, Undisturbed Discussion of the Lesson, and the Spirituality of the Entire Church Deepened.

By Frank H. Wolfe

Provide each family with a sufficient number of small blank cards to last them, say six months. Instruct each scholar to write his name on one of these cards before leaving home, and bring it with him. Have the secretary and his assistants stationed at the various doors of entrance, and take up these cards as the scholars enter.

Just inside and near each door have a birthday box with some small, plain envelopes near by. Print the word "Birthdays" on this box in bold letters. Instruct those having birthday offerings to stop as they enter and place this amount in one of the envelopes, with their name and the amount written on the outside.

Have a chart blackboard upon which has been printed all the announcements that you desire the Sunday-school to see put up in a conspicuous place, so that it can be plainly seen from all entrances.

Open the school by singing a good lively song or two, offer a prayer and have the classes repair to their respective places.

Have each class numbered or named—preferably named—and have a collection basket bearing this number or name in a convenient place, so that members may drop in their offerings as they pass to their places in the class. The teacher should lead his class and drop in his offering first, thus reminding the remainder of the class of this important part of the program.

Have a short class prayer by all means. Let the teacher offer this prayer the first Sunday, some one of the scholars the next, still another the next, and so on until all have had this golden opportunity, when the same course should be repeated. It may be a little task to get some of them started to praying, but they will gradually grow accustomed to it, and when once established in the school its value can not be measured. All departments will profit wonderfully by this one thing alone. Teachers in the primary, and possibly in the junior departments, should teach their scholars little prayers that will serve them until they become old enough to pray without aid.

As soon as class prayer has been offered in each of the classes, the secretary or one of his assistants should gather up the collection baskets.

During the progress of the lesson the secretary should make out his report, marking all absent who did not bring cards. His roll, of course, is either made up by departments or classes, whichever pleases the superintendent, and the report for the day, as regards attendance and collections, is made up accordingly, all totals being placed at the bottom. Names of those making birthday offerings, and the amounts given, should also be included in the report. This report should be withheld until the last bell has sounded and the classes begin to break up, when it should be placed in a conspicuous place. Each member will have seen and read the report ere order has been restored.

Papers should be handed the scholars by the teacher as they are leaving the class.

The remaining few minutes should be given either to a general discussion of the lesson, in which its great purpose is brought out clearly to all, or the scholars may be given an opportunity to ask questions concerning the lesson. After this a song and dismissal.

Those coming in late, but before the classes assemble, should be marked present and permitted to take part; but those entering after class prayer, whether they be officers, teachers or scholars, should be marked absent, and should be given a seat with the visitors, not being permitted to take any part in the exercises. This may seem a little strenuous, but should never be varied from. Without discipline there can be no successful Sunday-school, and those who are wont to get angry at such treatment at first will be its most ardent supporters in the end.

This order of things may be varied occasionally, say every three months, when a special program may be rendered and small prizes given for regular attendance.

Scholars who are sick may send their card by some friend. This card should bear the word "Sick" beneath its owner's name. At the end of six months these cards may be returned to their respective owners for use another six months.

This will be found to be a very inexpensive and expedient way of keeping a complete tab on the school; of acquiring greater knowledge concerning the scriptures; of deeper spirituality and of better discipline. To schools needing improvement along any of the lines set forth above, I commend these plans.

Testing Diamonds By Cal Ogburn

I was talking with an old diamond setter a few days ago and after we had discussed the production of these precious stones, their value, brilliancy and many other things pertaining to them, I suggested that he tell me how to detect artificial diamonds, to which he replied: "It is not an easy thing for an inexperienced person to distinguish between genuine and artificial diamonds." Then he talked about "fire" and facets, concerning which I understood but little more than Aristides knew about automobiles. All he said was as unintelligible to me as French without a teacher. He concluded, however, by saying, "One of the simplest methods is to test them with a keen file. Genuine diamonds can not be scratched while artificial diamonds show the marks of the file."

When he gave me this bit of information I learned something that to me was practical, even if I should never see another diamond, or have an opportunity to witness the testing of one in the manner stated.

Possibly you have not noticed it, but I have observed that there is a striking similarity between diamonds and people. We know there are diamonds that are genuine, as well as people who are genuine. Judging from appearance, it is not easy for a novice to distinguish between real diamonds dug out of the earth and "paste diamonds" made in some clever artisan's laboratory; but an inexperienced person, with a sharp file, can readily apply to them this simple test to his entire satisfaction. It is a little "rough" to be sure, on both kinds of diamonds, to have the saw-like edge of the hard steel drawn repeatedly across their polished faces, but it is rougher for those that receive the marks of the file, for the fact is advertised that they are diamonds only in name.

It is not easy sometimes for us to distinguish between genuine and artificial people, if we look on the outward appearance; but the rough experiences to which both classes are subjected make very plain the difference between the true and the false. When once the test has been made, no artistic setting or occasion for brilliant display can efface from one's mind the humiliating fact that the "showy" person, who could not endure the simple test, is nothing more than a "paste diamond" on exhibition, and we think, if we do not say, "How cheap!"

Our Budget

—Church Extension!

—Next Lord's day is the offering.

—If not then, take it another Sunday.

—All September is given to church extension.

—We print elsewhere a concise statement of figures.

—"The Call of the Homeless."

—Be sure to read this striking presentation of an all-important cause.

—We are privileged to publish this week the very excellent address of E. P. Wise to the Ohio State Convention. He is wise indeed in his remarks on "The Church as Seen by a Pastor." Every church member will be profited by carefully reading and pondering the paper. We have not space to call attention to other interesting articles in this number.

—We are not making big announcements, but we believe we will "make good." We are in for no eight weeks' campaign, but for a whole year of useful service. Make it possible for us to help you more than ever by co-operating more than ever with us.

—Give church extension the right-of-way in every church!

—Remember, we are reaching for the million dollar mark by our Centennial.

—This week practically closes the vacation period with most vacationists, and the churches will take on new life with the beginning of September.

—A few hay fever victims will have to linger away from the cities a few days longer, but even they will turn their faces homeward by the time of the earliest frost.

—Let the spirit of harmony and of renewed activity in Christian work pervade all the churches, and direct the course of our ministers and editors. It is no time for controversy, but for work in the Master's name and spirit.

—Our great annual convocation at Norfolk is approaching, and all minds and hearts should be attuned to the high purposes of God in planning and working for the world's redemption. That convention should register high water mark in all our great missionary, educational and philanthropic enterprises.

—Through July J. M. Monroe, of Oklahoma City, dedicated new churches of Christ at Jones City, Crescent and Mangrum, Okla. During the same month he promoted the building of churches at Pautuska, capital of the Osage Nation; also at Foraker and Minco, securing lots, raising subscriptions and starting the work.

—Percy G. Cross is an aggressive minister. He has only been at Sweetwater, Texas, a short time, but already a new building project has been launched with more than $4,000 raised towards the $12,000 needed. He writes "the Bethany number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST reached its 'zenith.' Congratulations."

—F. F. Grim says that outside the larger cities, New Mexico is the greatest missionary field of which he knows. He recently made a trip to a new town some seventy-five miles west of Texico and preached three sermons, the first ever delivered there from a Christian preacher. We have more than thirty members in and around that town.

—Mrs. Alonzo J. Wagner reports an unusually interesting session of the Bay Union C. W. B. M. auxiliaries August 13. One hundred and ten delegates were present. A generous silver offering was made for the Chinese school in San Francisco. A resolution of sympathy to Sister M. E. Harlan, over the decease of her husband, was adopted.

—Hamlin and Daugherty are in a meeting at Gainesville, Texas, in an auditorium seating 1,500 people. George L. Bush, whose articles on "How to Have a Working Church" in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST met with such favor, is the minister. There is an abundance of electric lights in the auditorium, while the air is cooled by electric fans.

—Marion Stevenson has stepped out of the Bible school editorial traces long enough to hold an institute for J. S. Magee at Northampton, Mo. From there he goes to the Fairfield (Iowa) District Convention.

—Paul Moore, our assistant editor, is visiting with his parents and other dear friends in Garrison Park, near Pentwater, Mich. He will help in the celebration of his father's seventy-fifth birthday. All wish him a restful, happy and merited vacation.

—The new board of Nebraska has now a splendid property for convention purposes and all bills paid, nearly $700 having just been raised to eliminate the deficit. De Loss Smith, who has been surveying the ground at Lincoln, Neb., where the next Scoville campaign is to be, is reported as having said that he has never seen brighter prospects for a great meeting.

—The laying of the corner stone of the new church at Shawnee, Okla., has taken place. The ministers of other churches dismissed their congregations to take part in the functions of the evening. This is perhaps the first corner-stone laying ever held in the Southwest by lamplight, but F. L. Van Voorhis says the brethren are fully satisfied with the experiment.

—A. Immanuel Zellar, of Cuba, Ill., has just received the confession of a prominent citizen of that community at the age of 70 years. The man was deaf and his conversion was largely effected by the use of the typewriter. The audience was greatly affected as the penitent read his confession and acceptance of Jesus. The Cuba church is prospering now as never before.

—Walter Callison, with his wife as singer, began work at Irving, Ore., last December. Though others had labored there before, there was no regular service and the membership was scattered. Now there is organization and improvements have been made in the building. Charles Curtis, a student of the Divinity School at Eugene, recently held a three weeks' meeting with eight additions.

—Mrs. H. E. Wilhite still continues to have a high fever, and the evangelist has been uncertain as to whether he ought to leave her to fulfill his engagement at Bonner Springs, Kans. His last meeting at Bolivar, Mo., closed with the largest attendance ever known at a religious service in the community. In all, there were 100 additions to the church, the pastor's salary was increased by $200 and a new building is now being discussed.

—The work at the University Place Church, Seattle, Wash., is in fine condition under the leadership of Thomas J. Shuey. The membership has more than doubled, the church building has been seated, papered, a new furnace installed as well as a new organ, etc. The First Church is doing well, too, under Brother Chapman's leadership. He is now in the mountains on his vacation.

—M. S. Johnson, after an unusually successful ministry at Litchfield, Ill., has resigned. He will move to some educational center as soon as his successor is secured. During his three years at Litchfield, the church has more than doubled and the Sunday-school trebled in attendance. The building has been remodeled and enlarged to double its former capacity, and the work has been very prosperous. Brother Johnson attributes its success largely to the help of the wise, consecrated board and an active and united membership.

—The First Church at Youngstown, Ohio, has for over a month been entirely out of debt. A fellowship social was held during which the notes were burned, some of these being of years' standing. Extensive repairs have recently been made upon raised for this special purpose and the church owes no man anything but love. The salary of the pastor, John Ray Ewers, has been increased, and in the first six months of the year ninety-five persons were added to the membership.

—Frank Lanehart, who will do evangelistic work for Louisiana, signs himself "circuit rider." He reports a successful meeting at Mansfield, where there is a new and beautiful church. For years Sister Stone, one of the oldest Disciples in the state, had stood as the sole representative of primitive Christianity, and she has lived to see her prayers realized. The new church will be dedicated as soon as the pews are all installed. Then Otis Hawkins will hold a meeting.

—F. P. Arthur, of Grand Rapids, Mich., is writing the life of Dr. Robert Richardson. He is grateful for all valuable assistance given to him up to this time. Prof. C. L. Loos has written the introduction, and he trusts that those who have letters or a knowledge of incidents in the history of Doctor Richardson will kindly send these at once to Brother Arthur that the work may not be retarded. This is a book that should enlist the interest of the older brethren especially. The building now occupied was constructed in 1887, with S. W. P. Richardson as the pastor.

—The Board of Church Extension has received since August 1 three annuity gifts—$100 from a friend in New York, $150 from a brother in Pennsylvania and $1,000 from a sister in Minnesota. Friends of church extension should show their appreciation of the annuity plan by placing money in this fund from month to month. The time of our annual offering is near at hand, and the annuity fund should show a large increase over last year's receipts. For information in regard to the annuity plan, address G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo.

—The following new missionaries of the Foreign Society will sail from San Francisco on the steamship Korea September 24: C. E. Robinson, Joplin, Mo., Sendai, Japan; Miss Essie Forsyth, Joplin, Mo., Sendai, Japan; F. C. Buck, Knoxville, Ill., China; Leslie Wolf and wife, Zearing, Iowa, Manila, P. I.; Miss Edna Kurz, Cleveland, Ohio, Nankin, China; Miss Pearl B. Miller, Chicago, Ill., Wuhu, China; Miss Inez Logan, Kilgore, Ky., Vigan, P. I. There will also be on this ship Dr. E. I. Osgood and wife and three children, returning to Chu Cheo, China, who have been home on a year's vacation. Also, Miss Jessie J. Asbury, returning to Akita, Japan.

—The church at Pomona, Cal., is able to report during the past year money raised for current expenses $2,316, and for missions and benevolences $2,242. This is a proportion that few churches can show. This year this church has taken a named loan fund of $5,000 in the Church Extension work and made its offering towards that fund. It is also expending $4,000 or more in building improvements. The church has a membership of 375 and its Sunday-school enrollment is the same. Madison A. Hart, whose fine article on the Lord's Supper we printed in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a few weeks ago, is the present pastor of this church.

It Makes the Baby Strong.

Good milk contains in the most easily digested form all the elements necessary to the building of bone, flesh and muscle. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has raised three generations of strong and healthy babies. Has no equal as a baby food.

—Guy L. Zerby, of Tampico, Ill., used two weeks of a vacation granted him by his church for a brief trip in Arkansas. He preached at Hope, where Percy Cross did such excellent work. It is a congregation of great strength when it is aroused. He thinks that J. J. Taylor, the new State evangelist, will stir up the work in Arkansas. He was greatly impressed with the strategic improvements of Hot Springs and our duty as a brotherhood to our churches there. Brother Zerby paid an early call to the Christian Publishing Co., which he pronounces a modern and well-equipped establishment.

—A social settlement is an assured fact in Youngstown, Ohio. Our ministers, John R. Ewers and Walter S. Goode, are leaders in the movement, being respectively president and vice-president of the board. A valuable lot has been secured and over $18,000 had been assured when this information was sent to us. The difficulties of work in a city like Youngstown may be to some extent appreciated when it is known that 67 per cent of the population is foreign. R. G. Manley, a recent graduate from Bethany, has been called as worker among men and boys, but there are to be fifty other workers. The population of the city is 75,000.

—The work goes on well at the Shot Ridge Memorial Christian Church, Butte, Mont. Here Edward Oliver Tilburn has been leading since April 7. Brother Tilburn and his wife had a warm reception from his new congregation. He writes that he finds many who come from the East who fail to make themselves known, and he makes the request that ministers having members about to remove to Butte should inform him of the fact. Building plans in the shape of transforming the basement of the church into a Sunday-school room and the erection of a parsonage have been under way. The Ladies' Aid, he reports, is a power there. Their earnings average about $1,000. The membership of the church is less than 200. He expects to begin a meeting October 1.

—W. A. Meloan writes of the visit of Frank S. Ford, of San Francisco, paid to the church at Montgomery City, Mo.: "His coming was a blessing to our people. To me it was more; it was a sweet benediction from God. I lived over again the days of my ministry in Oakland and Los Gatos. I found myself walking the streets of Oakland and San Francisco, and again climbing the hills and valleys of our mountain home at Los Gatos. Our talks will linger with me the balance of my life. He made me feel, as never before, that my ministry on the Pacific coast was not in vain. Brother Ford is a mighty man of God, and I pray God to give him length of days and strength of mind to build up the cause of Christ in the great city of San Francisco. Our offering to the work he presented was $47.60."

—W. A. Fite, pastor of the church at Fulton, Mo., reports that A. F. Roadhouse, a Presbyterian preacher who has for the past year been in Westminster College and preaching for churches near Fulton, has just taken his membership with our church here. He will enter the Bible College at Columbia in September to finish his education. Brother Fite says he is a young man of extraordinary ability, having a most enviable reputation as preacher among the churches he has served. Finding himself out of harmony with Presbyterian creeds and recognizing the scripturalness of our position and people, he decided, after a thorough investigation, to join the ranks of our ministry. We are sure that he will be warmly welcomed and everything possible done to make him feel that we are a people after the New Testament pattern.

—Walter E. Harman, pastor of the church at Rushville, Ill., is closing a fruitful ministry of two and one-half years there. During this period there have been about 100 baptisms and 30 added to the congregation otherwise. At Bethany, where Brother Harman preaches each Lord's day afternoon, there have been 21 additions, and at Pleasant View, where he preaches on alternate Saturday nights, 16 have been added. The building at Rushville has been thoroughly remodelled at an expense of about $2,700, and is now the best church in the state. His resignation was rejected by the congregation but Brother Harman adheres to his intention to enter Drake University in September. He will be open for engagement with some church within reach of Des Moines.

—C. P. Smith has tendered his resignation to the Main Street Christian Church, Mason City, Iowa, to take effect December 1. This is due chiefly, we understand, to a desire to escape the extreme cold of the Iowa winter. The work will be left in excellent condition. He expects to make the closing three months of his labor the most helpful of his entire ministry. During the past seventeen months 60 new members have been received at regular services. An average of eight calls per day for himself and wife is his record. He has sought thoroughly to organize every department of the work, and the financial condition of the church is reported to be better than it has been for years. Nearly $8,000 has been raised during his leadership, $4,000 being applied to the church debt, $3,000 being devoted to current expenses and the remainder going to missions. He has not yet decided on his future.

—In another column will be found under the title "Statement and Correction," Bro. Cephas Shelburne's position relative to a pastoral letter, which was published in our columns under date of August 1. Brother Shelburne correctly states the facts in the case so far as we know them. The "letter" came to our office in tract form without any indication upon its imprint that there was an attempt to create the impression that it was written by the pastor of Huntington, Ind., but we supposed it was entirely his own composition. When we requested that we might have the privilege of printing it in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and thus giving it a wider field of service, he informed us that he laid no claim to the authorship and that any one could use the letter. His name was put with the title by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and a footnote "Budget" paragraph pointed out that Brother Shelburne did not claim it as his own. We now learn that E. L. Frazier is the original author and we gladly make this fact known.

Illinois Convention.

The state convention meets at Jacksonville September 9-12. Delegates send names to C. L. De Pew, if entertainment is desired. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished. You will receive a hearty welcome.

Missions at Rochester.

Stephen J. Corey, secretary of the F. C. M. S., who served the Columbia Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., as pastor for three years, visited us recently and gave us a most helpful address.

Brother and Sister Deiter, returned missionaries from Brazil, who went out from this church six years ago, were also with us. This church, though only ten years old, is already an historic church.

J. Frank Green, Minister.

A Three-Cornered Contest.

I. H. Fuller writes of a very helpful three-cornered Bible school contest suggested by Ben F. Hill, pastor at California, Mo. The time was for a ten weeks' period. The points were for four things. The results were as follows:

PLACE—	Attendance.	Attendance of Church Members.	Teachers' ...*	Collection...*
Plattsburg	1,070	575	.889	$ 43.12
California	1,723	901	.934	88.88
La Monte	1,701	1,101	.975	108.43

*Per cent.

Plattsburg won 9 points, California 19 and La Monte 21. As the latter place is a village of 500 people with four churches besides our, this is a fine showing. Miss Eva Lemert was with this school nearly a week and Brother Fuller says she helped them to know the value of work. The superintendent and all the teachers did faithful work. The attendance was 259 and the pastor's class of young men and women now has 50. This is one of the best churches and schools in Central Missouri. A meeting is to begin September 15 with R. Tibbs Maxey and Jesse Wilkinson as preachers.

A Blessed Reunion.

It was "Harding Day." The First Christian Church was filled to overflowing August 18. Our dearly beloved brother, P. W. Harding, had a family reunion. We had Harding solos, quartets, duets, and most of the music was composed by Bro. P. W. Harding's son, Will A. Harding.

It was a very impressive service and many were moved to tears by the inspiring and soul-stirring songs.

Mexico, Mo. W. F. Traughber.

A Statement and Correction.

As a number of requests have come to me asking for the publication, in tract form, of the "Pastoral Letter," which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of August 1st, I wish to make this statement: The letter is not mine, and I did not intend to publish it as my own production, and it was so stated in a note, but I fear not sufficiently explanatory. My connection with the Letter is this: One of my faithful and consecrated members, E. E. Allen, had the Letter in tract form, which was given to him when he united with the church some fifteen years before. He did not know its author, as no name was given. This Letter he had printed after revision to suit our local needs, at his own expense and given out to the new members, some 700 having been brought into the church under my ministry. I sent a copy of the Letter to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and they asked for its publication. I wrote then that I was not the original author of the Letter, and gave them its history as far as I then knew it. Since then I have learned that Brother E. L. Frazier is the author of the Letter as it originally appeared some twenty years ago, under the title, "Pastoral Letter to a Young Christian," and to him should be given the glory. I have been careful to make my articles and sermons my own, hence this explanation.

A Generous Proposition.

At a meeting of the Garrison Park Association, recently, it was voted to offer a reduction of 25 per cent on the very moderate prices fixed on the lots, to purchasers who will close the contract for such lots before January 1, and who will agree to erect a cottage during the coming autumn or the following summer. As these lots are bound to enhance in value, now is a rare opportunity for brethren to secure a summer home at reasonable rates. Prices range from $100 to $300. Address Garrison Park Company, Pentwater, Mich., or 2712 Pine St., St. Louis.

CHURCH EXTENSION RECEIPTS.

COMPARATIVE FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

From October 1, 1906, to August 1, 1907.

Contributing churches for 10 months—
Last Year	778
This year.	654
Loss	124

Amount Contributed for 10 months—
Last year.	$13,167.93
This year.	11,433.35
Loss.	$ 1,734.58

It will be noticed that since last October the churches have fallen behind on their offerings $1,734.58 as compared with the same period last year, and that we have fallen behind is not due to a lack of interest in the work. Our gains are made in the September offering. It is hoped that each church will take pride in raising the same amount as last year, and as much more as possible, and that many new ones will contribute that have never had fellowship in this work. Last year we had a gain of nearly $12,000 from the churches and 275 new contributing congregations. We must hold this gain and make another if we are to do any worthy thing toward our Centennial aims.

The California Convention.

I presume it is well that all the good people east of the Rocky Ridge cannot come and tent with us at one of our conventions at Santa Cruz by the Sea. For if they should, they would be liable on their return to their Eastern home to have a treatment for dementia Californica. Of course the native Californian "has it bad," and it is "awful catching." Every convention we have is the best, and our Eastern visitors are ready and willing to join with us in building these tabernacles, one for us, one for the folks at home, and one for themselves, and we are always willing that they should thus feel and talk to us.

At the opening of the convention the attendance was large. The auditorium on the first evening exhibited a vast sea of faces. The address by the Methodist minister was an eloquent greeting to a great evangelistic people who, he said, had stood for great principles and whose influence was telling in no uncertain way on the movements of the religious world; that they would want to join with us in carrying the Gospel into every unsanctified house; that the Christian churches have proven themselves to be uncompromising against every phase of sin; and that their marvelous success proved their great efficiency in every good word and work. We never had a better chairman and convention president than Judge McCoy, who can preach just as good a sermon as he can make a plea before a court. Then there was Judge Bridgeford, big lawyer and preacher, who was ready to take a part in the convention activities.

The report of our California church work by Secretary D. A. Russell was extremely gratifying. More of our California churches were on the "roll of honor" as contributing churches than ever before in our history. Furthermore, notwithstanding the year of disaster fell heavily upon us, the reports of contributions to state work and the number of additions during the past year, compared with a dozen of the best churches of the Mississippi Valley, showed that our churches had contributed on the average over three times as much as the Eastern churches and five times as many additions.

This makes us think our California field is not such a hard field after all. We expect to keep two evangelists in the field all next year. The Sunday-school days of the convention, presided over by Brother Picton, of Woodland, were full of interest, with encouraging reports from all parts of the state. The plan is to place a Sunday-school evangelist on the docket and send him forth to do special Sunday-school work.

The C. W. B. M. have some fine workers of their own, but the presence of Mrs. Harrison was a great inspiration to them and lifted them to a higher plane. These noble women have erected a neat little cottage on their lot near the Tabernacle, and call it "Rest Cottage," and so noted by an artistic painted sign over the door.

The Christian Endeavorers, under the management of President McAneney and a good committee, proved themselves to be on the firing line of Christian work. They have established the "Students' Ministerial Loan Fund," designed to help young men in a course of study in Berkeley Bible Seminary. The Bible Seminary, under the management of President McAneny and Dean Van Kirk, has had the most prosperous year of its history. Plans are being laid to erect a fine University building to accommodate the pressing demand for more room. It has been proved that the California climate is better adapted to study than any other climate in the land. Hence the pressing demand for greater accommodations. The men's banquet at the Casino was a brilliant success and will be an important feature of future conventions.

The visiting brethren were a godsend and J. H. Mohorter gave such stirring sermons that we felt we had reached the mountain top. The music, like everything else, was at high tide. S. W. Doughty, of Oregon, was leader, and Mrs. Cutler the organist. They had a large choir and a number of soloists. All the addresses were up to the highest standard. The moon was full, the tide was full, and the disciples were full of glory, good cheer and good resolves to win California to Christ. There was a great mining of the Stones, Rocks and Flints in our convention, if but nothing resulted but some gentle Sparks.

Garfield Christian Park is greatly improved and adorned in the large number of beautiful cottages and bungaloes erected during the last year. It is destined to be the most suitable place for a Christian convention on the earth. Our Bay City is being purified as never before. The new mayor, Dr. Taylor, while not the tailor that it takes nine of to make a man, is proving himself equal to nine men, and his new board of supervisors are of the best class in San Francisco. He says the city must occupy the highest spiritual summit. Hence we look at the great city by the Golden Gate as "purified by fire," not only physically but spiritually, and one that will be a model before the municipal rulers of other great cities.

A Problem in Education.

There was a day when the minister of the gospel was the best educated man in his community and the teacher of the youth of his congregation. There was a time when the church had full charge of secular education. It was a bitter struggle which finally wrested this control from the church. In many quarters the separation of the school from the church is still deplored.

But it can not be denied that our schools are better now than then and it is a question whether they would be as good as they are if they were under the control of the church. We believe that the public school is better than the parochial school.

This separation of church and school has given the church its best and truest opportunity. Back of all that the secular school can teach, whether in common school or in university, is a great foundation of knowledge upon which life must be built if it be true and stable and worth while. The secular school refuses to teach this knowledge. It is the knowledge of God and of his relation to this world. It is the knowledge of God's purpose in man and of man's relation to God and to his purpose. It is the knowledge of what God is doing in this world and why. It reaches out into the ages which the Scriptures call "the inhabited earth to come." Without this knowledge as a foundation no life can be securely established. This knowledge must be the atmosphere which true life breathes and the deep soil into which it strikes and spreads its roots if it would bear abundant and beautiful fruit. How shall this knowledge be taught? Here is the problem for the church.

For the maintainance of such an educational process we have in almost every church what is called the Bible school or the Sunday-school. The pulpit is inadequate in opportunity and purpose for such a great undertaking. In fact the power of the pulpit rests upon the success of the educational work of the Bible school.

For this reason thoughtful ministers are giving their powers to the upbuilding of the Bible school and to the extension of its influence. Seminaries are requiring their graduates to master not only the art of sermon-making but also of Sunday-school management. We may say with assurance that the church has discovered the Bible school.

The Christian-Evangelist is back of this great movement with all its resources and power. It urges this important matter upon the attention of the ministers and thoughtful Christian people. It offers itself to the utmost for help in solving this problem of vital education in the teaching of the Word of God.

To this end its Bible school department has been created anew the past year. Time and money and scholarship are being poured into this work as never before. It is our purpose to spare nothing to be able to give to our church the very best equipment for organizing and carrying on this great opportunity we call the Sunday-school.

Our earnestness in the matter may be recognized in the addition of six new quarterlies to the fine list we have been publishing. We have also added a scientific system of study which will make possible with the international lesson the study of the whole Bible. Our periodical literature has been adapted also to the new opportunity. A system of teacher-training has been inaugurated. If there is anything else we can do to make it possible for our ministers and Bible school workers to solve this great problem it has escaped our attention for the moment.

When our friends are giving their utmost strength to this great problem we wish them to know that all the resources of the Christian Publishing Company are working with them.

before they can ever grow to be great preachers must change locations. Their churches are so small in ideals that they would dwarf any man. They are so legalistic that it would be impossible for the minister to sustain any spiritual passion. Without spiritual vision there can be no achievement; and so often the minister who would change all this has a hopeless task, for, as of old, so often now, "my people love to have it so." If the pastor of such a church would continue to grow he must move. Did you ever think of that as a cause of ministerial changes?

Churches often fail to uphold a pastor. The law of suggestion holds good here as elsewhere. Go into the streets and gaze into the sky without uttering a word, and others will begin to look, and others, and still others, until a multitude will be gazing. They followed the suggestive act of one man without knowing why. Indifference to the pastor's efforts and methods begets indifference. If the officers are indifferent to the midweek meeting, the church will be indifferent. They will say: "O, Brother So-and-so is a very good man; since we must have a preacher he will do as well as any. But our business men don't take much stock in him; they don't pay much heed to his requests about the prayer meetings and other measures." Thus is his influence nullified. Suggest the slightest criticism upon the pastor, and the church will soon be talking it upon all occasions. In a certain Presbyterian church there was a desire for a new pastor. Certain business men held a meeting and agreed to make the following recommendation to the church: "Brother A. is not the most brilliant man, but he is a reliable man and he is growing; he will wear well. If we change we run the risk of doing worse; let us hold fast to him. We must give him every encouragement. Let us talk him up, and not talk him down." The congregation accepted the wisdom of these men. They began to talk up the pastor. That man has been forty years with that church, and it is one of our great city churches. Talk your pastor up and don't talk him down. Three things the church should do for a minister, viz.: Talk him up, pray him up and pay him up. "Look up, lift up, lend a hand" is a great motto for a church.

Great expectations must be matched by great opportunities. If good sermons are to be preached, there must be opportunity to prepare them. Great messages spring from thoughtful reading, much meditation, heart-searching prayer, and sanctified experience. Preaching is a minister's first and greatest work. A stream rises no higher than its source. He must have time when, unmolested and unhurried, he can read and think; he must dig deep into the mine of God's truth; he must see entrancing visions and feel lofty impulses course through his soul; and then he must dress them in attractive and forceful style. But many a preacher is dwarfed by the great mass of details which the church should lift from his heart and mind. The church is now so highly organized that the pastor has become a superintendent of departments, rather than a messenger of God. Once he was a prophet; now he is a director of forces. Then he was a preacher; now he is a general. Once he had a study; now he has an office. A multitude of ministries preoccupy his time and strength. The church needs again to read Acts 6:2-4: "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables; wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Spirit and Wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer and the word of God." The ideal church is the one in which every member is a pastoral helper. A pastor with heart and conscience can not see the benevolent ministries neglected, even though he must do them at the expense of his study. And when he does that his pulpit tumbles. When his pulpit tumbles the church comes to the level of the world. The minister must not feed his people on stale bread, or give them drink from a stagnant pool. The church can not vie with the world in music, and in literature, and shows. It has one distinctive field, viz., spiritual inspiration. If the Church does not present a conquering faith, a triumphant hope, a bleeding heart, an inspiring life, a lofty ideal, and an entrancing vision, the world will have no use for it. It can find music, literature and shows elsewhere. It is the business of the Church, if it would be apostolic and effective, to so organize its forces that its work will go forward and all the benevolent needs of the church and community be supplied without this tremendous drain upon a preacher's vitality. True, a good deed is worth more than a good sermon, but the Church must multiply the good deeds. A good sermon is a sprouter of good deeds. If a church makes an errand boy of its minister, it must be content to be without a preacher.

The church, as seen by a spiritual pastor, is a spiritual organization working for spiritual ends. Music, literature, social diversions, and benevolent service have place in a church that seeks to minister to the whole life of a people. The church should seek the best of everything. It is not worth while to bother with anything but the best. But these things must be looked on as subordinate and instrumental. The church is not a religio-musical-social club. It is a life-saving station, lifting men by the energy of a divine spirit. The organization is the physical and social expression of a great spiritual life. The pastorate is a spiritual leadership. When the rain falls on the hilltops it will refresh the valleys below. The stream that runs deep carries heavy burdens. Spiritual height and depth should be the first concern of the church. Spiritual life will provide everything else. Life first and organization afterward is the order of nature. The divine idea of a prospered church is found in Acts 9:31: "Then had the churches rest, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and the comfort of the Holy Spirit, were multiplied." Multiplication awaits edification; evangelism, spiritual culture. Only the spiritually edified church can conserve the results of a church that is enthusiastically evangelistic. What is the use of having children born if they are to be suckled at the breast of a dead mother?

The church must be symmetrical in life if it is to be adequate in power. To this end it must be social as well as a spiritual force. Religion knows two dimensions—depth and breadth. A church must grow in two directions, Godward and manward. A double law governs its spirit—love to God and love to man. Two things it must achieve for the world's life, sonship and brotherhood; two attainments must always be forthcoming, depth in life and breadth in sympathy. The saving of the heathen, the transformation of the slums, the purification of politics, the care of the unfortunate, the redemption of industrial life from the selfishness of greed, and the destruction of immoral forces, all lie within the horizon of the Church's vision, and must be made to feel the pulsations of the redeeming blood of a sacrificial Church. Not the narrowness of a faith that merely contemplates heaven, but the breadth and depth of a love that climbs upon a cross and looks down with compassion on the perils and the possibilities of men, develops power and commands the world's respect. The leadership which cultivates spiritual vision and organizes sympathy into a redemptive force is the leadership which the Church must demand and follow.

F. E. Meigs in America.

The giant missionary and educator is in America for a month or so only. He is home in behalf of the equipment and endowment of the Anglo-American School in Central China. He is backed by the whole missionary force in China. The need, cosmopolitan character, and sound investment in such a splendid scheme should commend itself to all. Brother Meigs should be heard in all great and influential centers. The founding of such a school in Central China is worthy of a supreme service.

The Norfolk Convention.

The time for our international convention is now very near and it is very important that all churches should appoint their delegates at once and send names to the undersigned as chairman of entertainment committee in order that homes may be secured in advance. The exposition is daily attracting larger crowds and it is of the utmost importance that accommodations for all of our delegates should be secured at least thirty days in advance. This is very important, and I would urge upon all churches the necessity of prompt action in order that all difficulties along this line may be overcome. As before stated delays are dangerous. Act now.

Homes can be secured in private residences at prices ranging from 50 cents to $1 per day, European plan. Meals 25 cents up.

An Interesting Contest.

For the first six months of 1907 the Bible schools at Agra, Belleville, Lebanon, Stockton and Smith Center, Kansas, engaged in a Bible school contest. There were three points in the contest, the largest total attendance, the largest per cent of increase over the average attendance for last year, and the largest per cent of officers and teachers in attendance.

Smith Center and Agra tied on the largest total attendance, each having a total of 4,112; then came Belleville, Lebanon and Stockton in the order named.

On the point of per cent of gain over the average for the preceding year, Lebanon stood easily first with 98 per cent, followed by Agra, Smith Center, Belleville and Stockton.

In per cent of officers and teachers in attendance Stockton stood first with an average of 97 per cent, followed by Smith Center, Agra, Bellevile and Lebanon in regular order.

Aside from the regular points I mention the following: Belleville had the largest attendance of any school in the contest for any one day, with 312 in attendance; Agra had the largest total gain of any school, Stockton stood first in regularity of attendance, Smith Center was the only school that did not at some time in the six months fall below 100 in attendance; Stockton had 100 per cent of officers and teachers in attendance on sixteen of the twenty-six Sundays that the contest ran.

All the schools were greatly benefited by the contest, and are continuing to do good work.

Warren will make the Centennial address at many of the conventions.——It has been the good fortune of the Ohio man to be given a unanimous and hearty call from the historic church at Bedford. There is no more ideal situation in Ohio, all things considered. Some very interesting history can be found here and it seems like sacred ground. The church was organized in November, 1832, by William Hayden and J. J. Moss. Brother Moss was the first minister, serving from 1834 to 1839. Mrs. Fannie Willis was erecting a house for the Baptists, but during the process she heard Hayden, Moss, et al., and became a Christian only. She then gave the house to the new organization. This house still stands and is used, though remodeled several times. In 1839 the yearly meeting of Cuyahoga county was held at Bedford. On Sunday 5,000 people heard Alexander Campbell under a tent when he preached two hours and thirty minutes by the watch on "The Atonement." Hundreds of people stood all through the sermon. One of the early converts was Dr. J. P. Robinson, who afterward figured largely in our Western Reserve history. H became a powerful preacher. We may think big results are all of modern time but in letters to William Hayden Dr. Robinson tells of "76 in ten days at Munson," "spoke three times at Akron and baptized 50," "four Lord's days, have baptized 112." They did things back in the '40's as well as now. For twenty years the board of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society was at Bedford, Dr. Robinson being the leading spirit. J. H. Jones, E. H. Hawley, Hiram Woods, A. B. Green and Robert Moffett have served this church. Here was the forming of the Quintikle. One evening just before J. H. Jones and Garfield were to leave for the army they, with Isaac Errett, were at the home of Dr. and "Aunt Betsey" Robinson. It was a sad but pleasant evening to these close friends. They made a compact that night that in case any one needed help or comfort the others were to go at once if possible to the rescue. The agreement lasted for life and there were many meetings afterward of the Quintikle. To stand, therefore, every Sunday where Hayden, Moss, Errett, Garfield, Campbell, et al., have stood is an inspiration few preachers have. Out from this church have gone Hensey to Bolengi, Africa; H. J. and Paul Derthick to the mountains of Kentucky; Davis and wife to India. The present membership is about 300 and enjoys an ideal peace and fellowship.

Oregon.

Our convention is over. Inspired by the successes of the past year the Oregon brotherhood have taken upon themselves larger obligations for Christ and the church. This year's motto will be, "Two Thousand Souls for Christ; Six Thousand Dollars for Oregon Missions: A Preacher for Every Church; a Church for every Preacher; and Two Missionaries—the Giver and the Goer." May we count on you?

To help in this matter your missionary board is planning the publication of a monthly news sheet, which it is hoped that the churches and preachers will keep filled with the reports of their work and the records of heaven's blessings upon their efforts.

The headquarters of the corresponding secretary have been changed from Cottage Grove to Albany, Ore. All communications intended for him should be sent to 831 South Calapooia street, Albany.

In closing, let us call the attention of the churches that have failed to send in reports to the fact that if they wish a full record of their work to appear in the Year Book, these reports should be sent in at once.

Let each church and preacher begin at once to prepare for a revival service, a missionary meeting and a great rally for Oregon missions.

Write to your secretary and tell him that he can count on you and your congregation.

Herbert Yeuell's Program.

July 14 saw us at Albany, Mo. For five weeks we tugged at the hardest meeting I ever tried. First, it was planned for a union effort in a large tabernacle. The preachers not uniting, it was called a co-operation meeting. They refused to co-operate and worked against the meeting, saying that they had no voice in the selection of the preacher. They may have been justified in that. For three weeks it was difficult to get many of our own people to co-operate for various reasons. The defunct Christian College here is a memorial of "Campbellite" failure in this town. Then the meeting was held at the worst time of the year, the time for annual reunions and picnics. In several nearby towns Chautauquas of high grade were in progress, and a constant drain on public attention. Another condition making it an inopportune time was that it was the third meeting in eighteen months and the field was almost barren of results. Albany is a moral town and nearly everybody belongs to a church and local conditions made a strong doctrinal campaign impossible. Brother Mattox, the pastor, had done everything I asked in preparation and together we pulled harmoniously to the end. Crowds attended nightly. There were about 60 responses to our invitations. Brother Arthur Wake has been compelled to give up the work for a while, his strong work as soloist and leader making too great a drain on his vitality. I regret exceedingly to have to let him go. We go next to Mt. Pleasant, Ia., where our church is weak, for a strong campaign of teaching. There are not the elements for a campaign for new members, but we go in the fear of God and love of our noble plea for Christian unity. During October and November we are to be with Brother C. J. Tanner at Detroit, Mich., during December at Greencastle, Ind. A strong appeal comes from Elwood for another meeting. I am constantly receiving word of the lasting power of that meeting. On to Norfolk! Herbert Yeuell.

Lake District, (Ind.) Convention.

The following is a brief report of the first year's work of the Lake missionary district of Indiana, comprising the counties of Lake, Porte, LaPorte and Starke, and including the rapidly growing Calumet district at the foot of Lake Michigan.

The district was organized May 12, 1906, and then contained 11 churches with a total membership of 1,486 people. In one year the missionary effort that has been put forth has resulted in increasing the number of churches to 15 with a total membership of 2,230 or an increase of about 50 per cent. We raised for local church work during the year $15,405.06 and for all mission and benevolent purposes $10,485.07 making a total of over $25,000 for all purposes. The ladies' aid societies of the several churches raised $2,997.48 during the year. New churches have been organized at Whiting, Indiana Harbor, Sauktown and we have just organized in Michigan City with 55 members and the tent meeting will continue there for at least two weeks. From there we go again to Whiting for another tent meeting. Whiting and Indiana Harbor both own their own lot and have purchased and paid for them during the past year. Michigan City is a town of 20,000 people and was without a Christian church until yesterday. We now have a good start there. Plans are being made to secure a church site in the new steel town of Gary with prospects of being successful and we will go into that city next season: The populations of the three counties bordering Lake Michigan have doubled in the past seven years and will doubtless double again in less time than that. Gary gives every promise of becoming the largest city in Indiana within a very few years. At the election of officers at the close of the convention yesterday the convention by unanimous vote re-elected F. R. Liddell, president, and Cecil J. Sharp, secretary and treasurer, adding President H. B. Brown, of the Valparaiso University for vice-president. It seems almost too much to expect these officers to duplicate the record of last year, but they have behind them the co-operation of many of the best business men in the district and are going to make a mighty effort to repeat the record of last year. The district owns its own tent that is being used in the mission work. T. J. Legg, state evangelist of Indiana, has done the preaching at Michigan City, assisted by M. H. Garrard, the able young pastor of the church at LaPorte, Indiana.

We invite the most careful study of the claims of this district to the assistance of the National Home Mission Society.

Caldwell's big meeting is well advertised in this vicinity. Pastor Shaw has posters and cards hung up everywhere. The second crop of alfalfa will be in the stack by September 18, when the meeting starts. Sellers of Terre Haute will come in fine trim and the Caldwell church awaits the result.——Evangelist Jones will probably start a four weeks' meeting in Rupert about October, and possibly twenty days earlier. He will then hold five or six other meetings during the winter at strategic points in South Idaho.——Fayette is still on the quiet hunt for a preacher. They do not want it to get noised around that they are looking for a man, because they consider the still hunt the better plan. It's the "still hunt man" they will hire this time and expect great things in the near future.——The brethren in Emmett got a little lift yesterday when J. R. Nicholson, of Caldwell, sent them five $5 bills as a sort of encourager for them. Nicholson is not rich either, but appreciates the need of help in Emmett which is the index to a strategic field. If some of the rich people should do the same for Emmett, it would almost make the work there abiding.——Several baptized in Star during the summer. The results come from the united efforts of the workers of the little church. Star itself is looking up some under the influence of the interurban electric line connecting Boise and Caldwell.——Middleton is enthusiastic still over their prospects for a brick building in the late fall. J. S. Clark can not see anything but this church house and a membership of a hundred, although less than a dozen have reported to date. Brother Clark has a motto and here it is, "Get fifty to move here and make fifty with a five weeks' meeting." He is getting the fifty to move in and the writer has promised the other fifty. B. W. On Sunday night, August 4, we closed a week's meeting at Mathews, a mission point in the country, seven miles from Winston-Salem. There was one baptism. We have but about 10 members here, and no Bible school. C. L. Andrews did the preaching in the meeting. He is a young man with but a few years' experience, but he is a strong preacher. He preaches for the congregations at Stoneville, Rural Hall and Corinth.——Our congregation at Winston-Salem is having a furnace put in the church, and the ladies' aid society has ordered new pews.——We have had the largest attendance at the Bible school at Winston-Salem in its history right through this hot weather. Our men's "Berean" class went up from 9 to 20 present in three weeks.——The brethren of our state board are urging the "Dollar Campaign" for Atlantic Christian College, situated at Wilson, N. C. We sent them recently $4[illegible] and have more subscribed.——A. B. Cunningham had E. B. Barnes, of Indiana, in a great meeting at Washington, D. C., recently. There were 57 additions, which is considered large under the difficult conditions there. Brother Cunningham says of Brother Barnes: "He is the best all-round evangelist I have ever worked with." He is now in another meeting at Belhaven, where A. R. Wade ministers. They have built a large tabernacle. They report 220 in Bible school and $11.56 collection. Their attendance two months ago was 150. There were twelve additions at last report. Brother Barnes held another meeting or two in the state. D. W. Davis closed a meeting at La Grange July 21, with seventeen additions.——J. W. Wolf, of Rural Hall, business man and preacher, is preaching where he has opportunity. Miss Elizabeth Tesh, of Kinston, visited her home people in Winston-Salem recently and gave a stirring address on the work of the C. W. B. M. in our Centennial crusade. She spoke at Rural Hall August 4, and secured some new members to the Auxiliary, and went on to Asheville, where the president, Mrs. P. B. Hall, is spending her vacation. Brother Hall has been supplying the pulpit there. The Lord through his servants is doing many other things in North Carolina.

New Zealand Letter.

At this writing I am in the town of Pahiatua, nearly a hundred miles inland from the city of Wellington. The church here is a mission church, and under the direction of the executive board of what is known as the middle district. George Mansfield has been the pastor of the church since its beginning, over three years ago. Two months ago he was called to take charge of a new organization started by our American evangelists, Hamilton and Garmong, in the city of Ashburton, in the southern part of the colony. I am relieved for a few months from the work in the capital, owing to the needs of the young church here, and also to the fact that the church in Wellington is at present without a place of worship of their own. A year ago we sold the old property and are now erecting a building which, when completed, will be the best and most commodious house of worship owned by the brotherhood in New Zealand. I was called to Wellington two weeks ago to conduct the exercises at the laying of the corner stone. We expect to have it completed some time in August. As soon as it is completed Evangelists L. F. Stephens and wife are to hold a meeting of not less than two months.

These evangelists closed their campaign of seven weeks in Newtown, a suburb of Wellington, with some thirty additions to the church there, and they are now in a successful meeting at Petone, a town just across the bay from Wellington. This work, so far, is giving the best of satisfaction to the brotherhood in the colony. People who come out under the solid Bible preaching of Brother Stephens usually know what they are doing, and come to stay. By the way, two or three more preachers are needed in this colony—men of solid worth who can come to stay for a period of years. Who is willing to come, trusting in God and a most generous brotherhood—such as is found in New Zealand—for support? My address is No. 8 McFarlane street, Wellington, New Zealand. Any preacher writing me, regarding the matter of coming to this country, should send the very best of testimonials, and also see that the proper amount of stamps are used in sending a letter to this foreign country.

O. G. White, who has so acceptably served the Central Christian Church of Huntington for two years, has resigned, effective October 1. He will give himself to building up the Bible school work of the state and to advancing the interests of the West Virginia "Christian," of which he is the editor.——The state convention will be held at Beckley September 10-13. Free entertainment will be provided for all delegates. McLean, Wright, Muckley, Mohorter and Slayter will be the out-of-the-state speakers.——J. W. Stewart, minister at New Martinsville and Paden's chapel, has resigned after one year's service. He has done a good work at these points.——Prof. W. B. Taylor, of Bethany College, is touring portions of the state in the interest of his institution. On August 6 he began a short meeting with the church at Indian Mills.—The Hampshire District co-operation meeting will be held at Mt. Union August 22-25.——Miss Alma E. Moore, state organizer for the C. W. B. M., is doing a great work among the churches. West Virginia is slowly but surely falling into line for every good work.——C. V. Dunn, Moody Edwards and H. L. Ice, three Bethany students, are doing good work holding meetings in the interior of the state.——The Bluestone District convention will be held September 4-6. At this writing the place is not definitely decided upon.——John Mullady, who has been ministering to the church at Dutch Fork, Pa., has accepted a call to serve the New Bethel and Fork Ridge congregations. He will begin work about September 1.——These are the vacation days for many of our ministers in the larger towns and cities.——J. W. Yoho, corresponding secretary West Virginia C. M. S., is visiting the churches in an endeavor to rally them to the support of state missions. More churches will have a part in the work this year than ever before. Twice as many will give this year as gave last. Interest in state missions was never so good as at this time.——The wife of J. G. McNeely, our only minister in the Guyan valley, is very ill at her home near Logan.——P. H. Wilson has been called for the fourth year at Moundsville.——Four country churches in Monroe and Summers counties will need a minister after September 20. Their present minister, P. M. Baber, will enter Bethany College at the opening of the session. This is a good work but the salary is small. Write P. M. Baber, Junta, W. Va., for further information.——There is a great opening for a good work at Williamson. This is a new organization at present meeting in a hall over a saloon. They will get title to a good lot early in September. With an earnest minister to lead them they will do great things for God. A minister who wants a hard position at a small salary in a promising field can find it at Williamson. Write Miss Marguerite Blake, Williamson, or J. W. Yoho, corresponding secretary, Bethany.

DEDICATIONS.

Macon, O.

The town of Fincastle lies two miles north of the N. and W. railroad, about equal distance from Cincinnati and Portsmouth. When the railroad came through the village of South Fincastle sprang up (now called Macon). There were several churches in old Fincastle but none in Macon and for some time I had thought that our small band of Disciples at old town should transfer their membership to the railroad site, and a year ago I held a two weeks' meeting at Macon, at which time 22 Disciples from old town and 36 others came into the new organization, giving us a total of 58 members.

A church building was begun soon after and its completion is the result of the push and sacrifice of a noble little band.

I recently closed a meeting with seven additions and dedicated an edifice costing nearly $3,000, raising over $600 on the day of dedication, leaving a like amount to be carried by the church at 6 per cent interest.

I want here to suggest our plan of dedication. We issued three sets of tickets for three services which were as nearly identical as we could make them. The tickers were distributed to different people for each service. We issued as many tickets for each service as we had seats so that every one who got a ticket and presented it before the beginning of the service secured a seat and was comfortable. There was some objection, of course, but I found it to be the most satisfactory plan I have ever seen operated, and I heartily recommend it. Announce it early enough to give the people plenty of time to become acquainted with it by the time of dedication.

J. D. Garrison,
Pastor-Evangelist.

Smoky Valley, Ky.

Three years ago we sent out a number of our young men from the college of the Bible into Eastern Kentucky to preach in the waste places. W. R. Mains and T. G. Fish went to the above named place in Carter county and preached the Gospel and began the work of building a house of worship. The fourteen members have intermittently continued the effort and in recent months, when the work had about stopped, D. G. Combs went and stirred them up. The house is a substantial frame structure about six miles from Olive Hill and was completed—barring some of the seats, securing lamps and stoves and painting the inside of the neatly ceiled room. A pulpit is also lacking. If any church has one that is to be replaced by another I suggest that they give it to this worthy little band and any church having lamps that are being discarded for other lighting system can find a place to put the old lamps and help a good cause. They had paid for everything that had been done and had a little money in the treasury. A great crowd was present and we had a splendid day. Some money was raised for the additional needs of the work. E. Petty was with us as was Brothers Gillam and Reynolds—two preachers of that region. Will P. Stamper, an elder of the congregation, is entitled to much credit, for he has spent much time at work on that house and his boys with him.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Well is it known that a strong mental, moral force does wonders; and so it does with this propaganda, regardless of any doctrinal errors in the case. As to their tenets, it is claimed that their inspired textbook is the "key to the Bible," giving us the true spiritual interpretation thereof. But we find that repudiation is the correct term. They cut out all the rites, ceremonies and ordinances of the gospel as given in the New Testament, and all the orders set in the church—elders, pastors, bishops, deacons, evangelists, sermons, prayers, baptism, the supper. All this and more is left out by this queer "spiritual interpretation," making it altogether "another gospel." S.

Shall We Debar Our Business and Professional Men?

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

There are three business and professional men here in the Laporte church that want to go to the October convention. More than that, we are very anxious to go, but not one of us can on account of the press of business at that time. I take it that I am conservative when I say that this same condition obtains in sixty per cent of all our churches. Several questions naturally present themselves to our minds. Does the convention management want us to come? If so, are they using good sense in trying to get us there? If they do not want us to come, why not? Are they acting in good faith? They know absolutely when they choose October as their convention month that as far as we are concerned they might just as well transact their business behind closed doors. They find fault with us because we do not send in more money, and then deny us the principal means of reaching this great class of business men. These same business men are taking annual vacations in July and August, and spending more money than the missionary boards ever saw for charitable enterprises that are not to be mentioned on the same page with the Master's work. Laying aside a few trivial reasons for an October convention, is there any real reason why a cool convention city should not be chosen, and the meeting set for July or August, so we can make our vacation dates and plans to cover it? If the convention management and the boards are as unselfish and able in the Master's work as they ought to be, will they continue to deny us a part in the work, or at least a chance to get interested?

Fraternally,
Fred R. Liddell.

[The foregoing letter from a lawyer presents the objections against holding our national convention in October, which the Editor of this paper has voiced before two national conventions; but the business men were not there, in any large numbers, to speak for themselves, and the few that were there were not exactly of the same mind on the subject. Personally, the month of October suits us as well as any other season of the year, and better than either of the months suggested above; but we have believed for many years that a large number of our professional and business men are kept away from our conventions by our holding them in the busiest month of the year. Last year, at Buffalo, the matter was referred to the state conventions, but whether they are taking any action upon the matter we have not learned, except that the Missouri convention referred the matter to its state board. We should like to have an expression from our business and professional men on this point before the Norfolk convention. Our own feeling has been that we ought to avoid interference with the vacation season, by putting the convention either at the beginning or close of the vacation months. But we are prepared to surrender our own personal preferences in order to secure a time that will suit the lagest number of the brotherhood.—EDITOR.]

"Tainted Money."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Can money be tainted? Yes. Counterfeit money is tainted money. Whether gold or silver or paper, if not made according to law, it is not genuine, it is tainted. By fraud it may get into the hands of a Christian man. Here we have a good man holding bad money. His upright character does not make the money good. It is still counterfeit—tainted. Nor does a bad man's handling good money convert it into tainted money. It is still good, clean money in spite of his tainted character.

If John D. Rockefeller were to die leaving to me $1,000,000, would I take it? I certainly would. If a distiller or saloonkeeper or gambler were to bequeath to me $1,000,000 I would receive it. I would rejoice in the opportunity of turning this money to a better account. I would endow our Bible College at Columbia, Mo., amply for its work. And I would endow our orphan school at Fulton, Mo., sufficiently to enable it to devote itself to its original purpose of beneficiary work, educating worthy, dependent girls for lives of usefulness. And I would see that no girl was admitted to the institution except beneficiaries, but that the institution was filled every year with the brightest and best girls in our country.

In doing this I would not be in any way responsible for the methods by which Mr. Rockefeller accumulated his fortune.

If we are under obligations to inquire into the methods by which Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Carnegie obtained their money before receiving their gifts, then we must for the same reason investigate every man's business methods before accepting his gifts. This principle then should be applied to every member of the church before his offering goes into the treasury—to every man in the community who would contribute to religious work.

"Be not overrighteous," is a scriptural exhortation. It is possible for a man to be too conscientious. Too much scrupulosity in a world like ours where good and evil are always present, becomes a weakening process. We should deal with men and things in a practical way.

The course I would pursue in the supposed premises I would have the missionary societies pursue. If the devil were to turn over all the money in his possession to our missionary societies I should think it a golden opportunity for defeating him and would be in favor of using it to that end.

If God uses wicked men, as the Scriptures abundantly teach, to further his righteous purposes on earth, may we not use this money in the same way? I think so, and I think so without the shadow of a doubt.

Liberty, Mo. A. B. Jones.

path of moral and religious duty. But, while it could do this, it could not cancel the guilt of past transgressions. It could not, according to Heb. 10:1-4, secure the absolute forgiveness of sins. It could not make the pious servants of God under that dispensation "perfect as pertaining to the conscience." Hence, Christ has become "the mediator of the new covenant that, a death having taken place for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant, they that have been called may receive the promise of the eternal inheritance." (Heb. 9:15). Accordingly we learn from Heb. 11:39, 40, that "these all, having had witness borne to them, through their faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that apart from us they should not be made perfect."

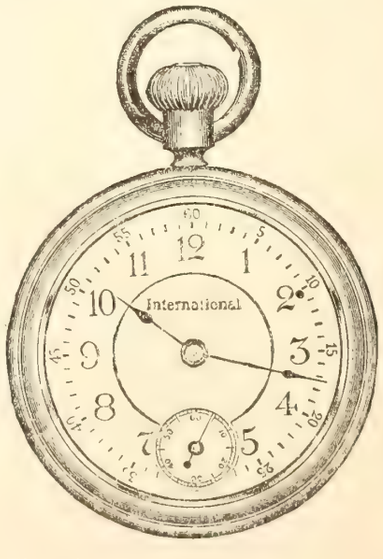
Kansas City Evangelism.

I have entered upon my eleventh year in this great city. It has been indeed a most pleasant ministry. Sixteen fields have been entered and assisted during the ten years; there were 1,600 additions in the mission fields; lots have been purchased and buildings erected at the following places, also pastors installed: Jackson ave., with over 700 members; 675 Sunday-school enrollment; will build a $25,000 edifice to replace the one recently burned. Ivanhoe Park with membership of about 200, with fine outlook; L. P. Kopp, minister. Budd Park with membership 150, B. L. Wray, minister; is now erecting about a $10,000 basement to replace old building, too small. Mt. Washington, H. W. Hunter, minister for the past six months; doing good work. Roanoke Blvd., property just purchased and tabernacle erected by ministers.



The following additional fields have been entered and many brought to Christ: Vine St., Rosedale, Washington st., Bethany, 27th st., Brighton ave., Troost ave., Maywood, Quindaro blvd., Sheffield and Springfield ave., now Linwood blvd., have been assisted in meeting. F. L. Bowen.

Evangelism in Kansas.

On the 18th we closed an eight weeks' meeting with the result of 51 added to the membership, money raised for preaching half time, and the church firmly established. Only 18 members when we began. Erected a tabernacle within one block of the square. Of the additions, 22 were from the denominations as follows: Twelve Methodists (6 of them had been baptized), 4 Lutherans, 2 Catholics, 1 Friend, 1 Baptist, 1 True Follower, 1 Latter Day Saint; 9 were by statement or letter, 2 reclaimed, 18 confessions, 32 baptisms in all. Three husbands and wives baptized at same time by my assistant and myself. Two baptismal services by torch light at 11 o'clock at night in the river. Five confessions at the water's edge. All but 9 were adults, several excellent men, of whom three will study for the ministry. One confession not baptized on account of parental objection. Bros. Geo. E. Lyon, J. S. Spears, R. L. Finch, Edward Clutter, L. W. Myers, Hypes and John G. Olmsted were present at some of the services and helped as they could. Bro. W. S. Carpenter, of Bethany, Neb., was my very efficient helper preaching 4 times and baptizing 10 of the converts.

The Brazen Serpent.—Num. 21:1-9.

Memory verse, 9.

Golden Text.—As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life.—John 3:14, 15.

With the refusal of the children of Israel to go against the Canaanites after the ten spies had reported their formidable character, began the long period of wandering in the desert. The record of this sojourn is contained in the latter part of the book of Numbers, beginning at chapter 14. The end of the book brings the nation practically to the borders of the land which they are to possess.

It must not be supposed that the nation spent this entire period of forty years like an army on the march, breaking camp every morning and making camp every night in a new place. It was rather the life of a migratory pastoral tribe, living for months, perhaps for years, in one place and then moving to another as the exigencies of pasture or water or enemies or sheer restlessness moved them. In Numbers 33 there is given a list of their camping places—about forty of them in all, or an average of one for each year. We are told that Moses himself wrote out this list (Num. 33:2).

But few details are given regarding this period of migration and sojourn in the wilderness. Probably the annals were as dull as the annals of pastoral peoples usually are. Although we may say in a general way that the books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy are devoted to the history of Israel from the departure from Egypt until the arrival at the borders of Canaan, yet the entire record of thirty-eight of those forty years is contained in Numbers 14:21.

The most important among the few events recorded in this period were: The disastrous defeat following the attempt of a part of the people to go forward against the Canaanites after they had been ordered to go back; the giving of additional laws regarding sacrifice, especially about burnt offerings and sin-offerings for unintentional offenses; the stoning of the man who gathered sticks on the Sabbath (which suggests that, under their own law, the Jews of the time of Jesus had good enough ground to consider it unlawful to pluck grains of wheat on the Sabbath; the revolt of Korah, his unreasonable complaint against Moses for not leading them to a land of milk and honey and the consequent destruction of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, who were swallowed by the earth and the burning of 250 of his fellow-conspirators with fire from heaven; the grumbling of the people on account of Korah's death and the great plague which was sent upon them in punishment; the budding of Aaron's rod as a sign of his superior position as priest; the setting apart of the Levites as the ministers of the sanctuary, the provision for them by tithes, and additional rules about ceremonial cleanliness; the need of water and the smiting of the rock by Moses when he had been commanded to speak to it; the faith of Aaron in the fortieth year of the pilgrimage; the attempt to go around the territory of Edom when passage through was refused; the fiery serpents—these are about the only incidents which we have for these thirty-eight years.

The incident narrated in Num. 21:1-3, of the first skirmish of the Israelites with the Canaanites and the success of the former after they had vowed to utterly destroy the cities of the Canaanites, is, like many other epistles in their subsequent history, based upon the assumption that the complete destruction of their enemies, including men, women and children, would be pleasing to Jehovah. Most early peoples entertained similar conceptions of their gods as delighting in the death and destruction of the enemies of their favorite tribes and nations, and Israel, in spite of its possession of many special revelations of the character and will of God, did not at once cast off this erroneous conception. It will not do, either in teaching children or in forming one's own idea of God, to make him responsible for all the cruel and bloody deeds which his misguided people did in his name and, as they believed, at his command.

The plague of fiery serpents was one of the long series of afflictions which were sent upon Israel from time to time to punish them for their ingratitude and unfaith. They had again grumbled about the shortage of water and the monotony of a diet of manna. The constant bestowal of special blessings had apparently rendered them the more querulous and the less capable of taking care of themselves in the ordinary affairs of life. Other desert tribes contrived to find food and water for themselves without recourse to miracle. The more the Israelites received special assistance, the more did they come to rely upon it and complain when it was temporarily withheld.

The purpose of the plague of serpents was not vengeance, but reformation. This is shown by the fact that a cure was provided, a cure which, by requiring obedience to Moses, would turn the minds of the people back to the thought of obedience to the God whom Moses represented.

THE UNIVERSAL ELEMENTS OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION

Charles Cuthbert Hall

"Amid the flood of books on the subject of religion there appears every few years one book that dwarfs all others, one that crystalizes the thinking of the Christian world. Such is this book. This man separates himself from the bewildering crossed paths and standing free, grasps clearly the course that is being followed by the Christian age of which he is a part. His knowledge is cosmopolitan and accurate, his logic is clean cut and simple, and his conclusions convincing and optimistic, springing from a faith at once simple and profound in its certainty that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world of men who are his possession." $1.25 net.

This is one of the most remarkable bits of scripture in all the Bible. It would be well to memorize it. It is a remarkable confession of faith. The people of Israel came to live in a land of strange gods. All round them were nations having their own local deities. It seems from a number of scriptures that it was not easy for Israel to fully understand that their God, Jehovah, was not like other deities, but the only God, the God of the whole earth.

This conception of his nature and of his relation to the whole earth, and all its people was clearly taught by Moses in his farewell to Israel, but it was a long process which brought the people to accept Moses' ideals.

There is no lesson more sadly needed today than to learn this presence of God. It is difficult to believe that there was ever a time when it was harder to believe in it than now in this day of the tremendous assertion of the material. No better thing can be done by endeavorers than to practice the presence of God. In this way with the constant reading of his word we shall learn from our own experience and from the lives of those whose story is told in the Bible that he is with us and with all.

The lesson psalm might profitably be considered verse by verse. There is fear and reverence and becoming humility in every line. The writer had come to such a disposition in relation to God as we should all covet earnestly.

We might linger upon every verse. "O Lord, thou hast searched me, and know me." How silently he went through the chambers of our lives. We did not know when he did it, we are not conscious when he does it. What does he find therein?

"Thou knowest my down sitting and my uprising, thou understandest my thought afar off." His eye is then upon us, though we see him not. The companion at our side may not know our thought, but it is as a spoken word to God.

"Thou art acquainted with all my ways." Father and mother may not know where son or daughter walks or with whom, but not so of God.

"There is not a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether." Well may he be astonished and alarmed. O the words that we are glad not to have spoken. O the words we speak we would not have some one hear.

"Thou hast laid thine hand upon me." We may not have been conscious of his presence and thus have failed to understand. We are always within his reach. God can always "take us in hand."

Well may we all say, "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me." Who can understand God? How shall we feel about it? Shall we fear, as the writer seemed to do? Shall we try to flee? But "whither shall I flee from thy presence?" Heaven, hell, east, west, darkness,—no place offers an escape. "The darkness and the light are both alike to thee."

Such a fear of God, such a consciousness of our inability to get away from him is a very wholesome knowledge and should beget a saving fear. It will restrain us in many a moment of wavering toward wrong ways. It will help us to live that we can face him in judgment without fear.

There is another way to think of his presence. The fact may be our chief joy and our greatest comfort. Let us live so that it may be. This is the better way. But we may have to walk the way of fear first.

What a comfort and help to know that we can not get beyond his hand, and that no darkness can hide us from him!

"I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I can not drift
Beyond his love and care."

Chapter X.—A Modern Prodigal. The Judge's Son Restored.

I have lived my life and that which I have done,
May He within Himself make pure! but thou,
If thou shouldst never see my face, again pray for my soul.
More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice,
Rise like a fountain for me night and day.

James Gordon and his mother arrived home on the evening of the day upon which the students of Eaton had demonstrated their great joy over his recovery, and about the time President Brown was having his awful experience with Schlitz and his followers. But they did not hear of the terrible things until some time after. This, however, determined James and his mother upon moving to Eaton, that they might bear a helping hand in the defense of their friends in the common faith. They were not made of the fiber that shrinks from duty, nor seeks the easy places of earthly obligation. They felt the call as of God to go to the front of the battle, that they might suffer reproach rather with the people of God, than to enjoy their quiet farm retreat in luxury and peace.

As the time passed by James grew strong and his wounds and disabilities disappeared, and he was able to take up the spring work of the farm as he had been wont to do since his father had been killed in the mines. He had always returned from college early in the season for this purpose, making up his examinations and delinquent studies somehow, nobody knew just how; but he was enabled to stand at the head of his classes notwithstanding this loss of time and strenuous life that was necessary to supply the family with the living and himself with college money.

One day a tattered tramp came to their door for bread. James was just in from the field when, to his amazement, he beheld what seemed to him a familiar face behind the sad, unkempt features of the poor beggar. Was he mistaken, or could it be that this was the long-lost brother of his friend, Grace Taylor?

Engaging the poor fellow in a conversation, he soon learned that it was Charlie, the ruined and wandering son of the judge. His heart welled up in prayer and pity for the wreck of soul that stood before him. O what possibilities had been lost in his life! What wrecking of intellect and soul did he discern! And beneath it all he saw the possibility of a return and retrieving of the image of creation so marred and broken by sin. He dropped his work and engaged him in a long and interesting conversation, seeking by each turn to connect the thread of thought with his early self, his home, mother, hopes and aspirations of former years, and, best of all, to God and heaven. Mother Gordon hastened to make the poor fellow comfortable and to feed him with the best her home could afford, while she plied her artful and motherly advice to return from his waywardness and wrecked manhood to the Father's house where there was bread and enough to spare. With streaming eyes he arose to go, when prayerfully she placed a copy of the New Testament in his hand with a coin of silver, saying: "May God bless you, my boy; may your wanderings cease ere the sun shall rise and set again."

The poor fellow took the gifts with a hearty, "Thank you. You are the first one to speak kindly to me since I last saw mother." So saying he shambled away toward the town, sobbing audibly. Coming within the corporation he was attracted by the gilded signs at every corner where liquor was sold, and the insatiable thirst drew him thither. Old associates soon surrounded him, and the good advice and money of the Gordons soon went out of his mind and his pocket for the rum that proved his ruin. Strange that men will return, like the sow in her wallowing, to their ruin and their sorrow continually. But such is the record, not of the lowly and wretched alone, but of the greatest and brightest minds of all ages and lands.

The last of the Gordon's gifts that he parted with was the Testament, which he put up as a pawn in a game of cards that he played, being so far under the influence of the liquor he had drank that he did not seem to sense the folly of his act. The bartender, finding that he had no more money, hustled him into the street and drove him away, as his ragged appearance and drunken stupor was turning away some of his more refined customers.

Being now penniless, and having thrown away his opportunity to profit by the good advice of the Gordons, he determined to end his miserable life. Yet Mother Gordon's face haunted him, and the remembrance of their home made him think of his own old home and his mother. His first impulse was to go back to the Gordon farm and seek employment, but shame and remorse filled his heart when he remembered how he had spent their money and how he had lost the Testament they had given him. As he hesitated, the passenger train pulled in and hesitated a few seconds trembling for another start. This excited his roving spirit, and he swung in upon the brake-beams and was soon hurried away toward Eaton, unobserved by the train men or the authorities of the town.

The judge sat thinking in his home that night. The paper which he had purchased would come into his possession that week, and what should he do with it? He was too busy to see to its details, and he did not have confidence in the editor, whose shameful conduct he had noted during the months past; then he did not wish to continue the paper under its present role and character. He must exclude gambling, prize-fighting and such sensational news, together with whisky advertisements and other objectionable features. But he must have a competent editor and also a business manager. His thoughts turned toward his wandering son. Oh, if Charlie could be what he once was and be restored to him for this position! His soul yearned for his boy, and unconsciously he fell upon his knees before the grate and reached his hand up to God as one in deep distress. "O God, save and restore my Charlie to me," he groaned.

A figure, half clad in rags, with unshaven face and bony fingers, might have been seen peering into the shutters upon the judge as he sat thinking, and when he kneeled down and reached out his hand in this strange manner, the spectator pressed close to the crack in the window and listened.

He had but to look into the room to see all that it contained at a glance, for he had been there many times before. The old-fashioned rocker, in which his dear old mother used to sit beside that same fireplace, in the days before she went home to be with God; the little low lounge of antique figure, upon which he had stretched himself in careless ease while his mother sang some tender hymn or told him stories; the great cupboard for books, with its writing-board below. Some quaint chairs stood against the wall and the family pictures, done in ancient style, with great frames, hung just where they used to hang when he saw them last, some ten years before. The same little andirons and tongs; and there was his own rummage box in the corner, that had been kept there all these years because it was Charlie's. He had crept up to take one last look at the old home and its inmates, expecting to end his mad career in the river that night; for it seemed to him that nothing now remained for him but to end his folly and his wanderings by taking his own life. The appetite for strong drink and opium had driven him like some evil spirit up and down the earth, without a purpose but to gratify it. He had lost position after position, and had been rejected from place after place until he was now reduced to abject poverty and despair, a vagabond tramp, who had even stolen his passage to the town beneath the coaches of the train with a company of hoboes. Nobody knew him. He had barely escaped the policemen by hiding beneath the culvert until they had gone by, that he might make his way to the old home for this last look.

What he had seen and heard filled his poor, withered heart with a longing to be somebody again. However impossible that might seem to him at that moment, he could not restrain a deep longing to be restored to his father and his former self. But he remembered the stern words of the judge on that morning long ago, when he had repeated his offense and added insult to injury upon his aged sire's head, and now his mother was gone. Although twenty years the junior of the judge, yet her tender heart could not bear the separation from her dear son by such disgraceful means, and soon after his fall she had sunk beneath her grief. This he had learned through the papers, which he had always followed with keen interest, but through his debauchery he had not sensed the loss until now, as he looked into the little room where he had so often been with her and heard her gentle voice and words of counsel.

The judge got up slowly and wound the old clock in the hall, turned off the light and went to bed. Charlie sat upon the curbstone and thought. How he would like to get into his own bedroom once more and look over some of his books, if they might be there yet, and he half-suspected that they would all be kept as he had left them, since he saw other things kept as they were when he left. Taking off his shattered shoes he crept across the veranda, and as he was wont to do when he was a boy he climbed upon the low roof of the kitchen and went across to the gable where his window was. He stopped and peered in. By the light of the moon he saw that it was the same as when he left it, so gently raising the window he crawled in and struck a match. Here was a lamp, which he lighted, and lo, he was back again amid the surroundings of his boyhood and young manhood, when his life was happy and he had a purpose to live for. O how thick and fast the thoughts flooded in upon his brain as he came upon mementoes and keepsakes that had meant so much to him in those far-off days. A sense of shame filled his soul as his eye caught alternately the picture of his former self upon the wall and his blotched face and gaunt figure clothed in rags from the looking-glass beside it. He opened the wardrobe, and there hung his best suit of clothes, shoes and hat, white linen and neckties, as he had so often found where mother had placed them with such care for his use. This scene was too much for his hardened heart, that had not been touched for years before. Tears filled his eyes and he could see no more for weeping. The dear, patient hands of mother had no doubt placed them there, and now those hands were still in death. He wiped the tears away and looked at them once more. They seemed to beckon to him to come and try life again. He picked up his mother's picture and he could hear her speak to him, it seemed, as of yore. A little further on he saw the Bible which she had given him. This he took up and opened carelessly. A leaf was turned down and he saw a fine pencil mark, which he at once recognized to be hers. It was John 3:16, which was thus inscribed: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." His eye wandered on as his hand turned the leaves, and he caught another mark about "Whosoever cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." And again: "Come unto me, all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And again: "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." He closed the book and something seemed to take possession of him, so that he no longer desired death but life; no longer despaired, but hoped for a better condition of affairs, and something seemed to whisper to him, "Son, give me thine heart."

He thought how vile it was, like his outward appearance, too vile to be offered to any one, much less to a pure God. Then his eyes caught sight of the wardrobe, and the thought came quickly, "Here is a chance to change your outward appearance very shortly, so that you would look respectable." Then, looking at the Bible, he thought, "Here is a wardrobe for the soul and the heart, from which not only the appearance, but the real condition and character, can be changed."

An irresistible inclination came to him to kneel down and ask God to cleanse and clothe his soul again by the washing of the word and the clothing upon of the robes of God's own righteousness, that he might again be a worthy son of that household, as well as of the household of faith, with his own dear sainted mother. A voice seemed to speak to him as he was thus upon his knees: "Though thy sins be many, they are all freely forgiven. Arise, and be baptized and wash away thy sins."

Not until now did he feel like taking liberties with the house, for he felt himself a stranger and an alien to that peaceful home, into which he had entered as a thief and a robber; but going stealthily to the bathroom he took a good bath and returned to his room, where he exchanged his rags for a sleeping-gown and went to bed and to sleep. O, what a refreshing sleep that was! Not the strange nightmare and phantasmagoria of a drunken stupor, from which he might wake to see worse fiends than he had dreamed about, but the peaceful rest of a forgiven spirit and a quickened soul, whose dreams are of the higher and heavenly raptures, or earthly bliss that is purified. And yet he saw the pit from whence he had been digged from the commanding heights he now seemed to hold. But it was a strange mixture, that dream, after all; still it had its lasting effect, and who can say that it was not sent from him who knows our frame and our needs?

Awakening at the break of day, he found a razor that he had left in its place years before, and he was soon a changed man in outward as well as inward feelings. Now taking the clothing from the wardrobe he dressed himself, and was indeed a new man in appearance and purpose; for he hated his wandering past as he despised the rags which he had just cast off. He picked up the Bible again and its passages shone with new luster. How precious the promises did seem to him in this new morning light, for the Sun of Righteousness had arisen to cast his healing beams into body, soul and spirit for saving health, which he assuredly felt coursing through his life. And he thought: How did it happen that he had overlooked this treasure book? It was his mother's constant companion and stay, and she had commended it to him so oft before. How did it happen that he ever turned away from such treasures? The past seemed like a strange and frightful dream, from which he had just awakened. His soul now went out to God in thankful praise and he could scarcely restrain his voice from audible expression. But a strange feeling of timidity and diffidence restrained him. The household knew nothing of his presence and the servants were astir. His very finger tips tingled with excitement as he took up a pen to write a card of introduction, which he intended to have laid before his father and sister at the breakfast table that morning. Finally he wrote in his usual bold hand: "Charles F. Taylor, attorney-at-law, redeemed by the grace of God, awaits your call and pleasure. Begging your forgiveness for the past, he desires to share the bounty and joy of this dear old home again, with your consent. To father and sister Grace. From Charlie in his old room."

As Zeke, the old colored servant, came through the hallway to call for breakfast, Charlie opened his door. "For de Lor's sake, Mas'r Charlie, where did you come from? I done gone s'pozed you wuz ded. Mas'r Judge has hoped that you wud break into this here house and take posishun uv yo' old room some time, for he am powerful lonesome since Missus died. An' you foun' evry thing as you left it, I s'poze? Miss Grace don't eber let anybuddy sleep thair, I tell you, no sirree. They 'spects you ebry day and night, an' here you am fo' sure."

Charlie hushed him up as soon as he could, and gave him the card to lay before them at the breakfast table, which had an extra chair and plate set opposite to Grace's place. The old servant's eyes twinkled as he brought in a fresh course upon a tray. It consisted simply of Charlie's card, which he handed to Grace, who read it aloud. The judge could hardly believe his ears, and adjusting his spectacles he read it for himself.

"Bring him right down," said he, arising from his chair. But Charlie was already in the hallway, and bursting into the dining room threw his arms around his sister's neck. The judge stood smiling through his tears, and old Zeke was also seen wiping his eyes vigorously as the scene proceeded. Grasping his son by the hand, the judge welcomed him most heartily, saying:

"Charlie, my dear boy, I, too, have been redeemed and forgiven, and we welcome you to share this double bounty at our hearthstone."

Old Zeke tripped in with a steaming breakfast, and Charlie's plate was filled generously as often as he passed it up, but the judge and Grace could only sit in tearful rapture and watch the good things disappear as Charlie told them of his return and his wandering past. When the meal was over they gathered in the parlor and praised God from whom all blessings flow, and lifted up their voices in prayer and thanksgiving for his goodness and pardoning love.

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

An Evening in Mexico City.

On account of pressing business, Jebly and I were to start home early the next morning on the special, and in order to save hotel extortion for a night's room, we plotted to go down to the International station about bedtime, get on our special Pullman, and sleep in our berths if the porter would permit. Morton was obliged to remain in Mexico; but he planned to pass the night with us in the car, and that would give us more of his company and at the same time save him a big bill at the Iturbide, or at whatever hotel we placed him in our imagination. Having our minds thus at rest in regard to future developments, Jebly and I went about enjoying ourselves, while Morton tried to sleep in his stuffy lodging-room. We went first with him to the lodging-house to see how people room in Mexico.

The place was kept by an American lady who helps edit a department of the "Mexican Herald," the national paper, printed all in English. The "Herald" is a good daily paper. Of course, it publishes only the news and articles that are favorable to the Mexican government, but it is friendly to Americans, just as Diaz is friendly to America. (It is whatever Diaz is). Once a week it publishes short stories dealing with Mexican life. I got me some Spanish phrases out of my lesson book, hunted up an atlas and encyclopedia (the "M" volume), and wrote a story for the "Herald" about Mexico. That was before I went there. It was a short story, a real good one, by the way, and they sent me $7, or at least a piece of paper that said it was $7. The postmaster at Bentonville said it was just a notice saying they were going to send the money later, but the banks didn't know what it was. One of them gave me seven silver dollars, but afterward the postmaster wanted about half of it back. I thought of going around to the "Herald" building and telling them I was the author from Arkansas, but it didn't seem worth the trouble.

That rooming-house where Morton took his nap was in no particular different from its class. You go through an archway in a plain brick wall and find yourself in a court open to the sky, with walls on two sides and the front of the house on the other, with a gallery running around the upper floor. It is dark down upon the court pavement, that is, rather gloomy, and there are some old barrels and a broken-down cart and a smell of bathrooms, and a general air of peeling off of stucco or paint. Up above you, on the balcony, which is reached by an open-air stairway running down into the court, it is brighter and more cheerful, but rather stronger in smell. Some maids were chattering in Spanish and likely enough understanding one another, and there was a cat who took us for the enemy and went flying, with his tail straight behind him, and, so far as I know, has not stopped yet. Down there cat is "gato;" but I do not know if you address the creature as "gittie, gittie, gittie."

The center of the city is occupied by the Plaza Mayor, and it is on one side of this great park of benches that one finds the Cathedral. It is by far the largest church building on the Western Hemisphere, and it makes even St. Peter's, at Rome, swell its naves and get up on tiptoe to show that its steeple is higher.

It seems too bad that it took ninety-four years in building. Those who started it couldn't see it completed, yet we who had never carried a bucket of sand to stick it together could go and see all there was of it. And we did. It is 500 feet long, if that tells you anything. It sounds like an example to me when I hear cathedral dimensions, as if some one were about to add, "And how many square feet in the sides, making allowance for the windows." It is built in the Spanish Renaissance style, as I find on coming home and looking it up. While I was there there seemed no particular Spanish style except to burden one's head with enormous hats and to let one's legs go bare. If a gentleman there should put on a meal-sack and gird in his middle, he would be accepted with as naive a calm as any man in party dress parading at nine in the morning.

But I find myself wandering away from that Cathedral of Mexico. Leaning against its outer wall is the celebrated Aztec Calendar stone. Stoddard says it is twelve feet in diameter and Conkling says it is eleven. The Cathedral is a marvelous structure, but our examintion was cursory. Morton said, "That's the Cathedral." I said, "Is it?" Morton said, "Now that long building on the other side is the Government palace." I looked at it. It was 675 feet long. Cortez began its construction. The Cathedral stands on the site of the great temple of bygone Aztec greatness, dedicated to the god Huitzilopochtli. You don't pronounce it; you just write it down.

Over at the Plaza Mayor I felt like I was getting too much information. Besides, all the seats were taken, because when a Mexican sits down he just stays there, so there's no use of waiting for a vacancy. Jebly and I went back to the street fair to look at the people, and Morton, who had made short work of his nap, soon joined us. I could never tire of the grace and naturalness of the hundreds of Mexican ladies sitting in the street with their bare, upturned toes, ever and anon flipping away the flies. And I never ceased to admire the admirable gravity of the huge-hatted men, who stand so flat and low and solid that I am sure no wind could blow them over. In all the varied lines of booths I saw no activity, no rushing about. There was a great deal of noise, but the shouts came at easy intervals, apparently without the exertion of any muscles. Mouths opened like the mouths of toy banks, a yell or laugh, or threat, was let out like a bird, then the mouth slowly settled back to a closed position.

Before I went to Mexico I was resolved to eat some tortillas—that universal bread of the natives, pronounced tor-tee-yah. In Spain, when they come across a word containing a double "l," they glide over it with a lap of the tongue as we do in saying "brilliant." But in Mexico, when the natives find a double "l," they throw up the job altogether. They will pronounce a single "l," but two of them is more than they will attempt, so they say "y" instead. I knew tortillas are made of water and crushed up corn, and I had seen pictures of women sitting around a fire on the ground cooking them. Still I came away from the land of its origin without having tasted a tortilla. I saw plenty of the flat, hard cakes, but the women who had them careless of person that I could not summon the fortitude to say "Quanto?" I was told that they are absolutely tasteless, though resisting between the stoutest teeth, and their efficacy consists in being eaten with the hot chile. The literal tastelessness of the tortilla is more than supplemented by the overpowering heat of the chile, and being in the mouth at the same time, one tastes enough for both.

The houses in Mexico City are built about a patio or court. On a level with the pavement you see a high wall, which you might think the front wall of the house; but it is the front wall of the court. There is a large opening or gateway, through which the carriage is driven right into the middle of the pile. Doors on either side show that the house, running back from the pavement in the form of a horseshoe, as it were, leaves a central space or yard, and this yard is adorned with statues, tropical plants and stone seats. There is nothing about the plain exterior wall to suggest the beauty and luxury within. The hotels are built upon the same plan. For instance, the most celebrated, the Iturbide, stands far back behind a great open space, and you must find your way through the gateway in an ordinary-looking wall on the side of the street, wander across the patio, and decide which door of the many doors facing you on either hand is the one to apply to for a room. Whichever door you apply to, they will want $6 a day if two persons occupy the same room. That is why we did not stop at the Iturbide. This home of good cheer, named after the emperor of brief tenure, is suggestively pronounced eat-er-beetie, though I think few vegetables are eaten at any of the hotels.

About six that evening we dined at an American eating-house. The restaurants and rooming-houses do not advertise their wants. Morton had been to the city before, had heard of our eating-house from a friend, so he took us there. Nothing in its appearance indicated that it was a public place. In the doorway of the front wall three Mexican young ladies sat flat upon the pavement, solemnly waiting for time to go by. We scrambled over them and entered a brick-paved court, from which a winding stair led to an upper balcony. We went upstairs and found the dining room. Although the cooking was American, it showed it was away from home by presenting us with a dish of beans with fried green bananas. It was pretty cool. Mexico City was the first cool spot we had touched in our travels. There is no provision for fires in the houses, because it is claimed that fires rarify the already rare air—the city boasts of an elevation of 7,500 feet. The only remedy is to close the door. As people were continually coming in and leaving it open, we felt we were warming up the premises from the number of times we closed the door; but the room never grew comfortably warm. After supper it was dark. We went back to the Alameda and skirted the imitation of the Mosque of Omer, once the center of the lotteries, where Diaz' wife once drew $50,000. The electric cars (which in every book I have on Mexico are drawn by mules) whizzed past, and the automobiles shot like dark shadows everywhere. We sought the stone benches facing one of the still fountains, and gazed upon the strange scene. Seven days ago I had been in peaceful Arkansas, watching the plum-blossoms fall. Eight days ago the idea of coming to Mexico had not entered my mind. Since then there had been such a swift succession of new scenes that I had not been able to center my mind upon my destination. In two hours I was to hurry back home. Hence it is that the brief day in the City of Mexico lingers in my mind as something different from anything else in my life, as if I had been peeping for a while into a world of enchantment. The language that sounded on all sides was strange; the faces were not the faces of my own race; the gestures, the sports, the dress, the heart of the city were alien. As the electric lights flooded the plaza with white glory, evidence that Easter was near at hand was unmistakable. Toys, whose only merit was that of making a noise when dragged upon the ground, were to be heard everywhere. Grown people had them as well as the children. The ice cream men, bearing the freezer balanced upon their heads, went about shouting ice cream in Spanish, and dangling from their hands buckets containg spoons and saucers swimming in water to wash themselves. The Mexicans sat stoically about the square, looking on and saying nothing. The children furnished the voices and the laughter. The lord in his blanket took light for his cigarette from the cigarette of his lady. The Spanish ladies, in their black lace veils of mourning, passed in endless number. Men with shirts in, men with shirts out. men without shirts, men blanketed and unblanketed, men with hats of straw or felt, big enough for a colony of bees to swarm and live in, men dressed like the aristocracy in pictures, men with full Indian stolid brows, and fierce keen Spanish mustaches, and lowering, half-cast eyes, men with the beard of bandits and the lean, hungry look of the desert—all kinds of men and women passed in review, except the men and women one finds at home.

The plaza was girdled with seats, and every seat was taken, while hundreds wandered about waiting for somebody to get up. A heavy Mexican came and stood directly in front of Morton and began to sing. It was the only native song fortune brought my way, and I enjoyed it immensely. I couldn't understand the words, or the tune either, but the motive was as clear as the arc light. For, when the discords were no longer to be borne, Morton got up to escape and the vocalist immediately seized his place and stopped singing, to the delight of his compatriots.

Not long after we hurried to the station to secure berths in our special, billed to leave in the morning. It was the last time the special would run during the season—until the next time—but the advertisements didn't advertise that clause, and every berth was taken by people who wanted to travel in a hurry. The Limited—that is, the train limited to stop at every station en route—stood ready to pull out. Jebly and I decided at the last moment to go on this train. We had little time to secure berths in the Pullman, get Jebly's tricycle on the baggage car and bid Morton farewell. Our hand shaking was done from the car window, and we left Morton tiptoeing for another clasp as the Limited drew out for its long journey. It was then nine o'clock, and already the porter had made up the beds. It is always dampening to the spirits of a traveling party when one of its leading members stops off before the home-coming. It was particularly depressing now, because the sudden parting had not been anticipated. However, at every parting there is one thought that acts upon one in a consolatory manner, namely: "Whoever is gone, I, at least, am still here!" And deriving what comfort we might from this reflection, we went to bed.

In a Dog Cemetery in London.

By Dr. George Thomas Dowling.

London, August 3.—In New York City when I was a boy we used to call the policemen "Peelers"; though I never knew why until yesterday, and never knew before that the word ought to be spelled with a capital P. While riding on top of a 'bus, that most democratic and delightful means of circulating through this great labyrinth, and of which Gladstone declared that it was the best way in which to see London, our attention was directed to a statue of Sir Robert Peel; and the man who kindly pointed it out to us informed us that he was the father of the prevailing police system, of which every citizen here has such reason to be proud; and that this was the reason that years ago the police were called "Peelers." Thus our New York custom was simply an importation from over the seas. How true it is that the history of words is the history of history.

The old lady, who was in sport asked to read a dictionary for pastime, and who, when she was asked how she enjoyed it, replied that it was no doubt a very learned book, but that somehow she could not become interested in the plot, said more than she meant, and the truth was on her side. It not only contains a plot but a thousand plots. What an interesting article, by the way, might be written on "The Biography of Words."

Take for example the word "Pickwickian." What a history that word suggests. I thought of it last night when listening to an illustrated lecture on "Pickwick Land." Seventy years ago an unknown young fellow by the name of Dickens, a reporter on a London journal and only 23 years old, wrote a series of sketches for monthly publication. This week there is being held in the New Dudley Gallery a Pickwick exhibition, under the auspices of the Dickens Fellowship, to celebrate the seventieth anniversary of the completion of the Pickwick Papers." Here are more than 500 exhibits, including programs of dramatized versions, translations, autographs, etc., and what a story they tell. "Pickwick Papers" has been translated into almost every civilized tongue, including Russian and Dutch. Here is a book of selections with raised characters, so that even the blind might read. Here on exhibition is a concordance to Pickwick with 650 names indexed, over 600 additional references and 250 cross-references. Here is another work entitled "Daily Pickings from Pickwick," a selection of quotations for every day in the year; and others, such as "Wellerisms from Pickwick," "Pickwickian Wit and Humor," "Mr. Pickwick, the Two Wellers and Alfred Jingle," and many other works which are the outgrowth of these sketches by the young man 23 years of age. Recently a single firm of London publishers sold a quarter of a million copies of this earliest work of his.

On the walls of the exhibition room are pictures of the hotels where Pickwick is supposed to have tarried, and these hotels have become shrines of tourists, to whom the enterprising proprietors point out the very bedroom in which Pickwick slept—the man who never had an existence, except in the brain of the young genius who set all England a-laughing at him. Yet, strange to say, this book, which made him famous and opened up to him the friendly arms of all the world, he cared less for than any which he wrote, and seemed to wish never to be reminded of it. What has made it thus immortal? "It's the humor on't, man!" said Carlyle of Falstaff, and we may say the same of Pickwick. The world loves to be made genuinely and healthily merry, and "It's the humor on't, man," which has made the fat little man and his friends live for all these years.

One of the oddest little corners of London is the Dog's cemetery, with its regularly laid out graves and chiseled headstones and their unique inscriptions. A quarter of a century ago the Duke of Cambridge and his wife were driving through Kensington Gardens, and as they neared the Victoria Gate they halted their carriage that their pet dog, Prince, might alight for exercise. But when they started, by some accident the horse stepped on him and he was killed. The Duke, who at that time was the official ranger of the park, decided to bury him in the garden of the adjacent gatekeeper's lodge. There to-day is his grave, with the inscription, "Poor Little Prince." Others heard of it, and when they lost their pets by death, sought and gained permission to follow the Duke's example, so that now there are buried here more than 400 pet dogs, cats, parrots and monkeys.

Here is the grave of a monkey, "Jock," and on its headstone the inscription, "Could love have saved thou hadst not died." Another voices the despair of a woman over her dear departed "Jane." Of her the woman says: "She brought the sunshine into our lives, but she took it away with her." The woman is evidently now living in the dark. Here are three graves placed, either accidentally or with purpose, in close and meaningful juxtaposition. The respective names of the occupants are "Scotty," "Paddy" and "Whisky."

Some of the inscriptions are dignified and some genuinely pathetic. This, for example:

In loving memory
Darling Jockie, a Scotch Collie.
Died October 31st, 1895.
Aged 15 years.
The most intelligent, faithful, gentle, sweet-tempered and affectionate dog that ever lived, and adored by his devoted and sorrowing friend,
Sir H. Seton Gordon, Bart.

Here is another which almost paints for us the picture of the little child mistress, turning away with tear-stained cheeks from the grave of her playmates:

Mona.
Born Nov. 2nd, 1878,
Died August 15th, 1892.
Loved, Mourned and Missed.
Also "Punch."
Mona's companion.
Died February 14th, 1895.
"Adieu, dear Doggies."

Here is one to "Poor Dear Tappy," with the name of his master inscribed on his tombstone, "Lord Patre." Another, a grave which was made ten years ago, still has upon its headstone the framed picture of the dog himself, "Toby," a beautiful fellow who looks out upon one from his surrounding wreath of flowers as though he were just ready to bark good-naturedly and wag his tail in welcome. And underneath is recorded the suggestive memorial, "What games we have had!"

Here is a tombstone bearing the Mexican coat of arms, "In loving memory of our darling Gerino"; and here a curiosity. It is the memorial to a dead cat, and illustrates the undying bitterness of a woman's hatred when it has once been aroused:

In Memoriam
My dear little cat,
Chinchilla.
Lovely, loving and most dearly loved;
Poisoned July 31st, 1895.
God restore thee to me. So prayeth thy ever loving Mistress.

The "ever loving mistress" having gotten thus far, went to the British Museum and consulted certain scholars. She secured, written in Koptic hieroglyphics, a curse upon the one who administered the poison, and this curse is there recorded to last for all time.

Some of these inscriptions are theological:

"Fritz."
Neither forgetting nor forgotten.
We are only sleeping, Master.
Luke xii, 6—Not one of them is forgotten before God.

And here is one so tender, so manly and sincere that I have reserved it until the last. In India, Colonel Whyte-Melville, having lost his favorite gray horse, whom he had learned to dearly love, buried him and erected a monument to his memory. On that monument appeared the original text of this inscription. It has been copied here in this cemetery as the epitaph to a faithful dog named "Charlie," aged 14 years:

There are men, both good and wise,
Who say that dumb creatures
We have cherished here below
Shall give us kindly greeting,
When we pass the Golden Gates.
Is it folly if we hope it may be so?

After lounging away the first two weeks of his vacation on the farm a Georgia student received rather insistent notice one morning that the carriage needed washing. Finding a tub full of water near the pump, he proceeded to ask whether it might be used for his purpose.

"Jim," he said to one of the old darkies on the place, "what do they use that tub for?"

"I don't know, Marse George," replied the negro, "jes zactly what dey do use dat tub foh."

"Oh, pshaw, Jim," said George, imperiously. "Been here a whole year, and don't know what the tub's for? What do they do with it?"

"Well, massa," said Jim, at his wits' end, "I reckon dey jest uses dat tub foh to keep water in foh to keep it from leakin'."—Harper's Weekly.

Doubtless you have all heard the saying about the tune the old cow died of, but perhaps you have never heard the story which tells how this old saying came into use.

It comes to us from an old song, which ran thus:

"There was an old man, and he had an old cow.
And he had nothing to give her;
So he took out his fiddle, and played her a tune—
'Consider, good cow, consider;
This is no time of the year for the grass to grow;
Consider, good cow, consider.'"

The old cow died of hunger while listening to this tune; and so, when any ridiculous tune is played or sung, people are apt to say, "That's the tune the old cow died of."—Apples of Gold.

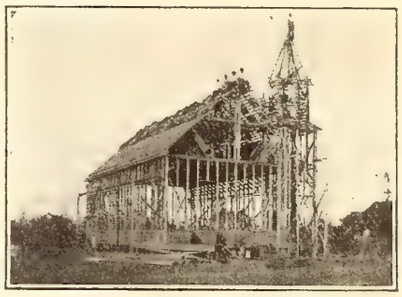
THE FIRST SUNDAY IN SEPTEMBER



Church Extension is our only hope. We can borrow nowhere else.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-TWO HOMELESS CONGREGATIONS SHOULD BE HOUSED.

OUR NEW WATCHWORD.

"We must raise $100,000 a Year to Reach a Million by 1909."

A homeless church leads an uncertain life in a new community.

MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS are needed to house the homeless congregations that have asked for aid of the Board of Church Extension,

SINCE JANUARY 1st, 1907.

AT THE RATE OF TWO AND THREE A DAY

mission congregations are writing to the Board of Church Extension for aid to complete their buildings. They can not borrow money from the banks or Trust Companies. Even if they had the credit they can not afford the high rates. They depend on this Annual Offering for money which they can get nowhere else.

IT INVITES DISASTER

for a mission to borrow from secular loan companies on short time and at high rates. Church Extension loans are made at four per cent and for five years and, where necessary, extension of time is made. Every reasonable thing is done to help the mission to get on its feet and be useful in the community.

WHAT A GREAT HOST ARE OUR HOMELESS CHURCHES!

Twelve Hundred and more are without a meeting place. They meet in a hall to-day, in a vacated store-room to-morrow,—going about from Pillar to Post like the baseless fabric of a dream. Will people join themselves to such an organization? They will not. On the contrary they will say:

"THIS CONGREGATION HAS NOT COME HERE TO STAY."

Other Religious Bodies do not so treat their newly organized missions. When the Congregational Home Missionary Society reported over 360 homeless churches at their convention in 1900, it so stirred their people that they resolved to raise

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS

at once and house every homeless church. When the report was made in 1901 it showed $268,000 RAISED AND EVERY CONGREGATION SHELTERED.

NEARLY FOUR TIMES AS MANY

homeless congregations among us, simply and only Christian. They have faith to shoulder responsibility. Heavy tasks have been undertaken by them. Their destiny is connected with a church home. They are our brethren standing for the same Holy Cause. "Back to Christ" is on their banner. They contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. Restoration of the New Testament Gospel is their cry. The Union of God's people is their daily prayer. God's Word is their rule of life and Pentecost is the birthday of the Church in their teaching. They want The New Covenant dispensed and not The Old. They do not want the Bondage of Human Creeds but the Liberty of Christ. They preach that the Gospel is the power of God unto Salvation, that faith comes by hearing and that baptism is for the remission of sins. In short they stand for all these things that older and stronger churches stand for.

SHALL THEY STAND IN WEAKNESS OR IN STRENGTH?

The answer your church gives to this question must be made by the liberality of your offering to Church Extension on

ONE OF THE SUNDAYS IN SEPTEMBER.

The Offering is the main thing, not the Day. Select a Sunday when your people are at home and make it a Great Day, a Red Letter Day, a Memorable Day, because you raised the greatest offering for Church Extension in your history. Collect pledges promptly and send the money to the Church Extension office so that it arrives before September 30th. Remit to G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec., 600 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

* * * * *

Small and large personal gifts should be sent direct to the office if your church does not take the collection. Older people should send annuity money.

Church Extension money completes a church every five years.

OUR ANNUITY PLAN

If, when the money is given, the Annuitant is between the ages of 21 and 39, inclusive, a bond will be issued paying 4 per cent during the natural life of the Annuitant. Between the ages of 40 and 49, inclusive, the rate will be 5 per cent during the natural life of the Annuitant. At the age of 50 years or more the rate will be 6 per cent. The income to the Annuitant is regular; no time or money is lost by reinvestment; there are no taxes to pay; the money is building churches while earning a good income for the Annuitant, and at death the money is where the donor wants it to be without any contest of the will. Up to August 1, 1907, there have been 195 gifts on the Annuity Plan amounting to more than $197,000. Our Annuity Bond is as good as a government bond. It is backed up by all our Fund, which is now over $600,000, and growing every day. Address for information, or remit to him directly, and your Bond will be promptly sent.

G. W. MUCKLEY, Kansas City, Mo.,

After the September offering we hope to complete our building.

THE UNBUILT CHURCH.

OUR own are suffering for its coming while they meet in public halls; unsaved saints await its rearing while they have not where to hear the Word; the table of our Lord is spread in places that it cannot hallow. A great threefold tide of brotherliness, zeal and loyalty should move us all to fellowship in this necessity. From a thousand American cities the want appeals. Let even the unhoused help one another Let all the sheltered give as unto the Lord for his little ones. —Just a little enterprise, a little thrift, a little enthusiasm will enable you to secure enough new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to meet your expenses to the Norfolk convention.

—Clarence E. Miller, of London, Ky., sends in four new subscribers, and directs that their year begin with the first of the editorial series on "First Principles." It is needless to say that these ringing editorials on the great tenets of "our plea" are being greatly enjoyed by Disciples everywhere.

—J. M. Rudy, of Sedalia, Mo., has sent in a large order for "The Frequency of the Lord's Supper," by N. J. Aylsworth. He expects to use 400 in his own congregation. One hundred thousand of these ought to be distributed among Disciples. They are 25 cents each. Special prices for large quantities.

—A traveler putting up at a small hotel out in California brought the porter up to his room with his angry storming.

"Want your room changed, sir? What is the matter?"

"The room's all right," fumed the guest, scorchingly. "It's the fleas I object to, that's all."

"Mrs. Hawkins!" shouted the porter, in an uninterested sort of voice, "the gent in No. 7 is satisfied with his rooms, but he wants the fleas changed."

Do not delay another day! Order your Bible school literature for the new quarter beginning October 1 by first mail. This will insure your having it ready for distribution the last Lord's day in the month, notwithstanding possible delays in the mail and other hindrances. Samples, price lists, descriptive circulars and order blanks sent on application.

—Now that "harvest money" is in the hands of those who sow and reap, it is an excellent time for the practical, actual, friends of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to renew their efforts to make it a regular visitor to every home in their congregation. An interesting feature for this page can be made by your writing us the results of your first ten trials. Last week the paper started to these new clubs:

Amarillo, Tex., Jewell Howard, pastor..... 3
Knox City, Dr. Northcutt, representative..... 4
Moberly, Mo., E. G. Merrill, pastor..... 5
Williamsburg, Ky., C. E. Miller, pastor..... 5
Princeton, Ill., C. C. Carpenter, pastor..... 6
Bolivar, Mo., J. H. Jones, pastor 7
Syracuse, N. Y., C. R. Stauffer, pastor..... 7
Walnut, Ill., R. L. Beshers, pastor 8
Grand Rapids, Mich., F. C. Aldinger, pastor..20

—In considering which paper you wish to be part of the religious inspiration of your people, recall that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has never in its history added to the difficulties confronting any of the recognized missionary, educational and benevolent interests of the church. It may not always approve all of the methods of all the workers, but it may be depended upon that it will never hurt a great cause in order to gratify a vanity wounded by the failure of conscientious brethren whose abilities have called them to positions of responsibility and trust to act on our judgment instead of their own.

—Home Life of Alexander Campbell. By his wife. Original price, $2.25. A few copies will be sold for $1.25. It contains a fine steel engraving of Brother Campbell at 41 years of age, and of the gifted authoress at 68. Its 503 pages ought to be read by all interested in the domestic facet of this wonderful man.

—Elocution and Oratory. By Allen Griffith. $1.50. This is now in its 24th edition. To reduce stock, will send postpaid for $1. This is less than cost price. Its instruction has never been surpassed, and its selections are of classic eloquence. Preachers, other public speakers and students will find it full of quotables.

—After the Primary; What? By A. H. McKinney. 75 cents. This "primary" is more important than those political. It holds its sessions in Bible schools instead of on the hustings. The book marks one of the latest results in psychological research and pedagogical experiment, and will be invaluable to parents and pastors, as well as to Sunday-school teachers. It is already in its second edition.

—How a Man Grows. By John R. T. Lathrop. $1.25. This has to do with Cosmic and Christian ethics, Cosmic and Christian regeneration, with the forces in man's becoming what he ought to be, with the certainties of religion, the religion of the future and the coronation of man. The introductory chapter on the "Problem of Man" is worth the price of the book. Its task is a profound one, but it is all accomplished as in the light.

—The Culture of Simplicity. By Malcolm J. McLeod. $1. It treats of simplicity and spirituality, happiness, greatness, trust, scripture, sorrow, culture, etc. The first suspicion of imitation is quickly dispelled. The book stands on its own merits. More vivacious, more practical for the American reader than Charles Wagner's "The Simple Life." It explains more clearly how the life may be lived, and reaches the root of things in the Gospel of Christ.

—The Old Faith Restated. Edited by J. H. Garrison. $2. The underlying thought of the Editor "was to present a fresh and independent restatement of the great truths and principles of Christianity as they are apprehended, held and advocated by representative men of the Current Reformation to-day." "Grounds on Which We Receive the Bible as the Word of God, and the Only Rule of Faith and Practice," by Bro. J. W. McGarvey, is the opening chapter. Other most helpful contributors are G. W. Longan, J. S. Lamar, J. J. Haley, I. B. Grubbs (on the "Doctrine of Justification by Faith"), H. W. Everest, J. B. Briney, D. R. Dungan, A. I. Hobbs, W. K. Pendleton, J. M. Trible, George Plattenburg, B. B. Tyler, B. W. Johnson. Such clear restatements as are made by these brethren were never more needed than right now. We have, perhaps, sixty of these volumes still in stock.

Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all. And because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100 not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.

The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the Doxology and The Lord Is In His Temple.

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

Christian Union By F. M. Green

To use a trite saying: "Christian union is in the air;" indeed it has been in the air a long time and unfortunately much of it is "in the air" yet. How long before it will get down to solid earth is one of the questions which I am unable to answer. Fifty years ago I thought its legs were long enough to reach the ground. One of the first subjects I ever preached about was "Christian Union," and I settled the matter to my satisfaction. I could not see why everyone could not and should not do just what Christ and the Apostles said ought to be done in order to become the "dear children" of God. Somehow it seemed to me that if every one would do just that, there would not be anything in the way to complete oneness in Christ. Freeborn as I was, I did not realize how great a price some must pay for the same kind of freedom I possessed; and which I had had from my mother's knee. But as my experience widened and my information was increased, I found that from the human standpoint there were difficulties to overcome. Early training, parental dogmatism, partisan friendship, limited biblical knowledge and knowledge of the importance of the subject, or its purposes or results, and many other things of more or less imaginary or real importance, were in the way.

The necessity of denominations to take charge of the varied interests of the church—some to look after the creed, some after the order, some after the millinery, some after clerical forms, and so on—was used with prodigious enthusiasm. Then some thought that it was better to have the divisions, so that the land forces and the water forces could be more fully employed in the great kingdom of God. All immersionists were classed as in the navy, and all the rest belonged to the land army. And how the big guns on land and sea did roar in my boyhood! But to my horror they mostly pitched into each other instead of doing any serious damage to the common enemy. Even "federation" in matters bearing on the common good was not worthy of consideration by the belligerent "land and water" forces. Often the use of a denominational meeting house was refused for funeral services unless the "corpse" was of the same "faith and order" of the meeting house.

In the beginning of my own ministry if I desired any social relation with the denominational ministry I had generally to make the first advances. I had hard work to walk the "gang plank" from battleship to the landing; for I knew not which would shoot first at what both sides took me for, an "evangelical pirate." Now all these facts have occurred within the half century of my own public life. They are not exaggerated facts, though as I now tell them their humorous features control my mind instead of the real sober and exasperating things they were when they occurred.

With the Disciple preachers of fifty and seventy-five years ago, Christian union was one of the stock sermons which was never omitted in any series of meetings, long or short. They were often most eloquent pleas for the real thing—union in Christ in accordance with his own word and that of his Apostles. It had its effect too, and the little handful of corn sown became a large field. These efforts showed that religiously divided people could be united and be as one in Christ. It is not going beyond the facts to say that this early preaching of the Disciples of Christ did bring together in the most fervent fellowship and the completest union, the sinner from the world, the Jew, the Catholic, the Episcopal, the Methodist, the Baptist, the Presbyterian, the Universalist, the Unitarian, the Lutheran, the Congregationalist, and from every other denominational body that to any intelligent degree represented divided Christendom. That the matter could be done was proved by the fact that it was done. Perhaps this success had a retarding influence looking to the final result. The Disciples became a noticeable body and with their plea for union they placed other accessories which started the suspicion that they were working for party triumph and the denominational graveyard rather than for real Christian union. Somehow it seemed to many like the voice of Moses to Hobab, "Come thou with us and we will do thee good," with the emphasis on the "us" and "we."

But the seed of union was planted and the sprouts began to appear and grow. The leaven was placed in the lump and wholly unleavened bread is now hard to find. Differences and antagonisms that once reached like a wall of iron from the earth to the sky, are now so feeble that a child can handle them.

The laboring oar has nearly fallen out of the hands of those who first were compelled to use it, and thousands, in many parts and in diverse ways, are making melody over the approach of the day when they "may all be perfected into one," "even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may know that thou didst send me."

This condition of things is full of encouragement. The more numerous and wide-spread the advocates of Christian union are found, the sooner the end will be reached. Many books, and pamphlets, and tracts, and newspaper articles have appeared within the last twenty-five years, in which the desirability, the practicability, the objections, the value, and other phases of the question have been discussed with more or less intelligence and earnestness. Many sermons from good and gifted men in denominational pulpits have also been added to the sum total of advocacy.

At this stage of the discussion it is opportune that the history of the subject should appear; and that its author should be a sincere lover of the plea, whose highest "ambition in these closing years of his public life, is to promote the unity and fellowship of all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." The history of Christian union is presented in excellent form and with judicial fairness by J. H. Garrison in his little volume of two hundred pages. Both logically and chronologically, the subject is so divided as to make a fine schedule for study for those who desire to consider the question in fuller detail than was necessary from the author's standpoint. The day had "fully come" when such a volume would be of great value in the study and settlement of the question. In describing these times Dr. Francis Greenwood Peabody of Harvard University, in his recent volume on "Jesus Christ and the Christian Character" says: "The ecclesiastical claims of the various sects have become simply uninteresting; the piety of the Christian mystic has retreated before the demands of the busy world; but the world itself, with its unredeemed masses, its unsolved problems, its cry for help, is of unprecedented and dramatic concern." * * * "The constructions of systems

By a parliamentary bill which became a law last week, an Englishman can now legally marry his deceased wife's sister. The fight for and against this measure will be one of the classic instances of parliamentary patience. For nearly half a century every Parliament has been called upon to consider a bill having for its object the granting of the inestimable privilege of marrying one's deceased wife's sister. Except in one instance, the Commons have always been for the measure and the Lords against it. Patience has prevailed, and at last, moved by a personal suggestion from the king, the Lords have passed the bill. It is notable, however, that the seventeen bishops who have seats in the House of Lords all opposed the bill to the very end, on the ground that it was contrary to the divine law as laid down for all time in the Book of Leviticus. The incident contributes something to the understanding of the nature and disposition of the British bishop. The importance of the bill appears chiefly in the fact that annually some hundreds of Englishmen, including many of the nobility, have been marrying their deceased wives' sisters, regardless of the law. The retroactive clause in the bill legalizes these marriages and legitimatizes several thousand children.

The Deceased Wife's Sister.

Much is being made by the critics of the foreign society of the fact that the Standard Oil Company has been fined to the amount of over twenty-nine million dollars for its violations of the law concerning rebates, etc. It will be noticed, however, that no suits have been brought against Mr. Rockefeller for the manner in which he is distributing his immense fortune. The failure to discriminate between these two very different things is at the bottom of much of this confusion of thought. Let every violation of law receive its due measure of punishment, and let every effort that is being made by multimillionaires to distribute their fortunes for the public good be encouraged, for by such distribution alone, aside from the legal fines imposed, can these colossal fortunes be made to subserve the public welfare, instead of becoming a menace to the order and stability of the government.

We neglected to mention, as we should have done in connection with the Standard Oil fine, the indignant comments of Dr. Day, chancellor of Syracuse University. We might have mentioned them before they were made just as well as after, for they were, in the nature of things, predestined to be made. It is a shame, says Dr. Day, a miserable shame, a travesty upon justice, an utter violation of common fairness, to assess against the corporation a fine equal to twenty-nine times the amount of its capitalization. The offense was not really committed by the Standard Oil Company, you remember; that is, not by what is commonly known as the Standard Oil Company, a New Jersey corporation of which one John D. Rockefeller is president. The receiver of rebates in this case was a wholly distinct company, to-wit, the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, which is capitalized at only one million dollars, and of which Mr. Rockefeller is not an officer at all. The two corporations, please remember, are wholly distinct. Therein lies the gross injustice of fining the Indiana company twenty-nine times the amount of its capitalization just because it happens to have a name much like that of the notoriously affluent Standard Oil Company (of New Jersey), with its hundred million of capital stock and many times that amount of assets. Again remember that the two corporations are absolutely distinct—except that Mr. Rockefeller's Standard Oil Company owns all the stock of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana (except $400 worth) and therefore reaps all the benefit of the rebates which it receives. Chancellor Day does not think this circumstance has any bearing on the case. Judge Landis evidently did. The procedure of the oil companies in the matter is a good deal like that of the man who puts his property in his wife's name to avoid paying his debts.

Plans for postal reform have taken a new direction since Mr. Meyer has been postmaster - general. Instead of plans for increasing the rate on periodicals and harassing the publishers with new restrictions, we hear of plans for the improvement of the service. The establishment of a domestic parcels post at reasonable rates is one of the most important. The express companies have always been able to block this plan hitherto, but Mr. Platt and the other express politicians are a little less potent at present than formerly. The establishment of a postal savings bank is contemplated. This will provide the means and the incentive for accumulating savings in small sums. Except in the extreme eastern part of the country, savings banks have been neither very popular nor uniformly safe. There may be a restoration of the convenient old "postal note," but payable to a specified individual instead of to bearer. Rural free delivery will be extended. The rate of foreign postage to countries having direct steamer connections may be reduced from five to two cents per half ounce. An experiment is to be made in the use of automatic stamp-selling machines. For ten years there have been waiterless restaurants in several European cities, where one could get a pretty square meal by dropping various coins into sundry labelled slots and holding cup, plate or glass to catch the viand or beverage as it is automatically delivered. It ought to be a comparatively simple matter to dispense postage-stamps by the nickle-in-the-slot method.

Postal Reforms.

The fact has been pointed out that the Panama Canal will be a paying investment for the government, even if it should cost considerably more than the highest estimate up to date, if it were used only for naval purposes. The existence of this canal will practically double the efficiency of our navy, since without it we are compelled to keep a navy in the Atlantic and one in the Pacific. The canal is expected to cost about $300,000,000. Call it $400,000,000 to be on the safe side. At the rate at which the government borrows money, this means an annual interest charge of about $12,000,000. Our navy costs us something more than $100,000,000 a year and the expenditure is not likely to be decreased soon. It looks like good business to make an annual expense of $12 double the efficiency of an existing annual expense of $100. As a matter of fact, the tolls received from commerce ought to come pretty near to paying the interest on the investment, leaving the naval advantage as so much clear profit.

A Paying Investment.

Hundreds of thousands of the true nobility of America marched through the streets of our great cities Monday under banners bearing the names of various labor organizations and legends expressing industrial hopes and aspirations. As far as reports have yet come their impressions and impact on our social and industrial fabrics were those of peace, and consequently were of the most powerful sort. Those parading the streets of St. Louis were stalwart, intelligent, self-reliant and had the light of hope shining about them. We would have no invidious comparisons, but we suspect that at least the sons of the "captains of industry" who keep books for these working hosts would have looked pudgy and dull if walking beside them. The ennoblement of them is part of the compensation of their honest toil. If labor leaders will not adopt rules tending to discourage personal initiative, if consciousness of power does not produce an arrogancy ignoring the rights of employers and their capital, and good morals be insisted upon as rigidly as short hours and hygiene, the millennium of toil will soon be upon us with no serpent in its paradise, and no tears in its song.

Some First Principles.

IV. Growing Up Into Christ.

Next to life itself, growth is the most essential thing in our Christian living. Indeed growth means more life and a larger life. Jesus came not only that men might have life, but that they might have it more abundantly. It is this more abundant, richer, fuller life, that is meant by our growing up into Christ. It is a sad perversion of Christ's whole purpose concerning man to suppose that his work with us and in us ends with our conversion or regeneration. In the spiritual, just as in the physical, realm there is infancy, childhood, and afterward, through the process of growth, full manhood or womanhood in Christ Jesus. Hence, the Apostle Paul, in stating the purpose for which Christ had given to the Church apostles, prophets, evangelists and teachers, says that they were "for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ: till we all attain unto the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; that we might be no longer children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, in craftiness, after the wiles of error; but speaking truth in love, may grow up in all things into him, who is the head, even Christ." (Eph. 4:12-15).

How shall this growth be made? Professor Drummond called attention, many years ago, to Christ's statement on this subject, in his sermon on the Mount. "Consider the lilies of the fields, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin." It was not the fact of their growth, Professor Drummond reminded us, to which Christ calls attention, but to the manner of their growth. They grow without any conscious effort on their part, and without any worry or anxiety on the subject; so, he argued, man is not to be painfully self-conscious in the matter of his growth, and fretting because he does not grow as fast as he imagines he ought to grow, but, like the lily, is simply to appropriate the nutrition which God furnishes, and God will take care of the growth. Man has one supreme advantage over the lily. The lily can not choose its environment, but must appropriate whatever nutrition comes to it in the place where it is; while man, being a free agent, may, within certain limitations, change his environment with the view of securing more favorable conditions for his spiritual growth. In each case, however, God furnishes the means of growth, and the man and the lily must appropriate them. The lesson which Christ desired to draw from the lily was that it made its growth and was clothed with a beauty exceeding that of the royal apparel of Solomon, without any conscious effort at growth and without any anxiety or worry about the matter. We are not to infer from this, however, that man is to have no concern in his spiritual development. As a rational being, he is expected to know God's purpose concerning him, and to co-operate with God in the fulfillment of that purpose. But he is to do that without anxiety or worry, or any motive of self-glorification. There is no kind of pride, perhaps, that is more displeasing to God than spiritual pride. When one gets to be proud of his humility and of his piety, and to feel his superiority over others less fortunate than himself, he has not yet learned Christ and must be emptied of his self-pride before he is in a condition to make a real growth.

We have said that it is given to man to know what God's purpose is concerning him. He expects his children to be conformed to the image of Jesus Christ. All real growth, therefore, must be in the direction of conformity to the character of Christ. This growth implies, first, that we shall know Christ; and, in the second place, that we appropriate the means of grace which God has furnished for attaining to his likeness. It was Paul's supreme desire to "know Christ," both in the "fellowship of his sufferings" and "in the power of his resurrection." Jesus himself said: "And this is life eternal, that they should know thee, the only true God and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." The Apostle Peter also admonishes the Christians of his day to "grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (2 Peter 3:18). In his salutation to the brethren, in the same epistle, Peter says: "Grace to you and peace be multiplied in the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord." (2 Peter 1:2). All these passages show that this growth which we are expected to make in the divine life comes through the knowledge of God as he is revealed to us in Jesus Christ. But the knowledge here spoken of is not an abstract, intellectual conception of the divine Being and his attributes, which may exist without any appreciable transfiguration in character, but such a knowledge as comes through experience in doing God's will and in trusting his promises. No man knows botany or geology or astronomy, or chemistry, or any other science from books merely. He must put the principles he learns from books to practical test in experimentation before he has a real knowledge of the science. This is pre-eminently true of Christianity, which is far more a life than it is a system or theory. The Bible is an excellent text-book, but we shall never know God truly by simply studying the Bible. We must do the things the Bible teaches us to do, and live the life that it teaches us to live. This is where most of us fail in our efforts to know God. We can not know Christ fully until we suffer with him and for him, and enter into active fellowship with him in his great enterprise of redeeming the world. When our hearts ache with the burden of the world's guilt and sorrow; when we are willing to suffer pain, and anguish of spirit, and poverty, and misrepresentation, and persecution, and to make ourselves "of no reputation" for the salvation of men, then we begin to know Christ and to understand something of the infinite love which brought him to the earth and led him through Gethsemane to Calvary. Let us, by all means, study the Bible, but let us unite Bible practice with Bible study; for knowing comes through doing, and growing up into Christ is the result of following him, even as he said: "If any man will come after me, let him take up his cross daily and follow me."

A Notable Event.

On August 27, at Pentwater, Mich., our widely-known brother, W. T. Moore, celebrated his seventy-fifth anniversary. It had been planned by his family to celebrate this event at Columbia, where Dr. Moore lives, in a rather elaborate manner, by keeping open house to the town. But the summer attractions at Pentwater drew him and his good wife thither. But in spite of this fact the occasion was an exceedingly pleasant one. A special dinner was provided at the club house, and nearly a score of invited guests were present, among whom were the resident minister at Pentwater, W. F. Schrontz, and his wife; J. L. Deming, minister at Norwalk, Ohio, and his wife; A. E. Jennings, and wife and daughter, from Detroit; Judge Montgomery, of the Supreme Bench of Michigan, and his wife, of Lansing; Mrs. A. H. Duncan, of St. Louis; Mrs. F. P. Arthur, of Grand Rapids; and these, with the Garrisons, with Brother and Sister Moore and their son, Paul Moore, sat down to a dinner prepared in the best style of the clubhouse. The Editor of this paper acted as toastmaster and, after introductory remarks and the reading of extracts from letters of friends who could not be present, called a number of toasts, which were responded to very pleasantly by Brothers Schrontz, Jennings, Deming, Judge Montgomery, Mrs. Moore and Paul Moore. The following extracts from letters received by Mrs. Moore were read:

Please present our hearty congratulations and assure Dr. Moore of our prayers that his distinguished life may be preserved yet many years. Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Haley.

We would consider it an honor to be present because of the long and useful life that Brother Moore has lived. Please present to him our kindest good wishes for many more years of good health, happiness and usefulness. Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Muckley.

We desire to be considered present in spirit and hereby offer our hearty congratulations upon the Doctor's completion of three-quarters of a century; and with our congratulations we send our wishes that he may enjoy many years yet of life, with usefulness and peace.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hardin.

Dear Brother Moore—It is a pleasure for me to join my voice with the multitude who arise and pay tribute to your noble and efficient service in the blessed cause of our Master in the especial work of the Disciples of Christ. I have been greatly helped by the work, "Man Preparing for Other Worlds." I am glad that my wife and family can meet you personally and give their congratulations. May the Divine Father bless you and deal gently with you and yours. Faithfully yours, F. P. Arthur.

Dear Brother Moore—I exceedingly regret I cannot be with you at the celebration next Tuesday, but I will certainly be with you in spirit. Few outside of your own family can esteem and love you more for your work's sake than I, and none can more fervently wish you a long continuance of your distinguished Christian usefulness than I. How happy I would be for any assurance that seventy-five years of my life would count for as much in time and eternity. With sincere Christian love,

I am yours fraternally,
Geo. L. Snively.

Dear Brother Moore: Accept my warmest congratulations on your seventy-fifth birthday anniversary. We young men have much to be thankful for in the example of faith and scholarship and open-mindedness and untiring energy which is set for us by some of the men whose anniversaries proclaim them old and whose wisdom is the fruit of long experience, but whose hearts are immortally young. You have helped us all. There are thousands of us who, if they would speak out, could say that you have made it easier for them to think straight and to live straight. I would like to shake hands with you and hear your voice on your three-quarter centennial. Since I cannot, I send my greetings by mail. Yours fraternally, W. E. Garrison.

Las Vegas, New Mexico.

I feel every inclination to be with you on this happy occasion. Would like to extend in a personal way my congratulations to Brother Moore on his arrival in a good old age. His labors have been varied and arduous and successful. I passed my seventy-fifth milestone last January. I am eight months older than Brother Moore and about three months older than Bro. T. P. Haley. We have all known each other and been co-workers for a long time—since early manhood—and nothing has ever intervened to mar our friendship and fellowship. We shall not be here many more years. Let us draw nearer and bide our time. It is impossible for me to attend any sort of social function. My physical condition forbids it. But my wife and I extend hearty congratulations to Brother Moore, and wish him a happy time and many returns of his anniversaries.

A. B. Jones.

Dr. Moore closed the speaking by a few feeling words, in which he expressed his appreciation of the kindness of friends, and reading extracts from his poem, "At Seventy-five," from the souvenir volume of his own poetry, a copy of which was presented to each family represented among the guests. This volume, bearing the imprint of the Christian Publishing Company, is as fine a specimen of bookmaking as we have ever seen, and the contents do credit to the head and heart of the distinguished author. Only a few hundred copies of the book were printed to supply his immediate friends and a few others that might wish to procure a copy. Without making any pretentions to being a poet, Brother Moore has written enough poetry at different times through his life to make a volume of 165 pages, and many of these indicate the true poetic spirit and insight.

Dr. Moore's chief work, however, has been that of preacher, editor and author. He has met with success in all these fields, and as a contributor to our periodical literature he has exerted a wide influence among his brethren. He is bold and independent in his views. He has never hesitated to express his thought on any living question. Trained at the feet of the Sage of Bethany, he has filled a large place in our history, and is now, at his advanced age, apparently in the full possession of all his faculties, and never exerted a greater influence nor held a more honored place among us than he does to-day.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST tenders its heartiest congratulations to him on his long and useful life and on the prospect of many more years of usefulness.

Notes and Comments.

One of the strangest and, from our point of view, the most unreasonable, propositions which we have known to be seriously proposed for some time, is that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society return to John D. Rockefeller the $25,000 it has received from him for missionary work in foreign lands. The unreasonableness of it, not to use a harsher term, becomes apparent the moment we stop to think what it means. In the first place the society, of course, has not kept the $25,000 hoarded up, but has already put it to work for the purposes for which it was donated. It has gone into college buildings in China or India, or in the building of bungalows for the missionaries, or in paying their salaries. How would the executive committee go about recovering this money from the parties to whom it has been paid? Of course, this would be impossible. But it may be suggested that the same amount of money, coming from other sources, could be used for the purpose of reimbursing Mr. Rockefeller. By whose consent? Who is ready to take the responsibility of giving a single dollar of money which he has to spare for the Lord's work, to be returned to Mr. Rockefeller, against his desire and purpose, when it might be used for the furtherance of the kingdom of God? If any individual has money to spare for that purpose, and can conscientiously so use it, no one need object, except Mr. Rockefeller himself, who would, no doubt, spurn any such offer. It is certain that the executive committee, acting in behalf of the brethren whom it represents, would have no right to do any such thing, except by the unanimous vote of the patrons of the society, which, of course, would be impossible.

Not only would the society be making a wrong use of its funds to recoup one of its donors who does not ask it nor wish it, but even a more serious wrong would be done by the principle that such action implies and publishes to the world, namely: that no man whose money has been secured by non-ethical methods has a right to devote such funds to moral and religious purposes by way of restitution, which, of course, means that they must either use it on themselves or spend it for worldly and non-religious objects. This course would be false in principle and, if carried out by all religious people, would work serious injury, especially to men of large means who have been identified with corporations whose methods, under our present industrial system could not be justified by the highest ethical standards. Any man with an awakened conscience, finding himself in legal possession of a large fortune, must feel bound to make such distribution of it as will best serve the public good, even though he has come to realize that the business methods by which it was made are wrong. To stand in the way of such distribution is to assume a moral responsibility which no society or individual has any right to assume.

There needs to be a much keener sense of moral responsibility for publishing, or writing for publication, articles which stir up division and strife, which furnish excuses to men for not supporting our missionary work, and which propose wild and impracticable schemes. The religious press is a mighty agency for building up the kingdom of God, but it may be, and often is, used, consciously or unconsciously, for the opposite purpose. The best of men may make mistakes, but when they are seen to be mistakes they should be abandoned instead of being clung to through a false sense of consistency. "Offences must needs come, but woe unto him by whom they come."

The defense made by the president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society of the course of the executive committee in accepting funds from Mr. Rockefeller, against the criticisms which have been made against it, has been complete and masterly. Nothing in our polemic literature has excelled it in cogency of argument, clearness of apprehension as to the principle involved, and in the excellent spirit which has characterized it. President McLean has shown himself a master in logical argumentation, and a pastmaster in the art of putting hard arguments in soft words. The brotherhood will, no doubt, stand by the executive committee in its action, and it would be a sad day for our missionary work if it should fail to do so.

Pentwater Musings.

We are writing these lines in the closing days of August, though they will not appear until September, the first of the autumn months, has made its advent. This means the early termination of our stay here by the lakeside for the present season, though the weather is such as to make us wish that it might be indefinitely extended. A great calm rests upon the lake and on the hills to-day, and the trees stand in reverent silence, as if contemplating the impending change of seasons. Far out along the rim of the horizon the dim haze adds an autumnal tint to the scene. It is one of those tranquil days which come at the close of summer or in the early autumn which, with its softened sunshine and solemn stillness brooding over all the landscape, puts the soul in tune with the Infinite. How good is God to give us such days, in which his smile and benediction seem to rest on land and lake! One feels that it is good to live in such a world, which his heavenly Father has fitted up for the abode of man. Here, where the beautiful woods and the placid lake have brought together their mutual charms in everlasting wedlock, one finds it easy to forget, for a little while, the world's sin and misery, and to think of the earth as an Eden where dwell peace and purity. Sometimes one feels, in such surroundings, that the earth is fair enough to be the everlasting abode of man, if all the sin and selfishness and greed and hatred were removed from it. Who knows but that the heaven for which we all sigh will be much like this earth, redeemed from sin and purified from all its contaminating influences? There may be something far better, of which we are not now able even to conceive, but none of us would feel that life was not worth the living, if we knew the scenes of earth, which we love so well, were to form a part of man's eternal home.

One may imagine that it would be difficult, on such a day as we have described above, to remain indoors all day musing. As a matter of fact, we have not done so. Even if we had felt so disposed, the presence of two such old sports as Dr. W. T. Moore and his son Paul, the Assistant Editor, who is spending a week with us, would have made such a program quite impossible. After an early lunch the three of us took the rowboat at our boathouse, lifted our sail to the breeze, which was directly from the west, and sailed away to the upper part of the lake, leaving instructions for a launch to bring the women up in the middle of the afternoon for a fish dinner. That sail up the lake, with just enough wind to fill the sail and make the water gurgle under the boat as we skimmed over its surface, was an event in itself to be remembered. Dr. Moore had captured two fish before we really anchored, and in two hours' fishing we had caught seventeen fish, more than half of them being white bass. By this time the ladies had arrived at the appointed rendezvous. A fire was kindled on the sand, and when it had burned to coals, a sufficient number of the fish having been beheaded and the entrails removed, they were wrapped in paper which was thoroughly wetted, placed in the hot sand and covered with hot embers and coals for half an hour. Meantime, the table was spread, and when the fish were exhumed from the sand there was a feast fit for kings and queens. When one has once eaten fish cooked in this way he realizes that he has never known before the real deliciousness of cooked fish. And then almost any kind of food would taste well in such a magnificent setting. Yonder in the west the sun was painting the evening clouds in gold and crimson, and the little lake lying out before us had become so still that the shore lines and trees and the floating clouds above were perfectly reflected upon its surface. Amid such surroundings and in such associations one renews his youth and gets a new lease on life. In the solemn twilight hour, the launch returned for the party, and, taking our rowboat in tow, we had a delightful ride over the placid lake to our cottages by the lakeside, where we arrived safely, feeling that we had stored away in the hall of memory a beautiful picture which we could recall with pleasure in the days to come.

Transient as these vacation days are, they are thrice enjoyed—once in anticipation, once in actual experience and evermore in memory. Speaking of memory, what a precious storehouse we may make of it by filling it with such acts, associations, friendships and scenes as recollection will be glad to summon before the mind when they shall have passed from the fleeting present into the infinite past! We are writing these sentences in the quiet hush of the night following this day of pleasant memories. It is a night worthy to succeed such a day. The wind which, during the day, blew sufficiently strong out of the west to speed our little boat to the upper end of the lake, is hushed again into silence as if it had fallen to sleep with the birds. The stars which keep their stately rounds in the far-away heavens, shine out like the eyes of angels looking down with eager interest upon a sleeping world. Many beautiful things the night reveals to us, which are invisible during the day. We could never have realized the infinity and grandeur of the material universe without the night to bring forth her starry legions and marshal them upon her wide-extended plains. "Two things," sand Kant, "fill me with awe: the starry heavens above me and the moral law within me." The man who can gaze up into the starry heavens without a sense of awe would probably be unable to recognize within his own nature the majesty and authority of the moral law. One cannot but think that our Lord and Master, during his earthly life, must have often gazed with reverence into the starry depths of heaven and have felt the sublimity and grandeur of the illimitable space filled with shining worlds. With the knowledge which he possessed, of the relation between his Father and Himself, and of all these orbs of light, is it any wonder that he could say, with a broader and deeper meaning than we can know, "In my Father's house are many mansions"?

Elsewhere we have told of a notable event in our quiet Pentwater community, during the past week—the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of our friend and brother, W. T. Moore. It is a great thing to have completed seventy-five years of one's life and to be hale and hearty, in touch with the age in which one lives, loving his fellowmen, loving life and all that is beautiful in life, and looking forward without a tremor of fear or doubt into the great future. Brother Moore has been a conspicuous figure in the history of our reformatory movement for more than half the period of his long life, and his name is known and his influence felt wherever the Disciples of Christ have gone with their plea for a return to Christ and to the purity and unity of the New Testament church. It is not the mere partiality of our friendship, which has been very close and intimate during many years, which prompts us to say that few men among us, if any, deserve more honor and recognition for loyal and loving service rendered to Christ and to our cause, often under circumstances and conditions that try men's souls, than Brother Moore. We congratulate him upon the good he has accomplished, upon the place of honor and esteem which he has won in the religious world, especially among his own people, and upon his ability, as yet unimpaired, to render distinguished service to Christ and his Church. It was the happy thought of the mistress of "The Pioneer" cottage to surprise him and his good wife with a birthday breakfast on the morning of his anniversary. As we stood about the festal board, repeating in unison the twenty-third Psalm, and joining hands while we sang "Blest Be The Tie That Binds," it seemed a fitting expression of our mutual friendship and of our gratitude to God for sparing the life of our dear brother during so long and useful a life. Long may he be spared, together with such honored names as Loos and McGarvey and Briney and Lamar and Tyler and Power, and others like them, to bless our cause by their wise counsel and consecrated lives!

It was a great day with the little band of Disciples here at Pentwater last Lord's day. The hall was well filled, and the sermon by Brother Moore was one of the very best we have ever heard him preach. As he was speaking to us, the seat we occupied in "the upper room," commanded a view of the channel which leads into the great lake whose surface was filled with white-crested waves. It was natural to think of the little lake as the symbol of time, and the channel as the transition which we call death, and of the large lake as the sea of eternity into which we soon shall pass. The beach service in the evening was the largest we have yet held, and all the associations of the place and of the evening served to make it impressive. A farewell beach service was announced for the following Lord's day, which will probably close these meetings for the season. This vesper service down by the murmuring lake, on the sands, has now taken its place as a permanent feature of our summer life here by the lakeside, and will add its sweetening and sanctifying influence to all our enjoyments and relationships here.

GRAFT

By FRANK S. FORD

I believe in Jesus Christ. I was talking with one of our country's great men about the graft situation in San Francisco and in our other great cities. He had asserted that it is but an outcropping of conditions that permeated our whole national life, and had asked what I thought to be the remedy. I replied: "Sir, I believe in Jesus Christ. There are just two working theories of life: The one, 'Get all you can, in all the ways you can, by all the means you can'; the other, 'Give all you can, in all the ways you can, by all the means you can.' This second is the ideal that is exalted in Jesus Christ."

In San Francisco we have three prominent hills, each bearing a symbol of life. Lone Mountain is the Roman Catholic cross, commemorating the work of those heroes of the cross, the first Roman Catholic missionaries. In Golden Gate Park, on another high hill, is the Drake cross, commemorating the service held by Admiral Drake's chaplain in San Francisco Bay. On Beacon Hill is the Sutro Beacon monument, a heroic figure upholding a lighted torch, commemorating the beacon fires kept burning there to guide and warn the coming and going ships.

These are but symbols. If they have become but empty signs, woe to their bearers. There is no saving of men, or cities, or nations, if Jesus be the Christ, if that symbol is not erected as the sign of the limit of service not only on our hills and churches, but in our hearts and lives, and it is a mockery to erect it on a grave of one, whatever may have been the words of his faith, whose life has consisted in self-seeking and self-exaltation.

I remember a few days after the fire standing on Buena Vista heights, gazing at the no longer beautiful view, but at the view of indescribable horror, and I remember that I noticed amidst the ruin of human aims and plans, lying there in their awful desolation, that the crosses and the beacon still towered, speaking their thundrous message, "There is no manhood, there is no civic, there is no national glory but in Jesus Christ"; and I registered a pledge that my life should be invested in that city of my love; that, as far as in me lay, she should be glorified by having her brain pulsations, her heart throbs, her mighty works all constituted in Jesus Christ.

This has been made vivid to my mind by meeting a condition which obtains in almost all our churches—a condition of self-seeking.

We in San Francisco have had our lesson mapped out for us, and by the Teacher's grace we are practicing it as best we can that we may master it and make it ours. There are those in First church who would like to make our losses a plea for self-seeking. We have lost so much as a church, why shall we be called upon for Jamaica, and China and foreign missions and home missions? We have more than we can do and have to ask for help to rebuild our own work.

I have insisted, and the church, as a whole, have upheld me in it, that our calamity can not harm us unless we allow it to center our efforts and sympathies on ourselves, and that the loss and the trial are a real blessing to us in character and personality if, with the effort to rebuild our own, we do our utmost to help and uplift to the uttermost part of the earth.

First Church had been paying $300 toward the support of the Twenty-fourth Street Church. I told them that, in spite of our losses, we must not draw back, and on the first Sunday of last November I asked them to do their best in an offering for this cause. They gave $165. Men who had lost their all except their strength and energy, and who were trying to rebuild their business and their homes, said: "I must give as much to this as before." Others, with tears, said: "I can not do as much as before, but I will give half as much." Others gave their widow's mites.

I read a personal letter received from Sister Moses about the losses in Jamaica. A brother from the audience said: "Brother Ford, we know what that means: we must send something; can we not take an offering next Sunday?" and so it was arranged. They sent $55.

When the time came for the foreign offering I told them that we must do our part and let the Father judge of the amount. They gave a worthy offering. I do not remember the amount.

Before the earthquake our city board had arranged for the purchase of a lot at South Berkeley. We raised some money, borrowed some from the bank, and a brother of Berkeley loaned us $1,000 on condition that it be repaid on demand when he should need it. The time came when this brother must have his money, and he told us of it. We called a meeting and decided to ask our Bay churches for it. All of these churches had suffered severe financial loss, their members having their business or employment in San Francisco, but we said we would try. I remember the feeling when our Dr. Rigdon came into the ministers' meeting on Monday morning and said, "I have some wonderful news." He handed to our secretary a check from Alameda. Her pastor seriously sick, struggling with their own serious financial problems, wresting victory from defeat by heroic sacrifice, their pastor told them of the need of South Berkeley and the necessity of the heroic brother who had given us his help, and they had there given $125. This was the check for the amount. I told my people that we must have a part in the work, and they said, "take an offering." They gave $60.

When we met on the following Monday night we found that we had in cash and pledges from these stricken churches more than the $1,000 needed. It was a glorious meeting.

Again I say, "I believe in Jesus Christ." As long as Jehovah reigns, and as long as Jesus is the Christ, it must be more blessed to give than to receive, for giving is the very life of God and service is the crown of his glory. I know that the facts will bear me out in saying that where cities have met with calamity and the churches have allowed themselves to be helped without themselves helping others, that these churches have been cursed by the help extended, and we have in the place of what were once temples of God, beautiful in the graces of the Holy Spirit, churches that are sepulchres and from which the life of God has departed.

Now this is true, whether the condition of self-seeking has been imposed by calamity or by the apparent importance of the immediate field. The result of self-seeking is the same—death. Whenever we emphasize the "my" to the exclusion of the "yours," we are sowing the seeds of death. The procession is unerring. My country, my district, my state, my city, my church, leads unerringly to that embodiment of anti-Christ—myself. And since God is God, and Jesus is his Christ, the procession the other way is also unerring. Yourself, your church, your state, your district, your country, leads unerringly to that coronation of man in his own true kingship, and bids him rise, Knight of the Order of Companions of Jesus Christ, and king among the kings of the Kingdom of heaven.

Because I believe that Jesus is the Christ, I ask you, for your own sake as well as for the cause of Christ in San Francisco, to help build the walls of Zion in San Francisco.

The Education of Jesus

By W. S. Lowe

Luke's account of the youth of Jesus is brief, yet comprehensive and suggestive.

In the closing verse of the second chapter the system and summary of the education of Jesus is outlined. And in this system we have an example worthy of the imitation of all educators.

This system is quadrilateral. It has a mental, a physical, a spiritual and a social side. There are four words which describe this divine plan, viz.: "Wisdom," "Stature," "God," "Man." Here are the four corner stones of that magnificent edifice which Jesus reared under the instruction of Joseph and Mary, and into which he incorporated his life.

The education of Jesus, therefore, consisted in the development of his mind, his body, his soul and his social nature.

Moreover, this system is natural and cumulative. If the child is properly educated there is, first, the developing and training of the mind; along with this goes the growth and care of the body; parallel with this goes the development of the religious nature, the culture of the soul; while the grand climax is reached in the application of these matured powers in the service which the individual renders to mankind. And this is the proper object of all true education, service. And we behold Jesus as the complete exemplification of his education: He became the "servant of all."

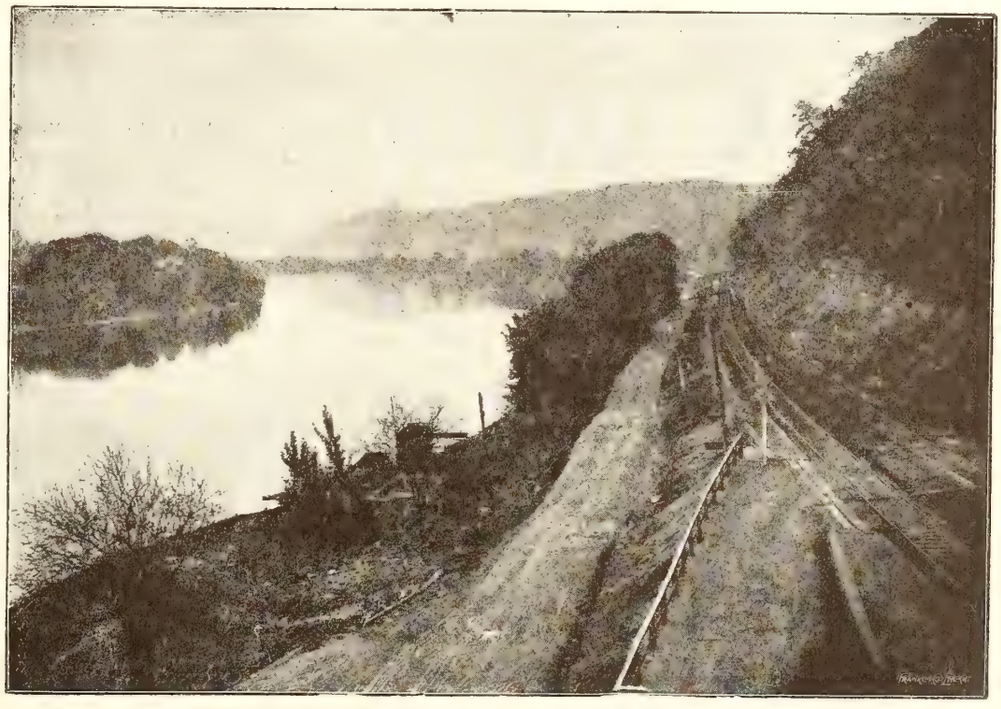
As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power



Bethany Beach is as fascinating as ever. The Assembly has been well attended, and the lectures and sermons and other functions and entertainments have been sufficiently varied and instructive. We do not aim to give our friends a crowded Chautauqua program. Time enough for recreation and social pleasure is allowed and there is no instance of over-study or brain storm. Our Sunday services have been our special delight, and on my first Lord's Day here I baptized one man in the sea. All the glory and majesty of the great deep, the splendor of Bethany sunrises and sunsets, the breezes and baths, the songs of birds, the beach flowers, the shells, the dunes, the charming landscape are here in their never-changing beauty and interest. There are some attractive new cottages and the life-saving station since we last came together. The latter is the finest on the coast, a substantial government building with lofty lookout which affords a wide-reaching vision. Why should not a church have this same sign on its front: "Life-saving station"? This is what we would have Bethany Beach to be.

The life-saving service cost the government $1,800,000 last year, less than a third of the expense of a single battleship, and 800 lives were saved and fourteen millions of property. Every five miles along this part of the coast is a station and in some sections they are even closer together where there is greater danger of wrecks. From Maine to Florida Uncle Sam is watching in over 300 of these stations to rescue those in peril on the deep, and every afternoon at 4 o'clock patrols leave the stations and tramp through the heavy sand or along the base of the rocks until the whole shore line is inspected. Wind, rain, snow, sleet—it does not matter—the brawny, bronzed, giant-armed surfmen are on the alert watching for signals of distress. It used to be they would start in opposite directions, meet half way between stations, and interchange tokens; now they all go in the same direction, north or south. Most of the life guards are fishermen accustomed to the surf. They have their regular drills and use the surf boat when it is possible, and if not, the life line and breeches buoy. The life line is attached to the end of a shot which is fired from a small cannon. The line is coiled or "faked" on a set of pegs, the pegs are drawn at the proper moment, and the shot fired carries the line after it. Marksmanship as well as surfmanship is needed. At every life-saving station is a spar with a cross tree, and in the drill one of the crew ascends the spar and a sham rescue is effected. It is a great service. As many as 1000 vessels have been aided through it in a single year. Sunset Cox, of New York, the father of it, told me how the familiar picture of a life-saving crew pulling for a stranded ship, which hung on the wall of his bedroom, enabled him to pull through a hard spell of typhoid fever. Visitors to our seaside resorts will hereafter have the privilege of studying the work of these heroic life-savers, as well as aiding in our higher service of saving souls.

The gentle craft of fishing is one of our sports. The Isaac Waltons are here and the stories that are told of great catches are recounted. I myself have seen with my own eyes millions of the finny tribe gathered in at a single haul. Of course these were the fishing smacks that stand off Bethany Beach every day and have alewives by thousands of bushels for fish oil, but the ordinary angler has his pleasure here. The trout and sea bass, porgies and tints, flounders and mullets are biting, and for an honest man who studies ichthyology, or has a family of eight in his cottage to feed, there seems to be just reason to draw upon the resources of the sea. The Pharaohs fished in the Nile, as one can see to-day in the hieroglyphs of old Memphis. The Romans paid fortunes for red mullet. The church took care of fishing grounds in the middle ages. The apostles coaxed the dwellers in the Sea of Galilee to crown their tables. Old Christopher North and Francis Chantrey, Walter Scott and Humphry Davy, Nelson of Trafalgar, and Archbishop Paley and Zach Sweeney are illustrious examples for city-pent, brain-fagged, holiday-making folks like our beachers. The better angler the better man.

We have good times at Bethany. We have not seen the sea-serpent. We did not witness the terrific battle off the coast of three whales and two sharks recently reported by incoming steamers. We have not the freakish amusements of our American resorts—the loop-the-loop, the leaping car, the submarine, the airship, the Chilkoot Pass, the bump-the-bump, helter-skelter or whirl-the-whirl, which give the thrills of summer to so many jaded thousands. America takes the palm for sensational amusement. Jaded civilization demands extreme effects to rouse it from the disease called ennui. Life is flat, stale and unprofitable without something to thrill the nerves. So after a hard year's labor there must be automobiling at sixty miles an hour, or a shoot-the-chutes or scenic railway, or a plunge down the Chilkoot Pass. Sensation is the great thing. With all your gettings, get sensation.

Now Bethany Beach is for the lovers of the simple life. The only sensation of my three weeks was when Bouncer chased into my wood pile a weasel, shook the bloodthirsty little "varmint" to pieces, and so saved the poultry for the better uses of the ministry. We are here to avoid sensations. Even the excitement over tainted money fails to reach us in this quiet nook. We are a good deal like Tangier Island a little farther south in the Chesapeake. Tangier is a part of this same peninsula and belongs to Virginia; it is an island, isolated from the lines of travel, five miles long and one in width with 1500 people and houses built on one street, where intoxicants are not sold and pool-rooms are unknown, with one physician and one minister, where profanity is punished by fine, where religion is the rule and to be outside the church is to be outside the pale of good society, where there is not a jail nor a lock-up, where there is no public cemetery and every one buries his dead near his dwelling. Sussex county, Delaware, where Bethany Beach flourishes, is well-nigh as secluded, yet the best of folks are here. A goodly delegation from Lexington, Ky., and Atlanta, Ga., are the latest, and visitors from as far away as Reno, Washoe county, Nevada. Such is the call of the deep. J. H. Goldner and Mrs. Goldner, J. R. Ewers, J. A. Hopkins, J. H. Craig, J. W. Carpenter and the other "J's" have rendered good service; also W. H. Graham and B. C. Hagerman.

A Characteristic Act of A. Campbell

By Charles Louis Loos

The lives of eminent men—those great gifts to our race—of such as have done great service to the world, should be made the subject of strict observation and careful study by their fellowmen. Their lives are important lessons to us; not only to the men of their day, but to succeeding generations.

This applies with particular force to the lives of eminent religious reformers. The intimate facts of their history deserve especial attention, for these reveal to us the real springs of the actions that constituted their history and explain them to us.

To understand these men of God, who were moved by a divine impulse to seek to correct the errors that had crept into the religious thoughts and ways of men, is of very high importance to humanity, is a duty we owe to them and to the cause of reform to which they devoted themselves. To gain a correct judgment of these men is necessary in order to reach a just conception of their work.

Reformers have not, as a general rule, received the just judgment of the world. Not only have they always been misunderstood and misrepresented by their opponents, but not seldom also by their friends. I know of no great reformer whose life has not been subject to this fate.

It is a good thing, therefore, to scrutinize carefully the history, the words and actions of this class of men; to strive to understand them well and be just to them.

I refer especially to the most distinguished religious reformer of our own times, A. Campbell. It is our duty—the present hour demands it—to study diligently the life of this great man. When I say the life, I mean all that constituted it, all his characteristic words and actions, throughout his long career.

My object at the present is to call attention to an act of A. Campbell that revealed the man at an important hour of his life.

The organization of Bethany College, the starting of it on its career, was an act of great moment with this reformer. He knew what it meant for the great work in which he had been for a long time engaged, and for which he ardently desired success.

With great thoughtfulness he selected the men that were to constitute its faculty; he did the best he could in this respect. It might have been supposed that he would choose for this faculty exclusively men from his own brethren; no one would have been surprised at this. But he did otherwise.

For one of the most important chairs—that of Greek and Latin—he selected a Presbyterian, Andrew F. Ross, a graduate of Franklin College, a prominent Presbyterian institution of learning in Eastern Ohio.

President Campbell frequently declared that this act was done by him that it might be seen that Bethany College was not dominated, as such institutions generally were, by a denominational, sectarian spirit, but that its life should manifest a spirit of large liberality.

I think that this fact in A. Campbell's history should not be forgotten. In a very prominent way it reveals the characteristic tendency of the entire life of this illustrious reformer. The "same mind" was in his most eminent compeers, notably in Thomas Campbell and Walter Scott, and was, as all these men conceived it, the true spirit of the religious reformation to which they gave their lives. May we never forget this!

Professor Ross was a truly religious man. A. Campbell would not have chosen him as a member of his faculty if he had not been devoutly pious. I speak from intimate knowledge when I say that with President Campbell the fear of God, devout piety, was an indispensable requisite in a college professor. A man not well grounded in the knowledge of the Bible, and in the faith which it teaches and imparts, would have had no acceptance with him as a teacher of men.

Professor Ross remained in the college seventeen years, until 1858, when I succeeded him. He finally entered the Presbyterian ministry. This truly excellent man was greatly esteemed and beloved by the students and his fellow professors.

I desire to lay this memorial chaplet on the tomb of this great reformer.

The longer I live, the larger my experience, the fuller my knowledge of the religious history of the world, the deeper I penetrate into the religious teachings of Jesus and his apostles, the more I honor and share the mind and heart of A. Campbell that moved him to this act which I have here recalled from the history of Bethany College.

Let me add here that the long and large activity of Professor Ross as a teacher at Bethany never in the least interfered with A. Campbell's purposes in the creation of his college. Never by word or action did he antagonize what he well knew to be its aims. He, too, was a man of a large, liberal mind.

In conclusion, let me say that President Campbell, to the last hour of his life, cherished in his heart the deepest concern for the students, even after he ceased to be an instructor in the institution. It was very beautiful and touching to notice this in him. As I sat at his bedside, but a few days before his death, he said to me: "Brother Loos, how are the students getting along? Are they diligent in attending to their studies? I want to know all about them." He listened with deep attention to what I said in answer to his inquiry, and was very much gratified to hear the good report I gave him of the students.

FRESH AT NIGHT

If One Uses the Right Kind of Food.

If by proper selection of food one can feel strong and fresh at the end of a day's work, it is worth while to know the kind of food that will produce this result.

A school teacher at Media, Kan., says in this connection: "I commenced the use of Grape-Nuts food five months ago. At that time my health was so poor that I thought I would have to give up my work altogether. I was rapidly losing in weight, had little appetite, was nervous and sleepless, and experienced, almost constantly, a feeling of exhaustion. I tried various remedies without good results, then I determined to give particular attention to my food, and have learned something of the properties of Grape-Nuts for rebuilding the brain and nerve centers.

"I commenced using that food and have since made a constant and rapid improvement in health in spite of the fact that all this time I have been engaged in the most strenuous and exacting work.

"I gained twelve pounds in weight and have a good appetite, my nerves are steady and I sleep sound. I have such strength and reserve force that I feel almost as strong and fresh at the close of a day's work as at the beginning.

"Before using Grape-Nuts I was troubled much with weak eyes, but as my vitality increased my eyes became stronger. I never heard of any other food as nutritious and economical as Grape-Nuts." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

The Spirit of Worship

By H. H. Peters

Man is a worshipful being. Sabatier says man is "incurably religious." Worship is the expression of the religious nature of man. Worship is as universal as man. It may manifest itself in a prayer or a song; in the building of a temple or in the erection of an altar; in the writing of a creed or in the sentiments of the mystic. True worship finds that,

"God is in all that liberates and lifts,
In all that humbles, sweetens and consoles."

The scientist says God is "universal substance;" the philosopher says, "universal mind;" the mystic says, "universal heart." But what's in a name? God is, and he is the rewarder of all who diligently seek him. Seneca says: "Call him, then, as thou pleasest, either Nature, or Fate, or Fortune; it matters not, because they are all names of the self-same God, who diversely useth his divine providence."

It is interesting to observe the unfolding of the idea of worship as we find it in human society. Man's first conception of God was that of his omnipotence or almightiness. Thus man perceived the power of God. Then thunder was the voice of God and lightning was the flash of his countenance. The earthquake was the touch of his finger and the storm was his natural manifestation. The Greeks had their Zeus; the Romans had their Jupiter; the early Germans had their Woden, and the Hebrews had their Jehovah. Man was overawed by the power of God and feared him. That he might appease the wrath of his outraged deity he offered animal sacrifice. Such sacrifices were but the natural expression of man's religious nature at this time.

Later man began to understand that "order is heaven's first law." He recognized the wisdom of God. The heavens declared the glory of God and the moon and stars were ordained by him. Man admired God and his handiwork. His admiration was expressed in praise. The first psalms were praise hymns. Fear as the motive passed into admiration.

Then the mercy of God was realized. The power of God still impressed man and the wisdom of God still appealed to him; but coming to realize his own helplessness, he trusted God as his merciful friend. He expressed his adoration in thanksgiving. Thus admiration passed into thanksgiving.

At last man felt the compassionate love of God. God revealed his love in Jesus Christ. God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself. Under the inspiration of this highest sentiment man is moved to love God and to express his love in the service of humanity. From fear, through admiration and thanksgiving, the world passes into service as the highest ritual of the religious life.

God has revealed himself unto us as Almighty King, as Wise Counsellor, as Merciful Friend and as Loving Father. This is the order: Power, fear, sacrifice; wisdom, admiration, praise; mercy, adoration, thanksgiving; love, love, service.

We have been taught that the individual passes through the same stages of development as society. If so, worship begins in fear. This is the lowest motive, but it is all that will reach some people. We strengthen ourselves by admitting this. This period is characterized by a desire to do something to appease the wrath of God. We hear about "hell-scared" Christians. Now, the writer has never been accused of unduly emphasizing hell in his preaching. If anything, the opposite has been true. But it is psychological as well as theological that fear is the lowest motive of the human soul, and that many will be moved by no other.

With the individual, as with society, fear passes into admiration. Wisdom, plan and order appeal to us and we praise God. In this stage of development the sum total of religious exercise seems to be a desire to "scold the devil and brag on the Lord."

Then comes the stage of adoration, in which the individual feels his guilt. God becomes a Friend and his mercy leads us to thanksgiving.

But the climax is reached when, under the inspiration of love, we endeavor to worship God by serving man. When with a loving, living Christ as your altar, as a member of the holy royal priesthood, you give your life in the service of humanity, you have worshiped God in spirit and in truth. This is no effort to lower the standard of worship, but to raise the standard of service. Of course, we still worship in song and sermon, in prayer and praise; in churches and temples; but again I say, our worship reaches its highest manifestation when it ends in a Christlike service rendered.

THE NEED IN MISSOURI—AND ELSEWHERE.

By JAMES SMALL.

The one great need, speaking in a general way, as I see it, of the great state of Missouri, is the consecration of its immense wealth to evangelism. God is not blessing the churches these days that are not enterprising along the lines of taking the gospel to men.

It is wonderful how a revival can transform a church into missionaries and bring life and opportunities to idle members.

The tent meetings are so popular these days that Missouri ought to have twenty all in use in the summer and as many evangelists preaching the gospel of the Son of God that is still the power of God unto salvation.

I have been delighted at the urgent appeals of The Christian-Evangelist to rich men to give more of their means for the cause of God everywhere. If these messages will inspire the preachers to preach more along the same line they will do untold good.

Christian Union.

and the contentions of creeds, which once appeared the central themes of human interest, are now regarded by millions of busy men and women as mere echoes of ancient controversies, if not mere mockeries of the problems of the present age. Even the convocations of the churches manifest little appetite for discussions which were once the bread of their life and the wine of their exhilaration."

Looking at this volume on Christian union from the viewpoint of its author, I am bound to say I have no criticisms to make and none but commendations to offer for his work so well done. Using the test applied by a distinguished student, reader and lover of books: "Does the book leave any kind of wholesome and fine feeling in the mind of one who reads it?" I pronounce the book commendable for its plain common sense and simple clear-sightedness with which it helps to resolve the confusions and sophistries with which the subject of Christian union has so long been surrounded.

FEET OUT

She Had Curious Habits.

When a person has to keep the feet out from under cover during the coldest nights in winter because of the heat and prickly sensation, it is time that coffee, which causes the trouble, be left off.

There is no end to the nervous conditions that coffee will produce. It shows in one way in one person and in another way in another. In this case the lady lived in S. Dak. She says:

"I have had to lie awake half the night with my feet and limbs out of the bed on the coldest nights, and felt afraid to sleep for fear of catching cold. I had been troubled for years with twitching and jerking of the lower limbs, and for most of the time I have been unable to go to church or to lectures because of that awful feeling that I must keep on the move.

"When it was brought to my attention that coffee caused so many nervous diseases, I concluded to drop coffee and take Postum Food Coffee to see if my trouble was caused by coffee drinking.

"I only drank one cup of coffee for breakfast, but that was enough to do the business for me. When I quit it my troubles disappeared in an almost miraculous way. Now I have no more of the jerking and twitching and can sleep with any amount of bedding over me and sleep all night in sound, peaceful rest.

"Postum Food Coffee is absolutely worth its weight in gold to me." "There's a Reason." Read the little health classic, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

—We believe many of our readers will be glad to take a peep at the Panama Canal as seen through the eyes of one of our ministers. There were fourteen additions at last report. This church will need a preacher. Salary, from $600 to $700, with parsonage.

—The church at Cashion, Okla., has been greatly revived by special meetings conducted by Bros. H. H. Saunders and R. G. Smith. The building had been rented to a denominational body but the Disciples are now occupying it after having thoroughly reorganized and having elders and deacons set apart to their sacred offices. Recently there have been 18 additions to the membership.

—The letter of W. M. Taylor and other representatives of the Louisiana brethren speaks for itself. It was understood that New Orleans made way for Norfolk on condition that next year's convention goes to the southern city. As this letter indicates, our brethren in New Orleans could never go to its citizens for favors again if we decline their present purpose to entertain the convention next year.

The "Yell-Oh" Man

And One of His Ways.

To call a man a liar seems rude, so we will let the reader select his own term.

Sometime ago the Manager of "Collier's Weekly" got very cross with us because we would not continue to advertise in his paper.

We have occasionally been attacked by editors who have tried to force us to advertise in their papers at their own prices, and on their own conditions, failing in which we were to be attacked through their editorial columns. The reader can fit a name to that tribe.

We had understood that the editor of "Collier's" was a wildcat of the Sinclair "jungle bungle" type, a person with curdled gray matter, but it seems strange that the owners would descend to using their editorial columns, yellow as they are, for such rank out and out falsehoods as appear in their issue of July 27th, where the editor goes out of his way to attack us, and the reason will appear tolerably clear to any reader who understands the venom behind it.

We quote in part as follows:—"One widely circulated paragraph labors to induce the impression that Grape-Nuts will obviate the necessity of an operation in appendicitis. This is lying, and, potentially, deadly lying. Similarly, Postum continually makes reference to the endorsements of 'a distinguished physician' or 'a prominent health official,' persons as mythical, doubtless, as they are mysterious."

We do not hesitate to reproduce these mendacious falsehoods in order that it may be made clear to the public what the facts are, and to nail the liar up so that people may have a look at him. If this poor clown knew what produced appendicitis, he might have some knowledge of why the use of Grape-Nuts would prevent it. Let it be understood that appendicitis results from long-continued disturbance in the intestines, caused primarily by undigested food, and chiefly by undigested starchy food, such as white bread, potatoes, rice, partly cooked cereals, and such. These lie in the warmth and moisture of the bowels in an undigested state, and decay, generating gases, and irritating the mucous surfaces until, under such conditions, the lower part of the colon and the appendix become involved. Disease sets up, and frequently of a form known as appendicitis.

Now then, Grape-Nuts food was made by Mr. C. W. Post, after he had an attack of appendicitis, and required some food in which the starch was predigested. No such food existed; from his knowledge of dietetics he perfected the food; made it primarily for his own use, and afterwards introduced it to the public. In this food the starch is transformed by moisture and long-time cooking into a form of sugar, which is easily digested and does not decay in the intestines. It is a practical certainty that when a man has approaching symptoms of appendicitis, the attack can be avoided by discontinuing all food except Grape-Nuts, and by properly washing out the intestines. Most physicians are now acquainted with the facts, and will verify the statement.

Of course, this is all news, and should be an education to the person who writes the editorials for "Collier's," and who should take at least some training before he undertakes to write for the public.

Now as to the references to "a distinguished physician" or "a prominent health official" being "mythical persons." We are here to wager "Collier's Weekly," or any other skeptic or liar, any amount of money they care to name, and which they will cover, that we will produce proof to any Board of Investigators that we have never yet published an advertisement announcing the opinion of a prominent physician or health official on Postum or Grape Nuts, when we did not have the actual letter in our possession. It can be easily understood that many prominent physicians dislike to have their names made public in reference to any article whatsoever; they have their own reasons, and we respect those reasons, but we never make mention of endorsements unless we have the actual endorsement, and that statement we will back with any amount of money called for.

When a journal wilfully prostitutes its columns, to try and harm a reputable manufacturer in an effort to force him to advertise, it is time the public knew the facts. The owner or editor of Collier's Weekly can not force money from us by such methods.

POSTUM CEREAL CO., Ltd.

—As the outgrowth of a meeting at Paris, Ill., during the pastorate of Finis E. Idleman, the Asher Christian church was organized in the country near by. On August 28 their beautiful new church building was dedicated by Brother Idleman. He returned from Des Moines for this occasion. The church cost $4,000, and was dedicated free from indebtedness. It has a good auditorium, gallery, dining room and kitchen, and is well equipped for up-to-date church work.

—J. A. Wharton completed seven years of faithful service at the Niagara Falls Church last Lord's day, and will conclude his ministry with that church September 15. He has accepted a unanimous call to Minerva, Ohio, his native state. During his Niagara Falls ministry the church has paid an indebtedness of $3,150, while $2,500 was given for mission work. The congregation is at peace and ready to be guided into larger service. Volunteers for this ministry may write Mr. Fletcher, president, or Charles D. Barnett, chairman of the official board.

—W. E. Spicer, of Pittsfield, Ill., sends an interesting report of the tabernacle meeting that was concluded there August 25 under the leadership of Evangelists Wilson and Smith. The tabernacle seated about 2,000 people. Two pianos and other musical instruments assisted the chorus of from 75 to 150 voices. Notwithstanding an unusual rainy season, the people were greatly blessed by the meetings. There were fifty-six added—forty-one by confession; thirty-seven were from the Bible school. Brother Spicer pays a glowing tribute to these evangelists.

—The great Roger H. Fife meeting at California, Mo., was brought to an abrupt termination by the sudden and dangerous sickness of the daughter and son-in-law of Pastor Ben F. Hill. L. L. Carter, superintendent of the California Bible school, writes an interesting account of the meeting for the local paper. The number of additions was not reported, but the membership of the church is now over 300. High tributes are paid to both pastor and evangelist. "In the number of additions, large attendance and general interest it was a record-breaker for California."

—Edgar William Allen has entered upon his second year with the Central Church, Wichita, Kan. This congregation is making extensive arrangements to entertain the state convention, which meets September 30-October 3. A splendid program and a half-fare rate on all railroads lead Brother Allen to expect a thousand delegates. During his past twelve months of service there were 125 additions to his church. More than $1,200 was given to missions and benevolence. The Sunday-school has an average attendance of more than one hundred greater than a year ago, and $4,000 has been paid on the mortgage. Prof. T. Dilwyn Thomas, formerly at the head of the music department of Hiram College, has been engaged as director of music for the church.

SANATIVE SHAVING.

A New Method Which Makes Shaving a Pleasure to Men with Tender Skins.

Cuticura Soap is a luxury for shaving. It possesses in a modified form all the emollient, sanative and antiseptic properties of Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, while supplying a firm, moist, non-drying, creamy, and fragrant lather. This up-to-date method of shaving dispenses with the unsanitary shaving mug, is most agreeable and comforting, and makes frequent shaving a pleasure rather than a discomfort. Full directions wrapped around each cake of Soap.

—In another column we publish an article from a prominent member of our brotherhood at South McAlester, Indian Territory. We had supposed that, as this letter indicates, there was to be a union of the forces at the forthcoming Territorial Convention. Whence or how much opposition there is to such union we know not. It is, of course, a matter for the brethren of the territory to decide upon, but a very large number of the churches all over the country will be interested in knowing the plans of our growing church in this growing Southwest country.

—Earle M. Todd has entered upon his work at Manchester, N. H., in a business-like way. He has put out a little statement about the meeting by Herbert Yeuell, and is seeking to reach all who were influenced by that meeting, as well as, in an independent way, bringing the plea of the Disciples of Christ before the inhabitants of Manchester. He has secured the co-operation of the press, and has made an excellent statement of his purpose of starting another church in the New Hampshire city. As he says, it is one which "aims at antagonizing no other Christian agency, but seeks in largest charity and sincerest fraternity the common interest of the church of Christ in Manchester." Brother Todd has no easy work to perform. Many months have passed since the Yeuell meeting and, in a large measure, the present preacher has pioneering to do. We know that he will have the prayers of all the brotherhood.

—The board of Butler College has taken action with respect to the vacancy in the presidency by creating a position of dean and electing to it Prof. T. C. Howe. This will carry with it the full authority of president, and Mr. Howe will at once dispose of several appointments that have been awaiting the election of a president, and will otherwise direct the educational policy of the institution. Professor Howe was, in no sense, a candidate for the position, and a committee of the college board had to labor with him to make the sacrifice necessary to administer the affairs of the college until such a time as a president may be permanently chosen. Professor Howe is the senior member of the faculty since the retirement of President Butler, with the exception of Dr. Benton, emeritus professor. He is an alumnus of the college, having been a member of the class of 1889. He has studied in Berlin and took his doctor's degree at Harvard University. He has been Armstrong professor of Germanic languages, but is more widely known for his excellent work in completing the endowment fund which Butler recently raised. He is very popular, both with the students and faculty.

—C. H. Winders has entered upon his new field at Irvington, Ind. He has done an excellent work at Columbia, Mo., and left there against the wishes of his congregation and hundreds of town friends. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has already expressed its appreciation of his worth. Now we prefer to quote from an editorial in the Columbia "Herald," of which Walter Williams is editor. It says: "We greatly regret the going away of Elder C. H. Winders. He has been a tower of strength for righteousness in this fair town. He has been brave, manly, sweet-spirited. A reformer of aggressive type, he has never failed to be a gentleman. He has been considerate as well as courageous. . . . He is a bigger man than when he came, and Columbia is a better town. Indianapolis may well be congratulated upon securing his services. He will be found to be a student, a leader of men, a preacher of parts, a pastor, and a Christian gentleman who lives the life of which he preaches." A farewell reception was tendered Brother and Sister Winders, and he preached his farewell sermon at a union service held in the Methodist church, other ministers of the town taking part. His sermon was a strong plea for civic righteousness and in favor of the Pemberton bill and legislation against the saloons. Madison A. Hart has been tendered a call to succeed Brother Winders. Brother Hart is well known in Missouri, having for some years been pastor at Fulton, which place he left some eighteen months ago to accept a call to Pomona, Cal. We believe that Brother Hart has fine qualifications for a pastorate in our Missouri Athens, and that his future work there will vindicate the wisdom of his call. He is a graduate of Kentucky University, and having taken post-graduate studies elsewhere he is well prepared for his ministerial work. His character as a Christian man is without reproach, and we believe him to be sound in the faith of the gospel and sincerely devoted to its proclamation and its triumph in the world.

New England Christian Missionary Society.

The 42d annual convention of the New England Christian Missionary Society will be held in Danbury, Conn., Sept. 12 to 15. Let all our New England churches especially note that the convention meets earlier this year than usual. Please have all your offerings and reports in the hands of the secretary at once. Let each church muster as large a company of delegates as possible and send names of same to Bro. Frank Bailey, Danbury, Conn. We hope to secure rates on all railroads leading to Danbury.

The program has been prepared with care. All our mission and educational interests are represented as well as all New England interests. The historic church at Danbury with its honored and beloved pastor, Brother Teagarden, extends a most cordial invitation to the New England brethren and also to those outside this region to come and enjoy with us this spiritual feast.

An Interesting Stone Laying.

A very interesting occasion, especially to the people of Lanark, Ill., was the recent dedication of the corner stone of a new Christian church there. D. F. Seyster, the pastor, made a wise little speech on this occasion, pointing out that when Christ was here he built no church house nor organized his church, but revealed what kind of timber should characterize this when built, leaving the matter of construction of the church edifice to the good sense of his people. Hence we follow custom and not decree in dedicating the stone which marks the corner of a church house in which to worship Almighty God. Among the things placed in the stone were leaves of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and "Christian Standard," and a large map of Illinois decked with 810 stars showing where there was a Christian church, and who the minister was at the time of its dedication. We are glad to know too, that our "Year Book" was also included, which goes to show that those who are interested in this particular building have the great wide world interest in their hearts too. Brother Seyster in conclusion said there were three books indispensable to a model church; namely, the pocket book, the hymn book and the book of books—the Bible. The first is necessary to perpetuate the gospel, the second to praise God in song and the third to be the rule of faith and practice of our lives. Miniature copies of a hymn book and the Holy Scriptures were accordingly put in the box and a pocket book containing a few coins, one of them bearing the date of 1809 was included. As the preacher pointed out, this was the birth year of our Reformation when several Christian men of as many denominations, growing tired of multiplicity of God's people, sought to unite and abandon human creeds and turn to Christ and the Apostles, away from decrees and councils and confessions of faith, simply taking the Word of God and interpreting it for themselves and laboring for the unity of all God's children. We cordially commend this style of corner stone laying.

Great Progress at Champaign, Ill.

University Place Church of Christ of Champaign and Urbana some few weeks ago voted to rebuild the present edifice to make room for the growing work. The present house has been occupied only four years and the contemplated change will provide about double the present capacity. On August 4 plans for the work were approved by the church. The plans give especial attention to the matter of the Bible school; some forty class rooms are to be provided, all grouped with reference to thorough classification in distinct departments of work; a unique feature of the rebuilt plant will be that with but few exceptions every inch of space on two floors can be utilized for auditorium purposes when desired and will provide for seating of about 2,200 people. University Place congregation passed the 1,000 mark in membership during the Brooks brothers revival in January and February and the enlargement is a result of having thus outgrown present quarters.

Stephen E. Fisher, the minister during the last four years, has been asked to continue his work indefinitely with the congregation, and his salary was recently increased $600; in addition to this the University Place congregation has shown its appreciation by presenting him with an automobile which both lightens his work and makes possible some delightful vacation expeditions.

At the regular board meeting for August recently a young newspaper man, Roy Skinner, a member of the University Place congregation, was elected official church reporter for the several church papers and instructed to furnish such news items as might be of general interest among the churches at least once every month.

A Blind Baptist Preacher Joins the Christian Church.

T. R. Gliderwell, a blind preacher of the Baptist church for some years, has taken membership with us at Hazel Dell in Knox County, Mo. He is a neighbor to me in Kirksville, and after several talks together on the Scriptures, he decided to go with me to my appointment and hear me preach. Then he was fully satisfied that our position was correct. On Wednesday night following he told his church that worships in the south side of Kirksville what he had done, and stated that I would preach for them Thursday night, which I did. At the close several of the members of the Baptist church came forward to take their stand with us, and so we just changed it from a Baptist to a Christian church worshiping in the south side of Kirksville. The next Wednesday night Brother Gliderwell and wife took membership with the old First church here, and he was ordained as a minister by the pastor, D. A. Wickizer, W. B. Green and myself, assisted by the elders. He is now fully identified with us and ready for work as a pastor or evangelist. He is a regular graduate of the St. Louis school for the blind, and is a fine preacher, of extraordinary memory and knowledge of the Bible, and says he can quote nearly all of it by memory. He is a real walking Bible and very successful as an evangelist. He is a very happy man since he has found his way into the true light where he can preach a full gospel. He is thirty years old and has a wife and four bright little children. He is a hard-working and industrious man and is trying to support himself and family. He lost his eyes when sixteen months old and does not remember ever seeing anything. His character is above reproach and I am glad to recommend him as a brother preacher worthy and well qualified.

A Religious Victory.

A hotly contested local option campaign closed in Fulton and Callaway county yesterday. The county went dry by 702 majority, the city of Fulton by 169. The kingdom of Callaway thus sustains her reputation for sobriety and righteousness, and we predict greater progress among the churches and schools of Fulton for the absence of the two saloons. Patrons of our educational institutions need no longer fear the dangers arising to the boys and girls from the saloon. We purpose that it shall be easy for them to do right and difficult for them to do wrong. On election day yesterday in Fulton the W. C. T. U. and the women of the town held an all-day prayer-meeting and the church bell was rung every half hour to remind the voters of their duty. When the victory was announced there followed an enthusiastic praise service, which will be followed by another at a union prayer-meeting service Wednesday evening. What Callaway has done other counties can do, and why shall not Missouri follow other states in overthrowing the liquor traffic?

The Prudential Changes Its Plan of Doing Business.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America has just announced an important change in its plan of doing business, and it is issuing a new life insurance policy, which the company states is unexcelled in its attractive features. The Prudential will issue policies on a non-participating basis exclusively hereafter.

Former United States Senator John F. Dryden, president of the Prudential, in discussing the subject, said:

"The new Ordinary non-participating policy of The Prudential eliminates all question as to dividends; nothing is estimated.

"The new policy has been put in such plain English that it can be understood by any one, and every rate, value and feature is absolutely guaranteed. The policy, furthermore, is sold at a reduced rate, which will make it popular.

"An entirely new feature, which we believe will commend itself, is that the loan value of the policy may be used automatically to keep the insurance in force should the policyholder be unable to meet the payment of premiums. When the policyholder is ready to take up the policy again he will not have to pay up back premiums, but may, if he wishes, have them charged as a loan against the policy.

"One month's grace, without interest, is allowed for the payment of premiums. There will be no restrictions after the policy is once issued, as to where a policyholder may reside, or where he may travel, or what occupation he may follow.

"Should the insured at any time desire to accept a paid-up policy, or one on which he will have to pay no further premiums, this paid-up policy will contain one of the newest provisions in life insurance—a definite cash value. The new policy also contains the entire contract, which means, in a broad sense, that everything in it is absolutely guaranteed. It is non-forfeitable after one year's premium has been paid, and has liberal cash loan, cash surrender and extended insurance values.

"The company will be pleased to send a specimen of this new policy to persons who will write to the Home Office, Newark, N. J., stating age and the amount of money they would like to invest in life insurance each year.

NEW ORLEANS IN 1908

For the information and consideration of the brotherhood at large, the Soniat Avenue Christian Church, of New Orleans, wish to publish the following communications addressed to the convention at Norfolk next October:

"To the International Convention of the Christian Churches assembled in Norfolk, Va., October 11-17, 1907:

"We, the Christian Churches of Louisiana, assembled in convention at Jennings, do join most heartily with the Soniat Avenue Church of New Orleans in inviting the International Convention to assemble in this metropolis in October, 1908.

"We believe that your visit to New Orleans would awaken a deeper interest in missions on the part of our great brotherhood, and would give a prestige, power, and permanency to the cause of Primitive Christianity in the South which could not be gained in any other way; therefore, we earnestly pray our brotherhood to come and accept of our hospitalities, bringing spiritual blessings with you and doing us incalculable good."

Signed,
F. M. McCARTHY, Pres.
OTIS E. HAWKINS, Sec.

"To the General Convention of the Churches of Christ in America, assembled:

"Knowing of the great work which your broad-guaged society is doing in the world of religion and the cause of humanity, and appreciating the great benefits to be derived by the influence of personal contact, and sensible of the more material advantages likewise to be derived, the New Orleans Progressive Union begs to extend to your body a cordial invitation to hold your next convention in this city.

"Our esteemed Mr. W. M. Taylor, of this city, will bear this message to you, and in compliance with his suggestion, as well as complying with our own desires, we beg to say that we will provide an assembly hall and committee rooms sufficient to care for the needs of the convention.

"I trust that the old southern city of New Orleans will have an opportunity to display its hospitality toward the members of your body, and you may rest assured that nothing will be left undone to make your stay here both pleasant and profitable."

Signed, M. B. TREZEVANT, Sec.

"To the General Convention of the Churches of Christ in America:

"Gentlemen of the Convention: I most cordially join the mayor of the city of New Orleans and the Progressive Union of that city in inviting your society to hold its next convention in the city of New Orleans.

"I have requested Mr. W. M. Taylor, of New Orleans, to convey this message to you and to say, in my name and behalf, that the State of Louisiana and all her people will be delighted to have your convention come to us. Mr. Taylor has been requested by me to assure you that if you will thus honor us, a most cordial reception awaits you."

Yours very truly,
Signed, N. C. BLANCHARD, Governor.

The accompanying cut is a representation of the magnificent building which we have already engaged for the convention; it will comfortably seat about four thousand people and is well equipped with committee rooms, lavatories, parlors, exhibit rooms and banquet hall; it is up to date in all its appointments, and is well ventilated and lighted; it is new, having just been completed last winter at a cost of one hundred and twenty thousand dollars; it is well located, on St. Charles avenue, in walking distance of all the hotels and scores of good boarding houses.

This auditorium has been engaged for the crowning of the "Rex" of the next Mardi Gras. A month ago F. M. Rains stood in the auditorium of this building and said, "No doubt, this is the finest building of the kind in the South."

The citizens of this city are planning to make our convention of 1908 the most representative, best entertained, and most profitable convention ever held by our brotherhood.

Last year we went before the convention in Buffalo with an invitation for the convention to meet in New Orleans in 1907, but in deference to our brethren of the east coast and in consideration of an agreement between the committees that New Orleans is to have the right of way before the Norfolk convention for the year 1908, we did not urge the invitation, as we intended. The following is the report given of the action by the Associated Press, which I clipped from a daily paper:

"Buffalo, N. Y., October 17, 1906. The International Convention of the Churches of Christ will meet in Norfolk, Va., next year. This question was decided in the committee this afternoon, and ratified by the convention. The supporters of New Orleans carried the contest up to the last moment, and only withdrew when a general understanding was reached that the convention of 1908 would go to New Orleans."

We fully expect the convention at Norfolk to ratify that agreement, and are making every arrangement to meet all the obligations devolving on us as a result of the acceptance of our invitation. Our cause is weak in this city, and we are depending upon the citizens to help us, and they are responding most generously to our call, but we could never go before them again with such a proposition if our invitation for 1908 should not be accepted. Therefore, it is now or perhaps never with us, and we do hope that our churches in other cities will give a brotherly consideration to our claims and not enter into a contest over next year, but bide their time.

Our cause here is already gaining prestige at the prospect, and all our future plans are based upon the realization of this hope.

Yours for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom, W. M. TAYLOR, Minister, Carondelet Centennial Building.

Carondelet, an older town than St. Louis, but incorporated with the larger city thirty or forty years ago, lies along the western bank of the great Father of Waters. Between the majestic Mississippi on the east and fine undulating country on the west, it is "beautiful for situation" and suitable for factory and business purposes, and at the same time makes a most desirable residence location. The Christian church, on Virginia avenue, is the only congregation of our brotherhood in all this southern section of 40,000 or 50,000 people. Started several years ago under the auspices of the City Mission Board, it has also received help from state and national boards. It has held its own and steadily grown amid local conditions of peculiar difficulty. Handicapped by very unsuitable premises and covered by a mortgage, the City Mission Board, with the congregation, have determined on a new and vigorous start, by making plans for the new building adopted. The design shows the perpendicular Gothic style of two stories, with all modern church equipments. When completed it will allow of all rooms being opened into one and will then have seating capacity of from 800 to 1000. It will not be begun until next spring, but a tabernacle will be put up on the site for a protracted meeting this autumn. This enterprise, in a new and rapidly growing part of the community, marks a distinct forward movement for our cause in this southern part of St. Louis.

A Generous Proposition.

At a meeting of the Garrison Park Association, recently, it was voted to offer a reduction of 25 per cent on the very moderate prices fixed on the lots, to purchasers who will close the contract for such lots before January 1, and who will agree to erect a cottage during the coming autumn or the following summer. As these lots are bound to enhance in value, now is a rare opportunity for brethren to secure a summer home at reasonable rates. Prices range from $100 to $300. A DISCIPLE AT THE PANAMA CANAL

Six weeks ago, after spending six months in Kingston, Jamaica, assisting in the C. W. B. M. work on that island, I came to the Isthmus of Panama, for the purpose of seeing the great work that had been undertaken by the government in connecting the Atlantic and Pacific. Across the continent is a long journey in the minds of the average American, but here we are so far ahead of things in New York or Frisco that we can breakfast at eight o'clock on the Atlantic coast and dine at noon on the Pacific. This I have done several times during my stay. From magazine articles and newspapers it is difficult to learn the actual condition of things here. One is led to believe that it is not a fit place to live, and that fever and other tropical diseases would claim, sooner or later, most of those who attempted to work on the canal. I came with grave misgivings, but after six weeks, during which time I have visited all important places on the Isthmus, and seen a great many things of interest, I have come to the conclusion that the commission has succeeded in not only making the canal zone a place where it is possible to live and work, but a place where it is very desirable to be at work, and that from a health standpoint. In one of his monthly reports recently Colonel W. G. Gorgas, chief sanitary officer, writes: "In our force of 5,554 white Americans we had only two deaths. . . Among our 900 American women and children there were no deaths." I have seen audiences of American men and women at each point along the zone I have visited, and they compare in robust health, appearance and every other way with any audiences I have ever seen in the States. Of course there is some sickness, but taking the situation as a whole, there is a wonderfully healthy lot of people here. We read of the excessive heat our friends in the States are suffering from, and we pity and wish they were here to share the cool air we enjoy. In visiting I have come across quite a number of our own people, and they have formed a very appreciative part of the several gatherings I have been privileged to speak to. Yesterday, at Gatun I was the guest of Brother T. H. Lockhart, son of J. J. Lockhart, evangelist, of Texas. At another place one of the boys told me he had studied at Lexington Bible College, and another that he was on the Isthmus to make money to enable him to go to Lexington and prepare himself for the Lord's work. He is succeeding, and Brother Roper, of Macon, Ga., will "deliver the goods" in good time. To-day I met the manager of the United Fruit Co. in Colon, a member of the Christian Church at Independence, Mo. He was baptized by good old Brother Proctor. These and many others are a credit to the brotherhood. The commission is doing excellent work in providing for the moral and religious welfare of the people. There are four club houses under the direction of five picked men, Y. M. C. A. secretaries from the States. These are as fine a set of men as it has been my privilege to know anywhere. The clubs are furnished with every attraction and convenience, just as the Y. M. C. A. buildings are in the States, and the fact that over fourteen hundred members have been enlisted within three months speaks for itself of the way the men appreciate this new work. The picture enclosed is one of the five secretaries in conference at Empire. They meet once each week to plan for the work. In each of the club houses I have addressed large audiences of American men and women. In addition to the club house, the commission has erected several large halls, which are used for religious work. There are several preachers—less than a dozen—representing various denominations, but I believe all have come to the conclusion that denominational work on the zone must fail if attempted, and the work done now is on union lines and this is recognized by the commission, the preachers and the people as the only way to succeed. You can call this federation, or what you will, but we realize that it is the way to bring blessing to the people here. The number of workers are altogether too few. There are in the employ of the I. C. C. and the Panama Railroad, with their families, about twelve thousand Americans, as well as about thirty thousand laborers of various nationalities. To minister to these there are about a dozen men. As a people, we ought to share in this great work, and to meet the great need men should be sent. America is building the canal, yet the religious organizations of the States have scarcely given the canal problem a thought, seeing that only five men, including myself, giving their whole time to religious work are Americans, and representing American church organizations. For the next fifteen years there will be a large working population in the zone, and it rests with our own people in America to look after their spiritual interests. The government is doing all and more than can be expected, and all the members of the commission, with Colonel Gothals as chief engineer, are in full sympathy with all religious work. They can be counted on to assist the work and workers here, if they are only sent to do the work.

New Building for Eugene Divinity School.

The time has come for enlargement. The foundation of a new main building is now being laid. It is to be 60 by 80 feet, three stories high, giving room for class rooms, library, offices and commodious chapel. It will be built of Phoenix building stone from Oakland, Ore. All parts and every feature will be of the best possible.

There were 92 students enrolled last year, and more are expected this year. We hope to use the new building at the opening of the second semester, February 4. The old building will be used for a young men's home.

The confidence of the brethren of the Pacific Northwest, and the growing interests of the school, indicate that it is not an experiment now, but destined to be a great Bible College. The brethren are making a fine response to the financial needs. The endowment fund has grown and the year closed, as every other year has closed, free from debt on current expenses.

The school breathes the spirit of our centennial awakening and has resolved to respond to the increased educational demands. Let every preacher in the great northwest select a Timothy, and every church a Phoebe, and the Eugene Divinity School will gladly help to train them for service. Let our young people that desire a general education attend the Oregon State University and supplement the course, as it should be, by the study of the Bible in the Divinity school, that stands adjacent. The first semester will begin September 24.

To Help Build His Church by His Evangelism.

It affords us much pleasure to announce that S. D. Colyer, of Orangeburg, S. C., has been persuaded to enter the evangelistic work. He is a man with a strong and impressive personality—endowed with experience, education and grace that help to make a great evangelist.

He enjoys the respect and confidence of all who know him. He has letters of commendation from our leading citizens who are not members of his congregation, such as editors, doctors, bankers, etc., as well as from the best men of our state and elsewhere. His sacrificial spirit, his courage and resolute faith in and under trying circumstances, his implicit confidence in the power of the gospel and his supreme trust in God and his hope in man will be an inspiration to and a benediction upon any church or community.

Brother Colyer was born in Kentucky and educated at Lexington. After traveling south and west and preaching three years in California at Artesia, he returned to the College of the Bible at Lexington, was professor of music there, chaplain in Hamilton Female College and chorister of the Broadway church, where he was ordained evangelist by brethren Mark Collis, Robert Graham and others.

Besides holding himself some of the best meetings ever held in our state, he has had some of the best men in our brotherhood hold meetings for him, such as J. B. Briney, James Small, S. M. Martin and the Brooks Brothers, now a twenty thousand dollar building is looming up on the horizon at Orangeburg, S. C. This church holds him in the highest esteem. You need not fear to risk his sermons and you need not fear to trust the man. Any church in need of a meeting will make no mistake in calling him. Address him at Orangeburg, S. C., Box 333.

W. D. Sturgeon, Clerk.
W. H. Harley, Elder.
L. E. Riley, Elder.

[We understand that Brother Colyer has himself sacrificed much for this church, even to the giving of his portion of his old homestead. He takes the field to raise by his services a thousand dollars for the building. He accepts from the church a salary of sixteen dollars weekly, so that all the money he may raise by these meetings will go to build the church.—EDITOR.]

"The Rise of the Current Reformation."*

BY F. C. MACFARLANE.

Here is a book that will be read with more than passing interest. In writing of the movement begun by Alexander Campbell it has generally been the aim to study it in its relations to the dry ecclesiastical roots among which it suddenly appeared as an exceedingly young and tender shoot. This book makes an effort to comprehend the shoot by studying the seeds cast into the soil as well as the soil which produced the plant. In fact the chief difference between this work and a number of other meritorious ones will be found to lie in the fact that most of the others contain a history of the current Reformation after it began, while the volume in hand gives a history of it before it began. It is a fundamental of the new psychology that there shall be no psychology which is not genetic. The value of the genetic study is to-day everywhere apparent. We cannot know a man till we know how he became a man. Neither can we know a movement until we know how it became a movement. Better still then to know how the man became who originated the movement—what books he read—with what schools of thought he came in contact—what dominating ideas formed those schools of thought, etc. It is just such a history that Prof. Van Kirk has given us. To range through the wide and complex fields of scientific, philosophic and theological activity during the period of three centuries succeeding the Protestant Reformation, understand them, sort out those which contributed to the making of Alexander Campbell's theology, and relate them on the one hand to historical Christianity running back to Pentecost and on the other to what its friends loved to call the Current Reformation, issuing in the great religious body known as the Disciples of Christ, is a task requiring broad reading, profound study and keenly analytical treatment. That this has been accomplished and the results presented within the compass of 143 quarto pages is apparent from a most casual survey of the book.

The method is to begin with a chapter on the Essence of Christianity, succeeded by brief analysis of Greek, Latin, Scholastic and Protestant Theology.

The Covenant Theology comes in for a full and informing chapter which closes with a few ringing sentences which your reviewer cannot forbear to quote:

"Thus the influences of Mr. Campbell's covenant theology is evident:

"1. He appeared with this doctrine on the frontier of America, among the Presbyterians and Baptists, the strong supporters of Calvinism in this country. It was only natural that his teaching of the progress of revelation, of freedom from the law, of the importance of baptism, should awaken intense hostility. Its issue was inevitable.

"2. He also represented the time-spirit (Zeitgeist), of the American Republic. He came in line with the great social and political movements of his day. He was the voice of democracy, of individualism in the religious sphere."

The Philosophy of Locke, the Doctrine of Inspiration, the Holy Spirit, each receive treatment in chapters devoted to them, and one of the interesting parts of the book is that on Precursors, dealing with the petty movements in revolt against ecclesiasticism which arose in Great Britain in the 18th century with all of which Campbell was familiar and many of which embodied principles and practices now inseparably linked with our movement. If I mistake not the concluding chapters on the principles set up our plea on the widest horizon possible to it, and in this particular does the fullest justice to the man whose ideas and ideals are a chief subject of scrutiny in the book. The book is a contribution both to history and theology. Its subject matter is such that it will doubtless receive a wide reading outside our own people. It deals with no subjects that are matters of controversy within our ranks and will doubtless have a wide reading among thoughtful people, for which class alone the book is intended. Although the careful syllabus which comes first in the volume and the severely analytical form in which those lectures are cast will perhaps alarm the lay reader he may calm his fears. The book is forcefully written, is free from technical language, and easy to read.

The Diamond Jubilee of Kentucky Missions.

According to our history we met for the first time to plan for co-operative work in September, 1832, at Lexington, Ky. This is the first meeting for such purpose, as far as I have heard, in the history of our movement anywhere. It is fitting that we should emphasize this important anniversary. We are proposing to do it by making a departure as to place of meeting. Latonia is to take care of our convention and that is a mission of the state board. When we began the work there about eight years ago with a half dozen members it seemed almost a forlorn hope. Our membership now numbers nearly 300. They are extending a cordial and state-wide invitation to the convention, September 16-19.

The Southeastern Passenger Association, including all roads save C. & O., have given us a rate of one fare plus 25 cents for round trip ticket plan to Covington, Ky. Rate is made to Covington because C. & O. touches that city and Latonia is contiguous to Covington. We expect to get the same rate from C. & O.

"One thing thou lackest," Kentucky Disciples, of being ready for that meeting. That great lack is the absence of fellowship of so many churches in the support of the thirty men at work. Help us now. Do not put it off until the last hour before the 75th convention. H. W. Elliott, Sec.

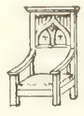
Christian Endeavor and the Centennial.

The training school of Christian service should give its members practice in every form of activity. Christ makes giving fundamental. He anticipated modern conditions and our manifold use of money. After we have extended our personal labors to the utmost we can send our money out in a hundred other ways to glorify his name.

A special Christian Endeavor Named Loan Fund has been auspiciously started. We must bring it up to $5,000 by 1909. A thousand societies can send in five or ten dollars each this September without interfering with the duty of their members toward the church offering for the same cause. How many will do it? Notify G. W. Muckley, Secretary, 600 Waterworks Building, Kansas City, Mo.



If for any reason your church is failing of its privilege in church extension, let the Christian Endeavor Society step into the breach and redeem its name for the annual report to be made at Norfolk in October. The associate members who do not feel any responsibility for the church offering will share in this and so be trained to co-operation with the Lord's people.

Not only at the Centennial in 1909, but for all time it will be a source of pleasure and encouragement to all Endeavorers to watch their Named Loan Fund building churches and being returned to go out and build others in perpetual succession.

Remember, these will all be modern as well as apostolic churches, and each will have its Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor.

Centennial Secretary.

Oklahoma and Indian Territory Disciples Uniting Their Work.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In our last annual convention of Christian churches of Indian Territory, held at McAlester, August 28-30, 1906, the question of union with the Oklahoma brethren was carefully and fully discussed and, with but one dissenting vote, resolutions to that end were adopted, reading, in part, as follows: "That it is the sense of this convention that the church and missionary interests can and will be best subserved by continuing the present independent and separate organizations in the two territories for the ensuing year, and that said merger should and shall be effected at, and culminated in, a great common convention of the Disciples of Christ, to be held during the summer of 1907, at a place and time to be mutually agreed upon by the respective official boards of said territorial organizations." Pursuant to said resolutions a committee of five was appointed and they met with the Oklahoma convention at El Reno, September, 1906, which convention adopted like resolutions and appointed a like committee to cooperate in the matter of preparing for the joint convention, which is to be held in Oklahoma City, September 5-9, 1907.

Since there has recently been some suggestion—I am assured, however, it is very slight—that the matter of union is not only an open question but one of doubtful wisdom and propriety at this time, and the date being near at hand when we are to meet jointly for the purpose of consummating that union which was begun a year ago, it seems wise to call attention to the above action of both territorial conventions of 1906, and to other matters, as well, which have since transpired, and seem to make a union of our work, henceforth, not only expedient but imperative.

Possibly it might, by technicality, be contended that we are not, by said resolutions, irrevocably committed to union, and that we could, when we get to Oklahoma City, meet separately and reverse the decision made a year ago. But, surely such a view and contention is contrary to the spirit and purpose of such resolutions, if not in violation of the express wording thereof, for it was, by all the churches of each territory in convention assembled, decided, by solemn resolution, that "said merger should and shall be effected" at this time. The writer was the author of the resolution adopted by the Indian Territory convention, and heard and participated in the discussion of same, and, in his judgment, it was not contemplated that the wisdom or propriety of uniting with Oklahoma should again be considered but only that we should meet in 1907 to effect the union definitely decided upon in 1906.

There is, also, the logic and force of events as well as of words. The question of union had been frequently discussed in former years, but, so long as the two territories were politically separate with the possibility of continuing separate, permanently, the uniting of our church work was conceded to be undesirable. In June, 1906, congress enacted the statehood bill, thereby forever sealing the political union of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. It is true that statehood is not yet a fact but it is a coming event. Eight days after the close of our joint convention the election will be held and the constitution will be overwhelmingly adopted. That President Roosevelt will proclaim statehood a few days later scarcely any one doubts. Moreover, even if, for any reason, we should fail in getting statehood just now, Congress has demonstrated that the two territories shall form but one state. The last hope of the most optimistic for separate statehood is forever gone. And none doubts the expediency and wisdom, yea, the necessity for union of our church and missionary work when we are one politically.

There are other reasons why we should effect our union at once. The Disciples of Oklahoma are, comparatively, much stronger than we are in Indian Territory, and they can and will make us strong where now we are weak. They will strengthen the work on our side but will not be weakened by the union. The liberality, devotion and work of the Oklahoma brethren, already manifest, prove that this will be the result. The intimation that has been made by some—it is pleasant to recall and to note that this charge, made at the McAlester convention last year, was instantly and quite unanimously repudiated as unworthy a Christian—that the Oklahoma brethren, outnumbering us, will control affairs to their advantage and to our detriment, ought not to find a moment's lodgment in a Christian heart. It ought not to be repeated. It makes one blush with shame to write it. Is it possible that all other churches, and all the professional, fraternal, labor, economical and political organizations of the two territories can unite on fair and friendly terms, as they have done, while we, who call ourselves Christians only, and urge with emphasis the union of all of Christ's followers, must continue separate church and missionary organizations lest some be selfish, unfair and unchristian towards others!

Again, in our last annual conventions, and as, perhaps, the most important work attempted, we undertook the founding and maintaining of an institution of learning, to be patronized, supported and controlled by the Disciples of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, in particular, and by the brotherhood at large, in general. This school is to be opened September 20, 1907. Good faith on our part, not to mention Christian fairness and duty, towards all concerned and interested in this institution demands that we perfect the union of our work and forces as promised by our word and conduct.

In the light of the foregoing facts, can any loyal Disciple of either territory hesitate long enough to question the expediency of union? Whether we willed it or not, destiny, events have settled the matter, and it is "union now and forever, one and inseparable."

Then let every one that possibly can be at Oklahoma City to have a share in that great convention. Let us come with hope and prayers in our hearts that we may have the grace and courage needed to carry forward the great and incalculable work God hath given us to perform. Very truly yours,

Thos. R. Dean,

Member of Joint Committee and one of the Trustees of Oklahoma Christian University, McAlester, I. T.

The twentieth district meeting held at Sullivan, O., August 23-25, was a pronounced success. Many of the churches of the district maintained their reputation of sending large delegations.

Brother Sims, the new pastor, is winning the hearts of his paopel.

The opening sermon "the Lamb of God" was delivered by H. F. Reed, of Wellington. Bro. John A. Armstrong, who is a new man among us won many friends in each of his three addresses "The Vision of the Holy Waters," "The Power of God's Word," and "The Crisis in Life." Bro. A. M. Jenkins, of Chesterland, preached twice to a delighted audience. His deeply spiritual address "The Leadership of Christ," of Sunday afternoon was especially appreciated. The closing address "Our Common Problems," by Bro. S. M. Cooper, of Cincinnati, was worth going far to hear.

We again lived through the early days with Brother Coole in his reminiscences. Sunday morning was a delightful occasion as we sat around the table of our Lord. Brother Cooley assisted by Brother Moody, of Medina, took charge of the table. The table. The presence of the Lord seemed very real as we remembered him. Los Angeles, Cal., September 1.—Greatest meeting in history of Southern California. Sixty-six additions in eight days. We continue. S. M. Martin, evangelist.—Willis S. Myers, pastor.

The I. C. C. S. W. District.

The convention convened at Logan, Ia., August 20-22. Was called to order by its honored president, J. D. Corbitt, of Snarpsburg. F. C. McCallon took charge of the devotional and Nelson Gardner of the music, which was followed by an inspiring address on "Civic Righteousness," by G. A. Henderson, of Shenandoah.

On Wednesday morning the devotional was led by Ira E. Carney, of Audobon, and was followed by a strong and clear address on "Improved Bible School Methods," by D. J. Elsea, of Creston. Brother Elsea made a beautiful plea for every member of the church in the Bible school. This was followed by the president's address, which was full of enthusiasm and courage to the followers of Christ. We listened to the report of Secretary W. T. Fisher, of Clarinda. It showed that some good work had been accomplished but more should be done. We have sixteen counties with 100 churches and a membership of over 12,000, who gave only $627.62 to I. C. C. work, being about 5 cents per member. Only 36 out of the 100 churches remembered Iowa day, and it is hoped to have the entire 100 wake up to the call for help and on the first Lord's day of November swell the offering fourfold.

The new preachers of the district were then introduced by B. S. Denny, who gave a glowing address with the main thought of the "Completion of the Reformation."

The C. W. B. M. reports were full of life and it was easy to be seen that work was being accomplished. The Junior work is full of life and enthusiasm. Prescott received first place in the Junior. A full report of Junior and C. W. B. M. work will be given our next papers by Sister E. E. Mack, of De Soto.

The C. W. B. M. period was followed by reports of committees. The report of the nominating committee was read and adopted: For president, J. C. Corbitt, Sharpsburg; vice-president, E. V. Mc Cormick, Tabor; secretary, W. T. Fisher, Clarinda; Bible school superintendent, D. J. Elsea, Creston; C. E. superintendent, Miss Mabel Searl, Clarinda.

The committee recommended that the time of our next southwest district convention of the I. C. C. be left to the district officers and that said convention be held in Osceola. This was adopted.

On Wednesday evening the devotional part was led by L. A. Boswell, of Modale, and H. H. Utterback, of Malvern, was in charge of the music. Brother McKenzie gave a strong address. He brought before our minds the fact that the home board guarantees an addition for every $5 paid in but that last year the I. C. C. report was an addition for every $2 paid in.

The Thursday morning devotional was conducted by E. E. Mack, of De Soto. A symposium on "Church Problems" was conducted by J. A. Rickel, Anita. Subjects and speakers were: 1. Prayer-meeting, G. A. Gillette; 2. Church Finance, M. C. McClellan; 3. Loaning the Pastor for Evangelistic Meeting, E. V. McCormick; 4. Sunday Visiting, O. M. Pennock; address, W. S. Johnson.

Next followed the reading and adoption of a fine resolution to the effect that the Christian Endeavor of the southwest district should support a living link evangelist in the state board. B. F. Hall, of Woodbine, then read a paper, which was requested by the convention to be printed.

The afternoon devotional was conducted by Brother Terrens, of Modale, and the report of the committee on courtesies adopted.

Then the best part of the convention came to pass, after the following addresses: "Christian Endeavor—Its Work." W. T. Fisher; "Christian Endeavor—Its Relation to the Church," Nelson Gardner; "Christian Endeavor—Its Purpose," E. E. Mack; "Does it Pay?" J. A. McKenzie; "Shall We Employ an Evangelist?" Lew C. Harris.

The Christian Endeavor of the southwest district raised the necessary $300 to employ a living link evangelist. May God bless his work and the work of the Christian Endeavorers who thus support him.

The evening service was conducted by Brother McCallon to the pleasure of the convention. We can not help saying a few words of those who had the convention in charge. B. S. Denny's presence was an inspiration to the entire convention and a blessing to all.

The district officers have labored long and hard to gain the victory and our men are full of love and faith. Much of the enjoyment of the convention was due to Brother Harris and his good people who so ably entertained.

The enrollment this year was the best but may we next year go to Osceola with at least 200 delegates. Nelson Gardner.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Kansas City Notes.

Louis P. Kopp has offered his resignation as pastor of the Ivanhoe Park church, to take effect in September.——E. J. Lampton, of Louisiana, Mo., has been in Kansas City for about a month for medical treatment. His attendance at the various meetings at the First Church has been greatly enjoyed by all.——It is not too early to have in mind that our state convention next June will be held in Kansas City. Already the Kansas City churches are beginning to plan for it.——W. F. Richardson, of the First church, will exchange meetings with L. J. Marshall at Independence this fall.——L. S. Cupp of Hyde Park church, with his family, spent August with his parents near Hannibal, and J. T. Sharratt supplied during Bro. Cupp's absence. ——D. Y. Donaldson, of South Prospect church, has returned from a vacation spent in Kansas. ——A very active worker in the First church and a Christian Endeavor leader, Neil B. Dieterich, has removed to St. Louis to reside.—— An echo meeting of the Seattle Christian Endeavor Convention gave the Kansas City Endeavorers a good taste of the convention, upon the occasion of the local union meeting here August 13.——Nelson H. Trimble, assistant pastor of the Independence Boulevard church, has been preaching Sunday mornings at Liberty while R. G. Frank has been taking his vacation.—— With the aid of a singing evangelist D. Y. Donaldson will hold his own meeting at South Prospect church beginning October 13.——O. E. Hamilton, evangelist, will hold a meeting at Hyde Park church in October.——W. F. Richardson and wife have been at Sayner, Wis., during August. During the time no evening service has been held at First church. The assistant pastor has been carrying on the work in the pastor's absence.——The brethren of the Jackson avenue church, whose building was recently destroyed by fire, are perfecting their plans to build a modern structure at a cost of about $25,000. The location of the new building will be on the old site at 17th and Jackson or within a few blocks to the east and south. The work of this church is going forward in their tabernacle. On a recent Sunday there were present in the Sunday-school 410 persons and the offering was $171. ——F. E. Meigs was present at a recent meeting of the Kansas City preachers. His words concerning the work in China were very much like those uttered by Paul, which we read in Acts. His mission to the homeland at this time, namely, that of securing funds for a college in China for the children of misionaries, appealed to all present at the meeting.——Prof. E. C. White, for more than thirty years principal of the Kansas City high school, was laid to rest August 4. He had been declining for about two years, and died at the age of 77. Distinguished citizens along with many other friends attended the funeral and his life-long friend, T. P. Haley, came from Macatawa Park to conduct it. He had been a member of the First church for many years. His service to Kansas City marks him as a singularly useful citizen.——The Linwood Boulevard church, formerly Springfield ave., or South Side church, will welcome its new pastor, Burrus A. Jenkins, some time during the coming month. It has before it a very auspicious future. Up to this time T. P. Haley has been its only pastor. When Bro. Haley left for his summer vacation he said to the brethren that they must find a successor for him, as he could no longer carry the responsibility of such a pastorate. That the Linwood Boulevard brethren should have secured one so highly acceptable to all concerned is a matter of gratification to the brethren here. In coming to Kansas City Brother Jenkins is coming back home, for here he lived until called elsewhere to labor.

Pioneering in New Mexico.

I have just been on a trip through Luna and Sierra counties, in New Mexico, looking after the work of the Disciples. At Cooks I held a meeting of nine days, with eleven additions. At Lake valley I found that a Methodist brother had agreed to hold a meeting, so I went to Hillsboro, and preached two sermons in a Union house, and one night for a Methodist mission among the Mexicans. I went then to Kingston and preached two sermons, being rained out the remainder of the week. Returning to Hillsboro for Sunday I then went into the neighboring camps on a missionary trip and returned to Hillsboro to organize a Christian Endeavor. At Lake Valley, and at Hillsboro, and Kingston they have a Union house, but no preacher of any kind, and had heard no one preach for over a year. At Cooks they had had no preaching for more than eight years. The man who asked me to come to Cooks had not been a Christian before, but made the good confession and obeyed the master during the meeting. They would be glad to have some one to preach for them one-fourth time. There are some of our people at Deming and I hope to hold a meeting there soon and get others. At Silver City there are twenty members with no house and no leader. During this trip one young man has pledged himself to attend the School of the Evangelists and to make a preacher out of himself, and another young man is going to the same school for the same purpose, but he is young yet, and I do not know what his views may be later on; the former is a very earnest and consecrated young man and he was of great help to me in my work at Cooks. We need many such men for the pioneer work here in New Mexico, and we hope some day to have a board of missions so that we may do some effective work. At the present time we have no territorial organization or help from the outside and we have to work only as we can, make tents a while and then preach a while. We hope, however, to see this great, growing country won from sin to Christ ere long and to do all we can to bring it about. I organized a Sunday-school at Kingston, and a Christian Endeavor at Hillsboro. We need consecrated, earnest and fearless men and some money to help in this country. There is no place where a few dollars spent will be the means of saving more souls.

Dr. W. M. Moberly.

Chicago Missions.

The following is submitted as a summary of work done under direction of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society for the year ending July 31, 1907:

1. Mission churches receiving appropriations from city board are Armour Avenue, (colored), Ashland Avenue, Chicago Heights, Douglas Park, Garfield Boulevard, Harvey, Maywood, Sheffield Avenue (North Side), South Chicago, West End and West Pullman, eleven in all.——2. In three of these—West End, Maywood and Douglas Park—ministers have been located who give full time to the work, instead of student supplies as formerly.——3. The city evangelist has visited Humboldt, Logan Square, Aurora and Antioch, and counseled with them about the work.——4. La Grange, South Oak Park, and Morgan Park have been visited with a view of opening missions in these growing suburbs.—— 5. A Scandinavian mission was opened by Julius Stone, of Chippewa Falls, Wis.——6. On the recommendation of the city evangelist, a plan to raise a Centennial fund of not less than ten thousand dollars was inaugurated, and already a fine beginning has been made to realize the amount.——7. All the missions have had additions, and most have improved their buildings. ——West end, where city evangelist, Sumner T. Martin, ministers, has added over 50 members, bought a church house, made the first payment of $500 on it, paid for extensive improvements on building and raised over $200 for missions. ——Ashland Avenue, with W. R. Moffet as pastor, has improved their house of worship and are planning an addition to it.——West Pullman, where Guy Hoover preaches, has painted and repaired the church, after paying off the debt that has been a burden since the organization.—— Logan Square has moved into a first-floor hall, and is prospering under the ministry of C. W. Cummings.——Chicago Heights with the generous, unselfish assistance of Englewood church, and the inspiring leadership of W. S. Lockhart, as pastor, is planning a splendid church to cost $25,000 or $30,000.——Harvey has dedicated, with expense paid or pledged, a $10,000 building under the ministry of W. S. Buckner.——Maywood has moved into a better hall in a better location since Victor F. Johnson came in March.—— Douglas Park is talking new church since their new pastor, C. M. Schoonover, began his labors. ——Sheffield Avenue (North Side), has greatly prospered under the ministry of Will F. Shaw. He suffered from a severe case of typhoid fever which has taken him from the field for a season of rest and recuperation.——South Chicago has moved into a hall in the center of the city and is busy gathering a building fund while developing in all good things under the guidance of Estes M. Haile.——8. The funds to carry on the Chicago mission work come from Chicago churches, and $2,000 each from the A. C. M. S. and the Illinois C. W. B. M. through the national treasury.

Cor. Secy. and Evangelist.

Irvington.—Since our Santa Cruz convention I was called to Elliott to baptize a deaf mute. She is a pupil of the Berkeley school. A few years ago I baptized a few ladies in the same neighborhood. Moses Pleading with Israel.—Deut. 6:1-15.

Memory verses, 4-7.

Golden Text.—Beware lest thou forget the Lord.—Deut. 6:12.

The name of the book of Deuteronomy indicates that it contains either a restatement of the law or a second installment of the law. As a matter of fact, it is more than a restatement. A repetition of the law at a critical time in the nation's history might be very useful, but it would not be worth while to have such a repetition recorded at length. It is, in reality, much more than a repetition. It is a new code containing much of the old and much that was not in the old. For example, it includes a new emphasis upon the centralization of worship, prohibiting the establishment or use of any place of sacrifice except the one central place which was to be established.

In the critical study of the Old Testament, the place of Deuteronomy in the development of Israel's religion is one of the most important problems. There are those who accept the book for what it professes to be, namely, the farewell words of Moses, giving his last admonition to Israel, recapitulating their history, reminding them of God's miracles hitherto, exhorting them to faithfulness, and laying down certain new commands, including the command to offer sacrifice only at the central place of worship when that place should be established some centuries later. Others think it more reasonable to assign the book to that period in which this centralization was actually accomplished, namely, the period of the reforms under Josiah.

In the fifth chapter the ten commandments are restated, and in the sixth there is a general exhortation to the people to remain faithful to Jehovah. The connection between righteousness and prosperity and between apostacy and calamity was much emphasized throughout the early history of Israel. Later on their wise men became aware, to their confusion, that suffering is not always the punishment of sin. The book of Job records the dawning consciousness of this fact. The philosophy of human life is not quite simple enough to be condensed into "Be good and you will be happy." Nevertheless it is, in general and in the long run, true, that personal or national righteousness is a good investment even from the worldly standpoint. So now, Israel is again urged to be faithful "that thy days may be prolonged," "that it may be well with thee," "that ye may increase mightily."

Verse 4 was, and still is, considered by the Jews as containing the very heart of their religion, the Golden Text of Judaism.

The words and principles which contained the heart of their religion were not only to be learned, but they were also to be taught. "Thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children." There are excellent people who appear to feel that their responsibility is limited to the preservation of their own faith. They do not teach religious truth to their children because they want the children to "think for themselves." This sounds pleasantly liberal, but it is wholly fallacious. People learn to think correctly for themselves only as they know those truths which have been transmitted from generation to generation. A child who knows the multiplication table is much more apt to think for himself correctly in mathematics than one who does not know it. The great truths of religion must be taught to children while they are yet children, and one excellent way to do this is not to depend wholly upon Sunday-schools, but to "talk of them when thou sittest in thy house."

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

A Friend of Christ.

Topic September 11. John 15:12-16; Jas. 2:23.

Friendship has been called the noblest passion. Its basis is pure, unselfish love. Hence the Master's commandment "that ye love one another, as I have loved you." No love was ever more completely unselfish than his, "who having loved His own, loved them to the end." There is something deeply pathetic in the language of Christ to his disciples, at the time when many went back and walked no more with him.

Turning to them he inquired, "And will ye also go away?" Simon Peter answered: "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life; and we have believed and known that thou camest forth from the Father and that the Father sent thee." * * *

There is something peculiarly tender and altogether heart-breaking in his words to Judas, in the momentary recognition in the garden: "Judas, betrayest thou the son of man with a kiss?" Even then he would have taken him to his heart in forgiveness.

"He bore our sins. I charge you this Remember, with the shame of Judas' kiss!"

The shame, the double shame of it, the unspeakable infamy of it, was not only that he "betrayed innocent blood," but that he betrayed unselfish love. Still, despite the Master's knowledge of the infamy of this Judas, he loved him also to the end. He loved him, but lost him. Did it ever occur to you that some of the agony of that night watch in the garden was over the failure of his love for one of the chosen disciples, this betrayal in the house of his friends?

The supreme proof of love is the laying down of life for our friends. Yet Christ laid down his life for his enemies. That love is worthy to be called "the greatest thing in the world." * * *

It is possible to talk in platitudes about love and yet be loveless. God forgive us! "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." This swept away all our platitudes and put friendships on a practical basis. It is the need of most of our lives. Friendship is a matter of everyday demonstration. Some one to love us every day is what the heart craves. And this is about the only sort worth having. The heart is always saying: "If you love me, help me—let me help you also."

Friendship is mutual, confiding. "I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." Friendship is always saying (perhaps not in words, but in self-revelations, in little intimacies, revealed in many ways), "show me yourself, tell me all that is in your heart, and let me tell you the very secrets of my soul, let me lift your load, let us share our griefs and joys."

As the friends of Christ, we are the called and chosen. We are his representatives. "I have chosen you and ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you." Our enrichment is the end of all service. He wants to do for us exceeding abundantly above all that we are able to ask or think. It is the generous nature of friendship—of love such as his. And, lest we forget, He added: "These things I command you, that ye love one another."

THE UNIVERSAL ELEMENTS OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION

Charles Cuthbert Hall

"Amid the flood of books on the subject of religion there appears every few years one book that dwarfs all others, one that crystalizes the thinking of the Christian world. Such is this book. This man separates himself from the bewildering crossed paths and standing free, grasps clearly the course that is being followed by the Christian age of which he is a part. His knowledge is cosmopolitan and accurate, his logic is clean cut and simple, and his conclusions convincing and optimistic, springing from a faith at once simple and profound in its certainty that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world of men who are his possession." $1.25 net.

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri,
311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

The two following letters are in response to a suggestion recently made in this column that we have a discussion of the question, "How to Hold the Boys." Their suggestions are practical. Read them and then write me what has been your experience or what is your judgment in regard to this vital difficulty. It is worth while to note the conviction, here expressed, that the enlisting of the men is at least one of the important factors in enlisting and holding the boys. Let me hear from others.

"How to Hold the Boys," has always been an interesting question to me as superintendent of various Bible schools. Let me remind you first of all that children are great imitators. "As is the parent, so is the child," is as true in many cases as gospel. We have been working at the wrong end of the line. We have been trying to build and hold our Bible schools among the children. Let us look to our work from a different viewpoint. The adult Bible class is working a wonderful revolution in many places. Let us get every MAN in the community into this class. The father interested, the mother, if not already, soon will be interested. The mother interested, soon the children will be interested. Men are easily held if interested. Everywhere men are hungering and thirsting for knowledge and entertainment. Why not give it to them through the Bible school? If the father is interested and enthusiastic over Bible school work, he will talk it on the street and at his work. The children will soon take it up on the playgrounds and last, but not least, the daily press will talk it. In place of football and baseball and the prize ring, why not have a page in every daily paper devoted to Bible school. It can be done. There is a way. Let us all pull on the other end of the line for a while and see the results.

H. A. Greening.

St. Joseph, Mo.

Dear Brother Hardin:

I have been reading with much interest your articles on the "Adult Classes in the Bible School" of late, and desire to inform you that I believe it is the only remedy to bring the whole church into the Bible school, and unless the whole church can be enlisted the greatest good cannot be accomplished.

I was elected superintendent of the Woodson Chapel Christian Sunday-school the first of July, and am making a desperate effort to get the school on a basis upon which we can do a more efficient work for the Master.

We have already increased in attendance and contribution, and added two classes and teachers; but the main point that I am striving for now is better deportment and more spirituality —the thing much needed in many of our Bible schools.

I have the promise of our pastor, Brother Capp, to preach a sermon in the near future on the subject, "The Whole Church in the Bible School and as many More." For I fully believe that the only solution of this problem lies in bringing more of the older members into an active service with us in the school.

Now if you have any printed matter that will be of service to us along this line please send it to us at once.

In regard to "Getting and Holding the Boys." I can only give you the plan that we have begun to work upon. The boy wants to be noticed and trusted and by appealing to these instincts, you can often capture him when other methods will fail. I have asked each pupil to single out a boy, that is not a pupil of any school, and make him an object of his prayers and efforts for a week, visit him every day, and if he should not come to the school on Sunday to inform me. My plan then will be to get his address and send some one else the next week. We commenced this plan last Sunday, and cannot give you the results as yet. But should we fail on this method, we will not give up trying but watch your columns, and adopt some one's plan more feasible, for we must have the boys for Christ.

We have also begun a teacher's meeting for the training of our teachers, and find it well taken by them, and much good has resulted from our study of the lesson and comparison of plans.

S. Moser.

Now that vacation is over and the people are back in their places, the leaders in the Bible schools ought to be undertaking great things for the fall and winter campaign. It is destined to be the season of the greatest activity in the Bible school world ever seen. The advanced steps planned for a few years are now becoming understood and are being taken up in earnest. Especially will there be an agitation during the next year, of the movement to bring the whole Church into touch with the Bible studying service.

In Missouri our State Bible school work will be pushed with renewed vigor. Already the superintendent's engagements extend through most of the winter. Our other field workers are active. The force will be increased as the demands and the means justify. Let it be remembered that the earnest co-operation of every minister, superintendent and worker in the state is necessary in order that our great undertakings may be accomplished.

In this connection let me urge all of our schools to send in promptly the means necessary for the support of the work of our association. The support accorded it so far has been loyal and liberal; let such support continue. Send to the address above.

The book, "The Bible School To-day," will help you in your work, and you can get it by sending 35 cents to me or to the Christian Publishing Company. It is an institute brought to your home. If you are conducting a training class, use it for a text-book on the practical part of the class work.

Getting Down to Bed Rock.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In looking over the book advertisements in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST one week I was impressed with the number of debates in the list. As you say, "the era of debates may be passed," and yet to my mind there is a decided loss to the cause of truth because of this fact. Think of the immense advantage to our preaching the Campbell and Rice debate has been, or that other masterpiece, the Campbell and Owen debate. The Campbell and Purcell debate is a compendium on the differences between the Papal and Protestant systems, the fault of the work being that the disputants attempted to cover too much ground, and were compelled merely to touch some of the subjects and pass on. Our contribution to the question of baptism has been voluminous, and satisfactory. Take for example, "The Form of Baptism," by Brother Briney. Where can be found a better argument for New Testament baptism than he has given us? And where could be found a more characteristic reply than that of Dr. Tucker, who states the Episcopal side? I think he gives as strong a statement for his side as can be given. It embodies the knowledge of a prominent teacher in that church, and reveals the Episcopal disdain toward the Baptist dissenter. A vein of scorn runs through his essay. If there is anything more admirable in the English language than Brother Briney's "rejoinder," I should like to know where it can be found. After reading it, one feels that here is a baptism that needs neither an apology nor a defence. The plain statements of Scripture are sufficient. On the other hand, when one has to violate the simplest rules of interpretation, and to deny the plainest meanings of our language, as well as to dry up the waters of Jordan, the springs of Enon and to make "a certain water" become an uncertain water, in order to make out his case, he ought to conclude that there is something wrong with his form of baptism. I wish some of our brethren of means would make it possible for every student in our Bible Colleges to have these standard works at a nominal price, and to provide a fund whereby these books could be put into the hands of those who are seeking light on the points of difference between us and others at a minimum cost, or free. That would enable the donor to do evangelistic work of a high order during his life time, and for generations to come. The Gallios, now as ever, are impatient with everything but indifference. They have their reward; but the truth-seeker welcomes information from any source and is impatient of delays. The strength and weakness of any claim is more likely to be discovered in the midst of discussion than in the results of one-sided investigation. "Hear the other side" is a good motto, and in a debate the best arguments on both sides are advanced. The preachers among us are few who do not acknowledge their indebtedness to the masters of debate from Alexander Campbell to the present. E. B. Barnes.

There can be no question, we think, that religious debates have, on the whole, served the cause of our reformation, in time past, in spite of some of the evils attending them, but we believe their usefulness is largely in the past. The world to-day is demanding a different kind of proof of the advocates of our cause. It is asking, and with reason, "What type of Christian character are you producing?" "What are you doing for the conversion of the heathen abroad and the Christianization of our own country?" "How does your plea for Christian union work among yourselves?" On our answer to these questions, in deeds, not in words, our future success depends.—EDITOR.]

HARLOW.

The home of W. E. Harlow and wife is bowed in sorrow by the death of Clyde, their eldest son, who at twenty-three years passed from this life, August 12, 1907. Clyde had a special gift in vocal ability. His musical training had rendered him uncommonly useful. He had a passion for gospel songs. He loved men's souls and reached many by his songs and his own Christ-likeness. Beginning in Wichita, Kas., for two years he was his father's soloist and chorus leader in their evangelistic campaigns throughout the states. This partnership between father and son was the outgrowth of years of hope, prayer and preparation. In Shelbyville, Ind., he sang in his last complete meeting, taking cold on his road to the next engagement and later, about the middle of March, after the week's preparation and one night in charge of the chorus, he left his father and closed his active work in the church at Parsons, Kas, where on his tenth birthday his father while pastor there, had baptized him. Shortly he went to Albuquerque, New Mexico, where in May his father went to him, and his mother soon followed. Relief seemed hopeless from the quick consumption and in early July they brought him home and there he closed his sufferings. He was one of those sons of whom the most exacting parents may well be proud, brothers and sisters reverence, and friends emulate. Though suffering was intense at times, he was always patient and kept a clear mind to the end, naming who should conduct his funeral and where his body should lay. Within very few minutes of the close he said, "Get a tablet and write," then dictated three songs to be sung, "Jesus Saviour, Pilot Me," "Lead Me Gently Home Father," and "Lead, Kindly Light." We added one of his own favorite duets—"Unanswered Yet," sung by two of the three young men who came over from Parsons to the funeral. He named his pall-bearers, dictated three telegrams and every detail of the funeral, besides disposing of all of his property and personal effects. When he hesitated his father said, "Is that all, son?" He said "yes" and Clyde had passed into another life. In the Central Christian church, where his father was formerly the pastor and where the family church altar is kept sacred, we held the last service August 13, 1907, in the presence of a throng of friends. His grave we literally hid with a thick covering of beautiful flowers. Because of the father's prominent life and work there will be general regret. But Clyde's beautiful, helpful life will be remembered by all.

HARLAN.

Marion E. Harlan, one of the best known ministers of the Christian church, fell asleep Saturday afternoon, August 3, at Oxford, Ohio. In his departure both the family and the cause of Christ sustain a great loss. He was born at Kokomo, Ind., in 1859. His training for the ministry was secured at Drake University, Des Moines, Ia., where he spent seven years, graduating in 1891. His activities in the church were varied, his abilities rendering him equally capable, whether as pastor, evangelist or superintendent of the Kansas State Missionary Society. He did splendid work in Wellington, Atchison and Topeka, the capital city. Deserved success attended his seven years' ministry at the Sterling Place Church of Christ, New York City. During the New York pastorate in 1903 his alma mater recognized the value of his services by conferring upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. He was prominent in Christian Endeavor work. The cause of missions was near to his heart and as life director of the American Christian Missionary Society and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society he was a loyal advocate of their interests. He was a man of broad sympathies and sterling quality. His acquaintance with men and things and his knowledge of the Scriptures accompanied by a natural vitality of life growingly capacitated him for the larger fields to which he was called. The prayerful faith which characterized his services of Christ remained with him to the last hour. About one year ago complete nervous prostration obliged him to close his labors in New York, and his health steadily declined despite the competent care received at the Oxford Sanitorium, until there came the sudden but not unexpected end. His funeral services were conducted at South Haven, Kas., Thursday, August 8, by J. M. Morris of the South Haven church, L. T. Faulders of the Wellington church, and Prof. W. C. Payne of the Kansas Bible chair. His last resting place is in the midst of the quiet scenes of his earlier labors. His wife, Mrs. Jennie G. Harlan, corresponding secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and two sons, Earl, aged 21 years, and Paul, 11 years, survive him.

WHITE.

Ann Arminta Adams was born in Cass County, Mo., August 10, 1845. She became a Christian a few days before her marriage to John R. White, November 8, 1866. She was the mother of seven children, all but one of whom are living and were present at her death, which occurred at her home near Kingsville, Mo., July 25, 1907. She leaves also a sorrowing husband, who for many years has been an elder in the church at Kingsville. Sister White was a good woman, devoted to her church, her family and her friends, and is universally mourned in the community where she so long lived.

Dependable Books

We recommend each of these to our patrons.

—The Pacific Islanders. By Delavan L. Pierson. $1.00. In a series of fascinating articles the story is told of the progress of these far-away people from the depths of savagery to the heights of sainthood. It is a most important contribution to the missionary literature of the age. 354 pages.

—Between the Testaments. By David Gregg, LL.D. 75 cents. This deals with the times of inter-Biblical history. The 500 years between the two canons constitute a large but neglected chapter of religious history. It is really a period of thrilling interest. We heartily commend it to our patrons.

—The Saloon-Keeper's Ledger. By Louis Albert Banks. There must be a new education of the American people with reference to the drink-evil. Too many pulpits are either silent or speak "with bated breath." Temperance ballots are not self-made; they are the result of education. This book helps give it. Price 75 cents.

—A Hundred Years of Missions. By D. L. Leonard. $1.20. This is an inspiring story of the incidents and lessons of missionary work in every land since Carey began his labors more than 100 years ago; achievements of wonder and heroism thoughtfully and thoroughly told. It is arranged to meet the wants of the general reader.

—The Burial of the Dead. Duffield. This is a beautiful morocco-bound, funeral manual. It contains Scriptural selections, topics, hints, suggestions for special occasions, such as the funeral of a suicide, a public man, sudden death, a repentant criminal, a "sporting man," a sailor, and in time of penitence. $1.00.

—Forward Movements of the Last Half Century. By Arthur T. Pierson. $1.50. Dr. Pierson has written an accurate and interesting description of the conspicuous missionary, philanthropic and other religious movements during the past fifty years. The volume aims to give not only a valuable record of these progressive steps, but to present incentives for future efforts in the same direction.

Chapter XI.—A Modern Warfare.

This age is the battlefield in which the soldier of Christ is to fight.—D. L. Moody.

The judge found in his restored son all that his heart had wished, both from a business and a social standpoint. He was himself again plus the world-wide experience which he had acquired during his wanderings, and all this was graciously modified and blended by the new strong life which had been taken on through his conversion.

He also found the helper that he had sought for him in his editorial duties, in the person of Miss MacBride, the trained nurse of whom we shall hear more anon.

It has since been estimated that not less than twenty-five hundred people in Eaton were quickened into a new and deeper Christian life, and that they were convinced of the genuineness of the healings that had taken place there before their eyes; for more than a score had claimed the new way and whether through fanaticism or because they had the real healing, many had thrown down crutches, canes, spectacles and medicines, and were going about giving God the glory. The Gordons had arrived and nothing would do but that Mrs. Gordon should appear in public and teach the doctrine which she had introduced at the time of her son's trouble in the winter.

This was the beginning of the end to what had seemed so promising an opening for an organization that should prove to be the restoration of the primitive faith and the conservator of all that one might expect toward advancing the material kingdom of earth.

Not that it was a mistake to ask Mrs. Gordon to teach, as she was a widow of three score years, and well fitted by natural and acquired talents and eminently spiritual. She was also very ardent and her teaching was deeply scriptural and most convincing; but above all other considerations her teaching bore fruit in the healing of soul and body, since she knew how to pray.

But the enemy of all righteousness and of every good work, goeth about continually to destroy and to deceive the very elect if possible. A red flag in a bull's face could not have resulted more certainly in an encounter with its possessor, than did such teaching and its faithful delineation in the Morning Sun, as the judge's paper was called, result in opposition from a sin-loving community. For Mrs. Gordon and President Brown both taught that clean living was a necessary concomitant to attainment of the divine health for soul and body. Nor did they spare to expose sin and iniquity in high places. Some most unsavory cases being uncovered right in Doctor Tipler's church as well as in other circles of elite society in that city.

The whiskey ring had slunk away quietly and appeared to be subdued, but it simply took the attitude of the serpent in the grass, to abide its time and chance to strike.

The race track men and society women, together with many unspiritual and unbelieving church members, gave their pastors to understand that such teaching could not be tolerated and yet retain their patronage. Now to lose the support of such classs was a serious thing to the official boards of the churches, for they had money to spend freely and much of it came into the church coffers to make up the delinquencies and to boom the fairs and festivals in their season. In fact we might say that the churches of Eaton were well-nigh controlled by such people, for nothing could be said to offend them, lest they should withdraw their support; at least no one church dared to do it lest the others might profit by their error.

So their mouths were closed to such things as the world objected to. Had they not been dependent upon such money and people for their church administration, it might have been different, but they always had done so and it was now out of the question to do without it. Such a course would necessitate an entire revolution of methods and a change of heart on the subminded people who retained their places in the churches insisted upon these things being heard, and many who claimed to ject, which was impossible as the church stands organized in Eaton.

On the other hand many spiritually have been healed and blessed under the new teaching, insisted upon teaching and testifying to what had been done for them at every opportunity. Thus the social meetings, Sunday-schools and even congregations were constantly under the influence of these zealous people, who went everywhere teaching and preaching their new-found joys. Something had to be done and that quite soon, for by this process the churches were being ground between the upper and the nether mill stones.

The newly converted were discouraged in their holdings of these truths and requested not to mention it in the social meetings, nor to lay them to heart too much, lest they should find themselves fooled by designing people, which they insinuated these new teachers were. Many were offended at a woman being allowed to teach and much was made of it by the opposition.

The time had come to act and the pastors, by concerted plan emanating from Doctor Tipler and the professors at the college, began to teach a counter doctrine and to make light of the healings, attributing them to "hypnotic power—mind over matter sort of influence, which was nothing more than magnetic healing that had been practiced and held for ages."

This failing to discourage the spread of the teaching as set forth by the opera house people, they clubbed together and brought in a reputed lecturer on hypnotism, mind reading and magnetic healing, and set him up for a month's siege against the prevailing sentiment.

The Morning Sun began a strong protest and expose of this sorcerer and it would seem that it might stand a chance to prevail, but the interests of the churches as also the sentiments and backing of the unbelieving, the abominable and what not mentioned in the category of Revelation, were pitted against it. The result was a withdrawal of patronage from the paper of a certain class of advertisements and subscribers and the beginning of another paper, called the Phoenix World.

This proved to be a veritable modern weapon, which with others of both modern and ancient invention, was effectual in the attack. The editor of the defunct Times was called to the chair and there was money and support for this new enterprise that the Times did not have before.

A new enterprise, having a popular backing of a worldly people, carries a momentum that a purely religious one cannot command, no matter what its fruits may be. Many seemingly pious people will flock to the popular side with the wrong cause, leaving the true one to shift for itself. Such was the case at Eaton when the lines were drawn by the new adjustment.

One night a heavy storm prevailed and President Brown took Mrs. Gordon home in his private carriage, there being no other vehicles upon the streets; but that was enough for green-eyed envy to lay hold upon for a story, which the Phoenix World was more than ready to publish, with most despicable coloring of a scandal. Rumor soon flew in all directions with a distorted and padded-out story that grew in heinous proportions at every exchange.

We draw the veil upon it for it was as false as the pit from whence it sprang. Not a vestige of suspicion could have honestly attached to either, but such is Satan's method and we should not be ignorant of his devices, but we are, since we believe the things we like to believe, and nominal Christian people often find themselves his most pliant tools in this line.

The Morning Sun would have corrected the story and put things to right before those who had ears to hear the right but for the sad fact that that very day an explosion occurred in the opera house, burning it and the printing office to the ground, with a total loss of all the printing material and the investment which the Judge owned in the business, and Charlie was so badly burned and overcome with the exertion of trying to save some others that he was unconscious for many days and perilously near death. Many of the employees were killed in the explosion and the printing force was not organized again.

It might have been supposed that the Judge with his good hard business sense, would have attended to the insurance transfer when the paper came into his hands, but he did not, and it was allowed to lapse. It has never been ascertained whether it was because he had so much to attend to, together with the joy of his new-found faith and the return of his son, that he forgot it; or whether he made it a part of his faith to trust that also to the same system with his spiritual and physical renewal; but the fact is that one hundred thousand dollars was swept out of existence in a few minutes and the judge was left in his old age with nothing but his little home, his faith and his children; a fortune, to be sure, if rightly appreciated; but the new congregation was left without a house of worship and its leaders were under a scandal deep-dyed and diabolically told with a view to stamp them with the mark of the beast and destroy their influence and scatter their following. This opprobrium had the desired effect, to scatter the flock and create a revulsion of feeling that should be effectual in turning the faithful away from the teaching and from such leaders. The better public sentiment of the distinctively religious class was so shocked by the stories of the scandal that they were led to look upon the destruction of the opera house and the paper as a judgment from God's hand, and when sympathy was most needed and the bond of brotherhood should have strengthened weak hands, there was neither, but havoc and mockery for the new movement, until many of those who had allied themselves with it, like Peter, were found denying and cursing it like the rest. However, the leaders got together after some delay and published a denial of the stories and some strong statements to the effect that there had been foul play in the burning of the opera house and printing plant, but the World met this publication with another vilification and a threat to bring the "faith healers" (as it called them), to justice for the crime.

To add to their discomfiture Mrs. Brown was taken seriously ill from the nervous shock that had come upon her through such false accusation of her husband, and she was even reported dead by the World, by which another shock was dealt to the faith for the time being.

Following upon this came the election, and, for the first time in twenty years, Judge Taylor had to relinquish his seat, and that to a man of mediocre ability; one who would not offend the whiskey interests nor anything else, unless it was the class of men whom he had been put there to defeat and offend.

This with the burning of the opera house and the destruction of the printing plant and paper, was without doubt sweet revenge for Schlitz and his ilk, but it was not without its compensation, and what is there in this world of loss, sorrow and pain, that has no compensations? Much more to the true Christian all things work together for good, for he is called according to a divine purpose, and the very flames must bear blessings for him even in this present life. While God's plans are yet in process, these things are hard to see, for we are prone to look at the things that are seen and to count upon material gains as all important. In fact the temporal kingdom and earthly reign of the Messiah have always occupied men's minds. The disciples spent much of their time and bent their imaginations to discern their Lord's purposes for a restoration of the kingdom of David, of which they supposed they would become the actual participators and chief officers, and they were offended and disappointed when a visible dispensation could not be promised them in their day and age; one that would overawe and control the world. Probably their primitive plan after Pentecost was not in accord with his last instructions concerning the kingdom, but rather a communistic tendency of the time, which formulated itself through the occasion of their coming together, under the intense interest and spiritual awakening by the Holy Spirit. That it did not continue and prosper to the overcoming of all opposition, is sufficient reason for the above supposition. Had it been the divine plan, are we justified in the expectation of permanence and perfection? Many have been the expressions of what has been taken devoutly to be the Master's plan for an organized form of Christianity, but alas! their history and destiny tends to the earth, earthy, while the Master, whom they have sought to follow, is the Lord from heaven. The affections are thus to be set on things that are above and not on things that are upon the earth. Conformity to the world follows closely with power that comes from organic expression of even the most sincere purpose, to follow a supposed plan for the setting up of the Kingdom upon earth in material form. "Not as the world," rings down the ages, and yet man still seeks a Kingdom and a church expressed in worldly terms and material things. Like the raven he is not content until he finds another footing than the divine and heavenly ark, tossed and buffeted by the billows of a worldly flood.

The persecution that arose with the stoning of Stephen scattered the church abroad, and only thus was the command of the Lord Jesus carried out, for they then went everywhere preaching the Word. Here we see the tendency in man to misinterpret the Master's purpose, and we also see how he would correct the error of the zealous propaganda builders by permitting a most terrible scourge of persecution to come upon them. The only way the Church, as organized to-day, can evade such scattering persecution is to conform to the world, cease to be a peculiar people and cease to reprove the world of its sin. So long as the world can have a comfortable feeling in the Church, about its condition, it will continue to tolerate the Church and even support it. But let true believers teach and live the true Christian life and accept no other as satisfactory evidence of discipleship with Christ, and they will find themselves out of harmony, and even accounted enemies of progress and inimical to the best interest of the world, hence persecution will follow, as certainly as the leaven will cause a disturbance in the meal.

What could be gathered together of the fragments of that congregation, that had met from time to time in the opera house were mustered in a small hall by James Gordon on the Sunday morning following the disaster. President Brown was kept at his wife's bedside constantly and the judge could not be asked to leave his son; while Doctor Reid and Mother Gordon were kept busy with the suffering ones on both sides, including the printing force that were rescued. Even Miss MacBride had not escaped quite serious injuries, but was able to give directions at the hospital where she was carried with the rest.

James had persuaded some fellow students to join him; those whom he knew to be faithful and who had from the first believed and known the truth and also who had seen the mystery of iniquity in its workings through all these months. They armed themselves with some clarinets and song books and stood on the balcony overlooking the street and sang "Jesus saves," "Go tell the World" and some other thrilling songs until the hall was well filled, then they went within and began to tell the simple story of the cross, interspersing their short speeches with prayer and songs. This they repeated from Sunday to Sunday, with varying success, until they became quite proficient preachers and were known in the college as the "Homiletic team,"

Saving in the Kitchen.

It has often been remarked that what is thrown into the garbage-can in our rich country would feed all the poor. I have seen this proved many a time, and it is not the well-to-do, but those who ought to economize, who either know not how to utilize instead of throwing away things, or are too lazy to do so.

There are half-loaves of white bread—what a number of good dishes could be made from them if people knew how good this bread is when dipped in water and put back into the oven for a little while; and why do we have anything like cracker dust when we can have fine grated bread?

Just a few creamed potatoes and a few peas left, "not worth saving"—but they make a delicious soup.—Harper's Bazar.

"Do This Deed."

"We live in a world of law, of God's law, which finds its expression in cause and effect," says Lida A. Churchill in the June "Delineator." "Note that the call is to those who have their muscles trained—the muscles of the heart, the brain, the understanding. The reason why a certain man repairs your pipes is that he is equal to, educated in, ready for, plumbing. His knowledge and fitness for the required work are the cause, the call, the effect.

"When a thing is to be done in politics or painting, science or sociology, cooking or chemistry, there is looking around to see who is best fitted for the required task. 'I'll get ready and perhaps something will come of it,' said Lincoln, as he read by the light of the pine knot and worked out examples on the newly sand-papered wooden shovel. In an hour of critical experience and crucial need the nation said to this best-equipped, nearest-ready man, 'I find thee worthy. Do this deed for me'."

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

On the Limited Across Mexico.

March 30.—All last night and all to-day our train carried us homeward from Mexico City. And all to-night and to-morrow and to-morrow night we will be riding on this train, which is due at Texarkana about 4 a. m. on April 1. We are delighted with our Pullman. At one end of it is what Jebly and I call the gentlemen's drawing-room, though the gentlemen who haunt it give it the less worthy name of "smoker." It is in this drawing-room that Jebly and I pass the day. As Jebly can not walk, it is very satisfactory to place him where he can reach over the back of his chair and turn on the ice water, and reach over the arm of his chair and wash at the basin ever so many times a day. Very hot and very dusty, these waste lands of Mexico. Much ice water drinking and using of towels, of which there are at least a dozen to each traveler. The drawing-room is all one could desire. There is a huge leather-covered bench across the end that will accommodate four men, and two thickly-stuffed, easy-backed and softly-armed leather chairs, not meanly fastened to the floor, but free as the air. It is true the room is so small that when there are twelve masculine feet upon the floor little space is given for the moving of chair legs; still, it is better to be able to hitch your chair a couple of inches this way or that, than to have no liberty of motion. There are two large windows on the side, a real waste in the matter of mirrors, and little buttons to press which ring far away in the other section of the car, and sometimes brings the porter, and oftener not.

I was awakened last night by something like a chill, although it was not particularly cold. I suppose it was when the train reached the highest elevation. The sensation passed in about a minute, but while it was on hands it seemed that one might never be warm again; and this was in the torrid zone! One might as well not live in the torrid zone when he is 8,000 or 9,000 feet up in the air. It is like going down South to live and getting on top of a mountain out of reach of the heat. While watching the natives from the car window, one is struck with their manner of carrying burdens. They fasten the weight upon their backs, and pass around it a leathern strap, which is then secured around the forehead of the workman. Thus the weight comes chiefly upon his brow. Considerable burdens can be sustained by one's forehead without a very marked ducking forward of the head. The men carry loads of wood in that way. More sticks than could be borne in the arms are stacked up in the strap, lifted to the back and sustained by the forehead. In the City of Mexico I saw a corpse borne that way. The Mexican had a chair fastened to his forehead from over his shoulders, so the back of the chair was against his own back. In the chair was tied the body of a woman; there was a cloth over her head. As he passed along through the gay mourners of Good Friday nobody seemed surprised or interested in his burden. I should have liked to have asked about it, but there was no real satisfaction in talking to the Mexicans. The only instance in which I was perfectly understood was during my afternoon in the Zocola Plaza, when I got on good terms with a Mexican dog. He had heard nothing but Spanish all his life, yet he understood me perfectly, and showed the same fondness for having the small of his back stroked that his kind exhibit north of the Rio Grande. Also, he wagged his tail in English.

As has been indicated, the gentleman's drawing-room could seat but six, of which number Jebly was always one, hovering over the ice water. There were four other men who made this parlor their daily resort. I think there were only about seven men on our Pullman. The rest were mere women. One gentleman, a very pleasant magnate, was H. W. Whedon, of Chicago, who travels in behalf of a real estate company of which Diaz is president. It is his work to sell Mexican land to Americans, with the understanding that they will cultivate it. There is no duty on any up-to-date agricultural implement going into Mexico, because Diaz realizes that his country will never reach its highest possibility as long as they plow it with sticks. Diaz is eager to welcome all progressive Americans into his private republic. It would seem that he is broad-minded beyond the ultimate triumph of his own people, and rather than suffer his race to sink into barbarism and romance, he prefers to build up the country for the Americans to own. The Americans already own the mines and control the railroads, and it would seem that not long after the death of Diaz the whole country might be quietly rolled under the stars and stripes. Mr. Whedon has a tract of 800,000 acres and another of 400,000 which he is commissioned to sell at a few dollars per acre. The ground is very rich. It is in the tropics, where one crop pushes the preceding one out of the ground instead of waiting for the ripened grain to fall. Mr. Whedon at one time owned two million acres in Texas, but he cut it up into say five and ten mile tracts and sold it out. He says Mexico is now the only country where you can buy land at from three to five dollars an acre, stir it up with a plow and sell for fifteen; plant in grain and sell for twenty-five. I asked him about the Dakotas. "The Dakotas?" repeated Mr. Whedon, "why, I sold them out years ago." I had never expected to want to see again the traveling man of Gravette, who advised me not to cross the Gulf, but to sail in "deep water." But I would have liked to put old Knows-it-all against Mr. Whedon, to see which would come out ahead. Another thing that Mr. Whedon said impressed me profoundly. He said the only reason he traveled on a pass was that it saved him the trouble of stepping up to the ticket offices to buy tickets. The only thing that made Mr. Whedon seem at all human was an injured foot which had been mashed by a falling trunk years before, and which, as pious folk say, had forgiven, but could not forget. The magnate had to ride with his shoe off, and as he swathed the injured member with hot towels, always keeping good-natured though suffering extremely, he almost seemed a man.

Another magnate, whose card I have, was general agent of a colonization company. It is his work, not so much to sell large tracts to Americans, as to induce American families to settle in Mexico on smaller strips. He, too, is under the wing of Diaz. He thought favorably of taking one of Whedon's 400,000 acre-meadows off his hands, and of settling it with discontented Oklahoma and Kansas and Illinois farmers. Of course he, too, traveled on a pass. He was a jovial, loud-voiced, room-filling man, who, however, stood somewhat in awe of the magnate who had once sold out the Dakotas and owned Texas. There was an engineer, also riding on a pass, and a Mr. Carter who had lived six years in Monterey, disliking it more and more as he did so. He was going back to his old home at Columbus, Ohio, and he was simply bubbling over with glee. While at Monterey he had been visited several times by his wife; but every time her health suffered so severely she was obliged to return to the states. And now he was returning with her; no more Mexico for him! Yes, it is a pretty good place to make money, but it is that many years lost out of one's life. Money—that's all. And there are other things better than money; for instance, living with one's wife and children is better; and being hailed by one's name from street corners. And besides, some people can't live in the high altitudes; and as for Monterey, it's too low. Yes, there are a good many Americans there; but they don't pay much attention to one another. There's no social enjoyment. Each is so bent on getting money so he can move out, that he has no inclination for genial intercourse. Thus Mr. Carter in a low voice, whenever the magnates paused in their booming of Mexico. The colonizing magnate was a living example of a part of Mr. Carter's discourse, for he had not dared to go to bed the night before; I had wondered at finding his berth not made up; and all the morning his nose bled; it must have bled at least 300 miles.

The engineer was a very agreeable man, but he looked up to the colonizer, just as the colonizer looked up to Mr. Whedon. He bought cigars for the colonizer, and kept him supplied with as much beer as he would take; and when Jebly and I declined a bottle of beer, the engineer, looking upon us as aliens, went off with the colonizer to a corner and talked to him in a low voice, but the room was so small he couldn't go off to any corner where Jebly couldn't reach out his hand and touch him. When the engineer left the train, the colonizer bought cigars for Mr. Whedon, and would have supplied him with beer, but Mr. Whedon simply said with quiet greatness, "Get me some more cigars instead." On the other hand, I suspect that Mr. Whedon rather looked up to Mr. Carter, because that ex-Montereyan was so superior to all things Mexican, and so jubilant over returning to Ohio that he felt as if he owned not only the Dakotas and Texas, but even Arkansas.

Jebly and I were doubtful about the connection we were to make at Texarkana, and about which train we had best take for Gravette. So, when the engineer had come out of his distant corner and the two magnates were in a pleasant mood, we sought their advice. There was a railroad guide on board—a book as thick as a dictionary, set up in all sorts of columns, giving the time-tables of all the railroad lines on earth and a good many of the steamship lines. We found Texarkana and Gravette and Bentonville and Mena in ever so many different places, with "Lv" and "Ar" mixed up in the fine print, and the magnates and the engineer started a good-humored debate over the train we should take. The more we looked at the Guide the more bewildered we grew. At last, however, we agreed on the train that leaves Texarkana at 7 a. m. (which we found, on reaching Texarkana, was the train going south or some other irrelevant direction). In the meantime we admired the Mexican ladies washing their garments before their adobe houses. The magnates, who make this trip every two weeks, assured me that they were nearly always to be seen doing the washing. I do not know if they wash their garments every day; if so, it is not often enough. One handicap they suffer is sitting down in the dust and gravel as soon as the clean clothes are donned. But, however often they wash their clothes, I know they let themselves go for indefinite periods.

There is a buffet on the train, but the magnates got off at the stations to eat, preferring that, as they said, to embalmed food. We had late breakfast at San Luis Potosi, which is said rapidly and lightly until you reach the last syllable—that is hit hard; thus, San-Looie-po-to-see. About noon we passed the heavy stone column which marks the Tropic of Cancer, but I felt no difference in passing into the temperate zone. We had supper at Saltillo, and a splendid table is spread there, with "all you can eat for your money." We had stopped at a small station after dusk when an excursion train passed us, bearing Mexicans toward the capital for Easter celebration. The cars were jammed, and men and women clung to both ends. Nobody was sitting down within the coaches—there wasn't room. As they slowly passed us every man, woman and child shouted something at us in Spanish. It was as unlike an American yell as can well be imagined. It sounded like the sharp, quick explosion of thousands of packages of little firecrackers. Still later, as we stood taking water, I saw what I considered the last of the two pretty girls discovered in Mexico. There was a crowd at the side of the car. It was dark except for the moonlight sleeping on the mountain ridges. The young lady wanted to climb up on top of the passenger coach, and her young gentlemen friends were encouraging her in the attempt. She climbed up their backs and stood upon their heads, and gave a leap and clung to the car, laughing and saying things as fast as possible, while the spectators laughed even louder. When we pulled out from the place she was still leaping and laughing and looking pretty and picturesque—certainly a vivacious soul.

At 9 o'clock Mr. Carter, with a supreme independence that made nothing of land tracts and Mexican colonies, said that he was going to bed. The magnates, evidently impressed, said: "Yes, they might as well, as they would have to get up early in the morning at Laredo to be inspected by the custom house officials." That reminded Jebly of paying $17 duty on his tricycle the last time he had seen Laredo, and he went to bed, too, wondering if another tax experience awaited him in the morning.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

In the meantime, while this ice cream social for our orphan is being prolonged by the fashionable habits of the guests in coming late, you might like to hear a word from Charlie himself. First we will have a few remarks from Mrs. T. R. Ayars of St. Louis. I trust it is unnecessary for me to introduce either to this large and intelligent audience; but, just in order to have something to say (and those who introduce speakers nearly always have more than they know what to do with), I will add that Mrs. Ayars is the President of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church which has our orphans under its wing; and that St. Louis is a town in Missouri down on the river.

Mrs. Ayars, please speak loud; we do not share the popular impression that the public platform is a place where a lady is to be seen and not heard.

Mrs. Ayars says: "The ladies found it not advisable to move the orphan home this summer (Charlie was to have helped in the moving), so we are going to wait until the new building is finished, and then move. Charlie had an offer of a position in a printing office at $8 a week to begin with, and he was determined to try it. He said he didn't want to be on charity always, but wanted to earn some money and save it, and in late years have a home for himself and his sister. His ambitions were all right, and after discussing the question, the ladies decided to let him try this position. He is boarding with one of our dearest church members. We will make arrangements for him to go to work in the fall at some place where he can earn his bread and attend school. He wanted to work for himself this summer that he might care for his sister later, and we thought he might be learning something in the printing office. We cannot thank the Advance Society enough for their kindness in the boy, and trust he may in time repay all this care."

We will now hear from our orphan Charlie: "Why wasn't the orphan home moved as expected? Well, to begin with, the home which they intended to move to is not near large enough, so they have to build an addition to it. So we can't move until some time next year. They bought this place because there are several acres, pleasantly situated, for the children to play upon, while where they are now, they have very little ground to play upon. I am still copyholder at the printing office. After the type is set up, we read it to see if it is like the original copy. I have been working over a month. I am sorry to say I have not as much money laid up as might have been expected. This month I spent $16 for board, $3 for shoes, $3 for a hat, $1.30 for underwear and handkerchiefs, $1 for laundry bills, $3.10 for car fare. I buy at least 10 cents worth of lunch each day. Then my crutches, which I bought lately, cost $1.50 and the rubber tips 50 cents. I have a little laid away. I am willing to stop work at the printing office if you have the least objections. I doubt if it is doing me very much good. I think they will be willing to keep me at the home this winter so I can go to school, and of course I will help there all I can. My sister expects me to come down there this month, but I suppose it cannot be managed this summer. I received a letter from the superintendent of the orphan home in Indian Territory, where I was put when I was a little boy; he says he is going to give me $25 to help me buy an artificial limb."

I fancy very few boys of those known to the reader, if suddenly thrown upon the world, with only one leg, and bereft of parents, would conduct their affairs wisely and economically. But the world naturally expects an orphan to do better than a boy with a home of his own, and is more inclined to find fault with him; therefore an orphan must do much better and act more wisely than our own children are expected to do. As to the car fare, Charlie has to ride when we might walk. But I think a $3 hat is a tremendous luxury and as to spending that much for shoes, of course one does not do it unless in the orchard business. Charlie might say he earned all this money; but if a person spends more than he need spend, it is much better for him not to have the money to spend. Of course when I say "person" I mean the kind of people we go with; those who haven't bought their automobiles yet, but are just dreaming of them. And yet, it may be a good thing for Charlie to have had this experience; I don't know. Anyway, I'm glad he is to stop it and go back to school. And now we'll see how his social is going on, for I'd like to raise enough money to give him that business education he so much needs.

Here is Mrs. Bessie Ryman of Liberty, Mo., with a picture card representing a creek over which swings a footbridge. Mrs. Ryman inquires, "Does this look like a moreau?" She will have to ask the Clover Dale Farm.

Belle F. Romweber, Akron, O.: "Sorry we are late to the social, but perhaps the cream will improve with age. Please let me have four saucers. I am praying that God will bless Drusie, Charlie and the Av. S. Margaret, age 6, wishes to write.

And here is Margaret's letter, written by her own hand. Well, there's no use talking, I can't find that letter anywhere. I was so sure that it was in the same envelope with Belle's, that I just stuck my finger in after it with my eyes shut. I am very sorry, for I enjoyed that letter extremely when it came. I remember it enclosed 11 cents for Drusie and 5 for Charlie. If Margaret will write to me again, I will tie her letter to my desk, but up high enough to keep Felix from playing with it.

Bald Knob, Ark.: "Please find inclosed 10 cents for the social. I enjoy the Av. S. and the continued stories so much. Mother has taken THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST since its beginning."

H. Jasper Dewees, Wilcox, Sask, Canada: "I have finally arrived at Charlie's party. This is a Canadian dollar willie. I guess you can use him as he is fresh and fine, and I have no Yankee-doodle dollar. This is to get ice cream for my father and mother, J. L. Dewees and wife, Caldwell, Ark., Mrs. M. R. Gooding, Varnville, S. C., and myself; 20 cents is for you and Felix, each a small saucer; and Mrs. H. P. Jones sends 30 cents for herself, Mr. Jones and their four-year-old Alberta Montana Jones." (I hope he is as sweet and juicy as our Arkansas albertas.) "May Charlie live to a ripe age, and prove himself worthy of his friends' interests."

Mrs. W. E. Dunbell, Iowa City: "Willie and I intended being on time at Charlie's Ice Cream Social—but—I don't believe in making excuses. I had thought to have a social on our lawn under the evergreens with Japanese lanterns, etc., and send the proceeds to Charlie; but sickness prevented. So here we come for two saucers, and I hope all A. V. S. readers will bring their 15 cents and lots of kind wishes,—for good words do count. Willie is in the country with his mamma now, and his little sister, Clarissa, is with me. Our quarterly report will be ready soon. May God richly bless the A. V. S. for brightening lives all over the land."

Elizabeth Latham, South McAlester, General District of Indian Territory: "I send 25 cents for two dishes of Charlie's ice cream. I don't belong to the A. V. S., but want to help the orphan."

Ruby Lacy Taylor, Rushville, Ind.: "I have kept all the rules of the A. V. S. I have a book to keep my questions in. I am visiting in Indiana with my Grandma Jones at the old home place. I am having a fine time. My cousin and I read a chapter of the Bible every night."

Mrs. J. H. Byram, Pasadena, Cal.: "I send $1 for Charlie's social, and Drusie, our brave missionary. I am trying to interest my Sunday-school class in Charlie, and may have some later to send for ice cream, but thought 50 cents now would help a little."

Murray, Neb.: "I am afraid I am late to the social, but here is $1 with a prayer that the Lord will ever keep our orphan and missionary; 50 cents for each."

Mrs. J. A. Bland, Gower, Mo.: "The invitation to the ice cream social for Charlie came duly to hand. I suppose we are not too late. How nice to have one social event await one's own pleasure and convenience. I should think all society people would be glad to come on account of the novelty." (August 3 is a very elastic date.) "This money represents the H. F. Bland and the J. A. Bland families, and as there are ten of us, you may use the extra 50 cents for Drusie, if you wish." (Total, $2.) "We think the A. V. S. is doing a noble work and pray God's blessings upon its undertakings. I am going to send my brother in Mexico the last articles of 'Around the Gulf to Mexico'; I'm sure he will enjoy them. Please remember me to Felix."

E. E. Harriman, Mooresville, Mo.: "Couple dishes that ice cream, please; I never like to eat alone."

I am glad to announce that the late guests are coming in a good crowd; some are now standing at the door; already we have taken in $40.20; and now don't you want to help make that an even $50?

A gentleman had an occasion to ship a mule by train, sending it to the station in charge of a darky. When the freight was put on, he looked through the bars, and saw the donkey eating the tag on which its destination was written. He at once ran home and said:

"Massa! massa! dat mule's gone and eat up de place where he's gwine to!"—Spare Moments.

Women trade unionists at a meeting in Chicago a few days ago proposed establishing a fund to promote weddings. One of the speakers said: "Marriage should be looked upon as a dignified profession, and as unionists we should encourage it. In England the sensible union women are not so foolishly sentimental as to pooh pooh the endowment idea, and it is now being practiced in a satisfactory manner. The same may be said of Germany, where it is customary to pay the young woman who leaves the union to become a wife the dues which she has paid into the organization." A fund of this kind would no doubt help some men and women to begin their married life earlier; but what they need more than this fund is teaching which will keep them from wasting their money before and after marriage. It is not the money spent for useful and necessary things that makes people poor, but what is squandered on the unnecessary and harmful. A fund would help temporarily, but right teaching and practice would afford permanent relief.

Hearing with the Muscles.

Maurice Dupont, a French scientist, reports an interesting experiment to enable deaf persons to hear by means of their muscles. A series of vibrations, corresponding to musical tones, was produced by alternating currents of electricity passed through the body. It is said that the effect of hearing is produced, the currents acting on the auditory nerves. However, the method is scarcely practical for enabling the deaf to hear under ordinary circumstances.

Silent Radiance.

There are individuals whose very presence is a silent radiance from above and a benediction. There is something about them that inspires fresh courage and new hope to many a disheartened soul. The atmosphere they bring is that of faith and spiritual uplift. To be one of these faith inspirers is the greatest blessing of life. "It is not merely what he said to a man about eternal verities that convinced them. It was something in himself, an atmosphere surrounding him, and a silent radiance shining from him, that made it easier for them to believe in their own spiritual nature and in the divine existence and presence."

An Autumn Prayer

GRANT that these autumn days may be our harvest season; that our lives may reap the fruitage of a well-spent year. Let us be happy with the joy of the flaming hillsides, with the glory of the Indian Summer, with the ecstacy of the ripening grain; happy in the harvest of our high hopes, in the garner of sweet memories, in the ripening of true friendships, in the reaping of bounteous blessings of the buoyant spring and brimming summer; happy in the knowledge of some little kindness done, some great good gained; happy in our new strength, our surer hope, our wider lives and loftier vision. Let these be our jubilant days, the days of our rejoicing.

—N. J. Nicholson, of Linneus, is in a meeting at Breckenridge, Mo. A preliminary was ordering a baptismal suit. That is an evidence of a sanguineness that assures success.

—There will be some radical changes in our Bible school literature for the new quarter. We are receiving many compliments on improvements already made, and these are only earnests of others to come.

—We hope to have a special train into Norfolk over the picturesque Big Four and C. & O. Roads. We will if 100 of our friends will, within the next few days, write us it is their intention to go with us.

—Do not postpone another day ordering your supplies for the fourth quarter of the Bible school year. Our mail facilities are excellent, but we can not insure that Uncle Sam will give a bundle of papers as prompt delivery as a letter on which appears the picture of his crony, George Washington.

—In two and a half hours, George H. Ellis, minister to the Core, W. Va., congregation, secured twelve subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He will bring this up to at least twenty-five in short order. Brother Ellis highly appreciates this paper's freedom from litigiousness and its devotion to the real interests of the Kingdom.

—Any paper with prospects for long-continued usefulness depends chiefly on that steady stream of subscription orders containing one and two new names. In that way most of ours come. We are pleased, however, to report the following new clubs received last week:

Amarillo, Texas, Howard Jewell, pastor..... 3
California, Mo., B. F. Hill, pastor..... 5
Marion, O. 5
Akron, O., George Darsie, pastor..... 5
Core, W. Va., George H. Ellis, pastor.....12
Jefferson City, Mo., E. B. Widger, pastor.....13
Sedalia, Mo., W. F. Hamann, pastor.....16
Sedalia, Mo., J. M. Rudy, pastor.....54

—In the recent September meeting of the board of directors of this Company it was learned that during the previous month we had transacted the largest amount of business of any August in the history of this House. There had been a net gain of 55 in the number of Bible schools we are serving, while our literature had increased in circulation nearly 10,000. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and "Our Young Folks" have a much larger circulation than ever before, and our merchandise department is doing a greatly increased business. On account of the increased cost of paper, labor and other items of expense we are not being as well paid for our labor as formerly, but we are all rejoicing in our enlarged opportunities for service.

—We hope the following letter from one of our representatives will indicate a duty and a privilege to thousands of our preachers. Few of them, indeed, can serve themselves and the Cause better than by helping to introduce THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into the homes of the people:

"Sedalia, Mo., September 3, 1907.—Arrived here 2 o'clock this morning. Brother Rudy helped me this afternoon. We called at ten homes and took a subscription at each. You may talk about agents going after subscriptions with hammer and tongs—he has the heaviest pair of tongs obtainable and then uses a triphammer. You spoke yesterday of his sublime enthusiasm, he uses it the same way as he does in his pulpit pleadings. The benefit, however, is not all one-sided. He is visiting members whom he has not seen at their homes for a long time and so is finding out a great many facts about them and theirs that he did not know or had forgotten. He is greatly beloved by his membership and is a remarkably useful man.

"Geo. H. Morrison."

We will send a capable representative into all our larger churches where the minister will accompany him in his calls on the membership. J. M. Rudy is one of our most eloquent preachers, but such ministries as above contribute to his splendid successes.

—New Commentary on Acts. J. W. McGarvey. $1.00. President McGarvey is one of our ablest commentators, and in this role never appears to better advantage than in Acts. We would like to know that this book was in every Disciple library.

—Paths to the City of God. By Frank W. Gunsaulus. $1.25. Dr. Gunsaulus is pastor of one of our largest American churches. He is president of Armour Institute. He has many rare gifts and among them is an eloquence manifest in his writings as in his speech. Here are fifteen inspiring sermons by one of the great masters of sacred oratory.

—The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. Edited by J. H. Garrison. $2.00. This is an interesting historical resume of our great Restoration movement. Some of the ablest writers among us contribute to "The Introductory Periods:" "Period of Organization;" "The Turbulent Period;" "The Transition Period." The Editor's "Lessons from Our Past" is worth many times the cost of the book.

—The Practice of Prayer. By G. Campbell Morgan. 75 cents. The great evangelist confesses the aim of the book is purely practical. He contends that "Teach us to pray" relates to the cultivation of the habit rather than the manner of prayer. The work is a serious effort to make more universal the "morning watch," the "still hour" and the family prayer circle. It is a very pertinent message. It ought to be communicated to all our people.

—The Development of the Sunday-school—1780-1905. This is the official report of the Eleventh International Sunday-school Convention, held in Toronto. This book sold for $1.50. We overstocked and will sell the next one dozen copies at 75 cents each. It has 716 pages and contains some remarkable addresses in addition to a great deal of valuable statistics and historical data.

—A Typical Mission in China. By W. E. Soothill. $1.50. This is an exceptional book. Secretary Corey says this is the very best book on the actual work of the mission stations. It tells of evangelization, types of converts, native sermons, medical work, temples, and the various religions and their founders, including Christianity. The introduction alone is worth the price of the book.

—The Pedagogical Bible School. By Samuel B. Haslet. Introduction by G. Stanley Hall. $1.25. This book presents concisely a description of the mental characteristics and needs of the pupils at each stage of development. It indicates, too, the pedagogical order of the Bible books, suggesting sections adapted to the various grades of the Sunday-school scholars. It is not only adapted to all Bible school workers, but also for parents, teachers and all engaged in religious and mental training.

Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all; and also because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100 not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.

The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the Doxology and The Lord Is In His Temple.

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH

By J. S. Cheavens

In pillar'd aisles of vast cathedrals old,
Ablaze with splendor, garish gilt and gold,
Where clouds of incense ever seemed to dwell,
And rhythmic waves of music rose and fell—
I've heard the priest, in pomp of vain attire,
Prate ancient prayers that did no soul inspire,
Nor reach God's ear. Religion's whited tomb,
Appalling in its cold sepulchral gloom!

How far removed by all vain rules of art,
Yet deep enshrined within my loyal heart,
Is that plain building, simple, unadorned,
Loved by a few, although by many scorned—
Unknown to those who seek wealth, power or place,
But very dear to those who seek His face—
The Country Church! O holy, holy ground,
For there the Lord Himself is sought and found!

Its aged walls have vic'try often won
From winter's storms and summer's burning sun,
And overhead the honest shingle roof
To driving rain is still found waterproof;
Through unstained windows sunlight softly falls
Against the dead white of the plastered walls—
The house, 'tis clear, was never built for show,
But why they built it, those who built it know.

Most worthful men those builders, staid and strong,
Whose life is worship, and whose prayer and song
Are vibrant with a consecrated zeal,
They seek to do what God wills to reveal
Of his deep plans. Cast in heroic mold
These farmer folk, they toil through heat and cold,
And think their toil is more than worth the while
If through the clouds they see their dear Lord smile.

The pastor of this noble little flock
Stands firmly planted on the Written Rock,
The Holy Word of God, nor seeks to trim
Its solemn truths to satisfy man's whim—
No cruel critic, schooled in cunning craft,
He knows his God, and deeply has he quaffed
At that perennial fount of waters sweet,
The spring of grace, the glorious Mercy Seat!

With all his heart and soul he tries to win
The wayworn wanderer from the paths of sin;
He knows the way that leads to life and peace,
He knows the place where Jesus grants release
To weary ones whose hearts are faint and ill—
He points them to a cross that crowns a hill—
The selfsame place upon the selfsame road
Where Bunyan's Pilgrim lost his heavy load!

How sweet the mem'ries that I now recall,
Their mystic chains still hold my heart in thrall!
'Twas there I told the story of my joy,
How Christ had saved the wayward, headstrong boy;
'Twas there I felt upon my youthful head
The hands of holy men—and tears were shed—
I went forth from those doors to publish wide
The old, old story of the Crucified.

And thou, dear Salem, blessed name of peace,
Its tide flow deeper as thy years increase!
Thy sons salute thee from far distant lands,
In dreams we yearn for one more clasp of hands—
Across the valley made by passing years
We see thy walls but dimly through our tears,
In all thy joys and sorrows we, too, share,
Remember us, we pray thee, in thy prayer!

Bonnie Brier Bush Blooms

By Edgar D. Jones

"Ian Maclaren" is dead. He died far away from the land of his birth, but not from home. English-speaking people everywhere claimed him and America loved him much. In the life of this genial minister there are many incidents well worthy of mention. Of the many two occur to me as deserving of special notice.

First, Dr. Watson was well into the forties before he had any literary reputation at all. Then came his "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush" and somewhat after the manner of Byron the good doctor awoke to find himself famous. This fact is significant. All through the years of silence Dr. Watson was busy. He was preparing, he was reading, he was writing, but not for publication. Best of all he was thinking. He made his reputation as a preacher before he made good as an author.

Second, Dr. Watson's ministerial labors were confined largely to the big city church. Glasgow and Liverpool were the scenes of his greatest pulpit success. But it was his obscure country charge that made the lasting impression on him and to which he gave immortality in his best-known work. This is also significant. The large city congregation has its fascinations. There is something mildly hypnotic in the very multiplicity of its duties; the complexities of its services, the transient character of its congregations, so that a spell is cast over the pastor even though he is frequently overworked and half the time "hustled out of spirituality." But the halo hovers about the country and village church. There everybody knows everybody else. Few charges are made of coldness and unfriendliness on the part of the people. There the minister usually comes close to his flock and gets an understanding of human nature that is of much use to him later in his career. To be sure the country and village church has its problems. Like every other field it is "peculiar." Usually such churches like their city sisters have a generous sprinkling of "sour saints and sweet sinners." But the ministerial fledgeling who goes direct to the city without the experience of a country or village pastorate has missed something rich, tender and inspirational —something he can get nowhere else.

Alcohol and Heredity.

Modern science recognizes that the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation. The constitution of the United States declares that "no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood," but in the constitution of man it is ordained that drunkenness shall work corruption of blood. An eminent French physician, quoted in the "Literary Digest," points out the fact that there is an important class of diseases which attack only persons who are predisposed to them by reason of some physical degeneration, and that the inherited effects of alcoholism form one of the most potent causes of such predisposition to disease. Dr. Joffroy—who, it must be remembered, speaks not as a temperance lecturer but as a scientist—concludes: "I repeat again that, in the creation of these new morbid aptitudes, this hereditary predisposition which dominates almost all pathology, alcoholism stands pre-eminent, doing more harm and counting more victims than tuberculosis. Alcoholism, in fact, not only affects the individual, but its effects are continued to his descendants. One can not be, with impunity, the son of an alcoholic. Alcoholism begins with the father and strikes down his children; and generally its action continues until, in the fourth and fifth generation, it has destroyed the family. But before the final result is reached, the alcoholics and their descendants are, according to circumstances, hurled into disease, madness or crime, filling our hospitals, asylums and jails."

Freight Schedules.

The writer has had two recent experiences with freight rates. In one of these the freight bill was based on a rate of 59 cents per hundred. A protest at the obvious exorbitance of this charge produced a reduction of the rate to 32 cents. The saving amounted to $54. The other case was exactly similar, except that the reduction amounted to $75. Thus is illustrated the familiar saying that, sometimes at least, "it pays to kick." These were not rebates. They were overcharges, entirely unintentional we presume. But the point is that it seemed to be a matter of great difficulty and some uncertainty for even the freight agent to find out from the published schedules just what the rate should be between two important points, on a perfectly common and familiar class of goods. The law requires that schedules be published, but what good does a published schedule do to the occasional and inexpert shipper when the railroad men themselves can not tell what it means?

Education of the Blind.

A convention was held in Boston last week to consider the problems connected with the education of the blind. It was agreed that one of the most important steps in this movement is to convince people who can see that those who can not see are not necessarily permanently helpless. Every one, whether blind or not, is helpless so long as he is untrained, and efficient in proportion as he is trained. The blind, like the seeing, simply need training, only, of course, they need a different sort. Industrial education for the blind has long been recognized as practicable and important. More recently the value of higher academic training has come to be admitted. An interesting experiment is being tried in New York where, under the provisions of the Brough bill, which recently became a law, every blind person who becomes a student in a college, university, technical school or professional school, is to receive $300 annually from the state, this amount to be used to employ a reader. It is believed that this plan of opening to the blind the resources of existing institutions and libraries by hiring eyes for them, is better than the long-discussed university for the blind would be.

Investigation of Tuskegee.

A special examiner, appointed by authority of the Alabama legislature, has made a careful investigation of the finances and business administration of Booker T. Washington's school at Tuskegee. The state of Alabama, as a generous supporter of the school by appropriations, wanted to know the condition of this institution which is managed almost wholly by negroes. The investigator takes occasion to praise the educational work of the school, but what is more important for the present purpose, he says: "The business organization of the Tuskegee Normal and Training Institute, looking at its purely business side, is a model of perfection." In the twenty-seven years of its history, it has grown from a little school with ten acres of ground and an appropriation of $2,000, to an institution with 1,500 students and 150 teachers, owning 2,000 acres of land which, with the buildings, is worth $700,000, and having an endowment of $1,400,000. To keep the business affairs of such an institution in perfect condition requires no small degree of administrative ability.

The Wonders of Coal-Tar.

Among the true fairy-tales of science, none is more marvelous than the story of coal-tar and its marvelous transformations. The production of a whole spectrum of aniline dyes out of black coal-tar would seem enough of a miracle. But it is not all. From the versatile coal-tar come also delicate fruit-flavors and odors. A writer on pure food in the "World's Work," after recounting some of these surprising achievements, sums up as follows: "Coal-tar, the black refuse of the retort that lights our homes, is the parent stock of these sweetest, lightest, fairy perfumes of the synthetic garden. Coal-tar, that crackles in the cannel-coal, can destroy the infesting germs and slay as readily as it can save our lives; it can paint the lily and the rose in a thousand shades of dye; it can redden the faded ketchup, green the sallowed pea, sweeten the acrid coffee, saffronize the pale oleomargarine, rainbow the peppermint stick, emeraldize the white creme de menthe. Coal-tar that chokes us with its asphaltum stew-pots and smooths the path for the flying automobile, helps to vulcanize its tires, to paint its body, to light its lamps, and to run its engines." The same writer assures us that, since all food is essentially a chemical compound, the garden does not necessarily have an advantage over the laboratory. A "synthetic strawberry essence" made from coal-tar and deriving therefrom its color, taste and odor, may not necessarily be less desirable than that which comes from the berry, for the berry itself is only a sort of chemical compound. This may be true, but for our part we prefer nature's synthetic chemistry, especially when strawberries are the product of her laboratory.

The President's Courage.

Faults Mr. Roosevelt may have, but a statement that one of his is the lack of courage, makes us smile. But John Brisben Walker, magazine editor, says the President is lacking in courage. It is now in order to have a new definition of that word. There is no courage required to hunt grizzlies in these days, despite the fact that a well-known Philadelphia physician had his arm crushed last week by one. Spanish bullets never did find a mark, surely. And men like Harriman and Rockefeller are, of course, mere puppets, without any power or influence. At least one would suppose so, seeing that Mr. Roosevelt, a "coward," has dared to get after them. It looks to us as if Tupper's words—"the iron will of one stout heart shall make a thousand quail"—fit the occasion better than Mr. Walker's judgment.

Some First Principles.

V. Means of Growth.

We have already found that life is the first and essential condition of growth. Assuming now that this new life has been begotten by the Holy Spirit, through faith in Christ, and that the duty and privilege of growing up into him who is our living Head, even Christ, have become apparent to the renewed soul, it remains to study some of the means of such growth. Before passing on to that phase of the subject, however, we cannot refrain from saying that the condition of self-satisfaction with the very mediocre, or low stage of Christian development, so prevalent among professed Christians, is one of the saddest and gravest facts with which Christian teachers and leaders have to deal. In other spheres of life men strive to excel, and nothing short of the highest excellence attainable satisfies their ambition. In Christian living, however, how many are satisfied even with the "name to live," while others, who undoubtedly have "passed from death unto life," are satisfied with very meager attainments in the elements of Christian character. If in anything man should strive after the highest, it is in character-building, for, after all, the character we form here is the only thing we can take with us when we go hence. Nothing could give us more satisfaction than to create in our readers an earnest desire to be and to do all that our Lord and Master expects them to be and do; in other words, the desire to fulfill the purpose of Christ in their redemption.

The first and most important means of spiritual growth is that same element of power by which we become children of God, namely, faith. We are too apt to think of faith as having to do chiefly, if not wholly, with our conversion, but faith is an abiding quality in the Christian life. It creates the only atmosphere in which a Christian can live and grow and bear fruit to the glory of God. Its supreme excellence lies in the fact that it is the power of discerning spiritual values; the power of weighing, sifting, discriminating and wisely choosing. The new-born soul at every stage of its development needs to be fed on heavenly food and to be led into spiritual activities. Faith is the power which appropriates such food and inspires to such activities. "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are unseen are eternal." Faith sees the invisible and, therefore, the eternal. It is only the permanent and enduring things of life that build up a permanent and enduring character. Men without faith are the victims of their appetites and passions, and are led by low ambitions to devote their lives and energies to transient and unworthy objects. They do not apprehend the spiritual and the eternal. Think of the infinite difference in the outlook of the soul to whom faith has opened up the spiritual world with all its mighty forces and enduring realities, and the soul that is imprisoned in the narrow world of the senses, with power only to apprehend the material and the sensual. The measure of our faith, other things being equal, is the measure of our Christian attainments and achievements. There is no better way of increasing our faith than by a loyal obedience to the duties and obligations which the faith we have perceives.

There is a significant rendering of a familiar passage in the letter to the Hebrews, concerning faith, which has an important bearing on this phase of our subject: "Now faith is assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen." (Heb. 11:1). We should do no violence to the meaning of this passage to render it, "Now faith is the giving substance to things hoped for, and the testing of things not seen." The following verse, however, contains the new rendering to which we call attention: "For therein [that is, in faith] the elders had witness borne to them." This rendering, which occurs four times in this celebrated chapter on faith, takes the place of the old rendering, "obtained a good report." The elders had witness borne to them. Abel "had witness borne to him that he was righteous." Enoch "had witness borne to him." All these three heroes of faith mentioned in the chapter "had witness borne to them through their faith." What is the truth taught by this rendering? Is it not this: that these believers in God put to the test God's promises by their obedience, and in such obedience they had borne to them witness from God of the truth of his promises? Here is reciprocity between the believing soul and the faithful God. The soul trusts and obeys; God fulfils his promise and bears witness to the soul of the truth and reality of the things believed and hoped for. We are not required to wait until some future world to know the truth of the promises made to us in Christ. In our very obedience to him there comes to us a witness from God—an answering response to the soul's quest—which satisfies its deepest longings, so that "we have the witness within us" that God is true, and that Jesus Christ is his Son and our Saviour.

Do we not have here both the cause and the remedy of the weak faith which troubles so many Christians? They are not putting God's promises to the test by actually doing the things on which these promises are based, and consequently they have no witness borne to them of the reality of the things hoped for. It is right and proper that we pray, with the man in the New Testament who had an afflicted son whom he desired Jesus to heal: "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." The Lord did help his unbelief, because the man was putting to the test Christ's power to heal, and the Lord will help our unbelief just in proportion as we trust him by being obedient to his teaching and following the light of what faith we have. It is a mistaken idea, popularly held, that faith is going it blindly, a leap into the dark. On the contrary, as we learn from the passages referred to, faith is conforming to the scientific principle of testing Christianity by actual experimentation. "Come and taste, and see that the Lord is good," is the invitation and the challenge which God makes to us. Is Christ divine? Put him to the test; commit your soul to his keeping, and see if he can keep you. Is Christianity better than infidelity? Try it, and see. "Can anything good come out of Nazareth? Come and see." Does love for our fellowmen and unselfish service for others bring the soul more real happiness and satisfaction than living for self, and envying and hating our fellowmen? Try it and see. In so doing, like the heroes of faith mentioned in Hebrews, you will have witness borne to you that God is true; that Christ can save from sin; that love is better than hatred; that Christianity is the highest ideal of life of which the human mind can conceive.

It is only under the power of the world to come that a Christian can attain this moral development and realize the divine ideal. It is only by faith that we apprehend the spiritual world which is the "world to come," and be brought under its uplifting and transforming power. Otherworldliness, as this apperception of the spiritual world has been called, rightly understood, does not unfit one for the proper use of the present world; but, on the contrary, it is only in the light of the world to come that we can understand the meaning of this present world, and get out of it the greatest good. This is why the apostle says "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come." All worlds belong to God. That which fits us best for the world to come puts us in a condition to enjoy most the world that now is. Faith does not despise the material, but it knows how to subordinate it to the spiritual and the eternal. We are saved by faith. We are justified by faith. We are transformed into the image of Christ by faith. We win our victories over self and sin by faith. We come to an understanding of life's true meaning and goal, by faith. We enter into a new and larger world, and come under the spell and power of glorious and eternal realities, by faith. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

An Old-Time Friend.

She is a mother in Israel. She has borne many children. She hails from the country, and her manner and apparel are somewhat plainer than those of her urban sisters. In recent times, however, she has taken on more of the modern ways than was her custom aforetime. She remains still, however, the old-fashioned mother which we all love so well. Her place has been a most influential one in the past. She has been simple and unsophisticated enough to believe in the Bible as the Book of God, and out of her loins have come many preachers of power and influence in the life of the Church. She has been useful in the past, and we can not well dispense with her in the present. Her children, many of whom live in the cities, must see to it that she has care and support, not alone for the good she has done in the past but for the good she is doing at present and will do in the future.

We refer to the country church. She is our old-time friend. Her face may be a little wrinkled with age and her hands hard and calloused in long service, but on her face and in her eyes is seen the light that never shone on sea or land. Her name may be "Antioch," or "Salem," or "Mount Zion," or "Pleasant Hill," or "Cane Ridge," but no matter what her name, the very mention of it calls up sacred memories out of the distant past. We are again in the midst of one of her great congregations gathered in from the region round about. There are aged sires and dames, stalwart young men, fair maidens and little children. They have come in on foot, on horseback, in wagons, and a few, perhaps, in carriages. We hear again the old-time melodies floating out on the summer air, as the people sing "Coronation," "Martyn," "Antioch," "Refuge," and such hymns as "Safely Through Another Week," "How Firm a Foundation," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Since I Can Read My Title Clear," "Am I a Soldier of the Cross," etc.

Our hearts are lifted heavenward by the simple prayer and we hear again the old-fashioned sermon, which was plain, didactic, and always closed with an exhortation. We see the young and old coming forward to confess Christ, and a little later they are gathering yonder by the stream for the solemn baptismal service. We recall the ample dinner in the grove, the social hour when neighbors met and greeted each other, and the afternoon service, with a repetition of the scenes we have mentioned.

Such was the old-time country church, the very memory of which is sacred to many of us. It is by no means yet extinct, though many of its kind have gone out of existence through removals, change of population, death and the encroachments of the city. But we still need the country church. Conditions have vastly changed within the last half century, and, no doubt, there must be modifications in the manner of conducting these country churches. The problem of the country church is a very important one and requires the best statesmanship in the church. In some way, through the grouping of churches and their co-operation in sustaining a proper ministry, these churches must be cared for and become the nursing mothers still of men and women who are to fill important positions both in church and state.

Long live the country church, and may many thousands more in the future, as at the present, both in time and eternity, rise up and call her blessed!

Notes and Comments.

One of our prominent state secretaries writes us that the taking up by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the country church problem will be of far more value than the discussion about Mr. Rockefeller's money. This secretary believes that the salvation of the country church, and all other weak churches, rests almost entirely with the state societies. While we would not go so far as to say that—for we believe selfishness of many of the well-to-do country people is a strong reason for many weak country churches—we are in cordial sympathy with the work of the state boards, and we have given far more attention and space to this work than all our newspapers combined. Yet some of our state secretaries do not seem to appreciate this fact.

There is urgent need, on the part of many who write for our papers, of a new sense of responsibility for their utterances. The reckless manner in which some writers go into the public prints, regardless of the reputation of their brethren, or of honored institutions and organizations, is enough to cause alarm. Of course, publishers of papers, as well as the writers of these reckless statements, share in this responsibility. We have no press censorship among us, except the readers themselves, but it is in their power to put a stop to that sort of writing, or at least to its publication. We owe it to our good name and standing in the religious world, and we owe it to our colleges, our missionary organizations and to individual brethren of blameless lives and Christian character, that we hold our writers and publishers to a stricter account for their printed statements. The evil has been tolerated until it is becoming intolerable; and it is time the outraged sentiment of the brotherhood should find expression in some practicable way to remedy it.

Just on the eve of his departure from Pentwater last week, Dr. Moore suggested that we write an editorial on "Stringing the Bow." The meaning is very obvious, and the topic is timely. The bow that is not unstrung occasionally loses its spring and twang. The same thing is true of the human mind. If held at too great a tension for too long a period, it suffers loss of energy and vitality. By common consent the summer season has been chosen by most people as the period of suspension of hard and exacting duties. Now that the vacation season is ending, it is time for "stringing the bow," or girding up the loins of the mind for its best efforts. It is not too much to expect that every one who has enjoyed the benefit of a vacation in which he has unstrung his mental bow, shall now give evidence in the quality and quantity of his work of renewed vitality and power.

In every department of human labor and activity there is need for renewed zeal and the very best efforts of mind and heart. In matters religious, there was never a greater need on the part of Christians to make full proof of their high calling by the sincerity and wisdom of their efforts to advance the kingdom of God, which means the happiness and welfare of mankind. It is not enough that we be sincere and honest, but our efforts should be directed by enlightened judgment and by the wisdom which cometh down from above, if we would commend the Christian religion to the world. Christianity does not dispense with common sense, but sanctifies it to the highest uses. Neither does it discredit intellectual attainments, but consecrates them to the carrying out of the purposes of God. It is as much a man's duty to keep his mind in good working order, that it may do its clearest and best thinking, as it is to keep his heart pure. God has use for both of them in carrying forward his great enterprise of subduing the nations in submission to his beneficent reign.

As Disciples of Christ carrying forward a religious movement which we claim to be both rational and evangelical, and which commends itself to the intellect as well as to the heart and conscience, we have problems confronting us that challenge our best efforts for their solution. Confusion of thought leads to divided efforts and wasted energies. Every leader among us has reason just now to pray that he may be purged of all motives and aims and ambitions that would bias the judgment and cloud the mind, and prevent him from seeing what is God's will concerning us. Every one of us, too, should be prepared to sacrifice any personal opinion or preference on the altar of unity of faith and of effort for the advancement of the cause we love. Our national convention, soon to assemble, will call for the consecrated wisdom of all our leaders, to the end that our action may commend itself to the world for its catholicity and loyalty to New Testament ideals. Let us, therefore, "string the bow" and see to it that every arrow that speeds from it shall be aimed at the enemies of God and of men, and shall serve to hasten the triumph of truth over error and of right over wrong.

Pentwater Musings.

Nature is continually springing her surprises upon us here by the lakeside. She has here an assortment of elements and conditions which she can throw into different combinations so as to create new and startling results. Last evening the sun went out of his western gateway formed of ominous clouds which portended rain on the morrow. Old king of day often makes his bow for the night in a tabernacle of clouds which he glorifies with his parting beams. This morning the sun rose clear and bright above the eastern hilltop in the rear of "The Pioneer," and shot his rays through the trees and out upon the lake, at the same time that a cloud was advancing nearly all around that part of the horizon where the lake and sky meet. Pretty soon there burst upon our vision a scene of splendor which one is seldom permitted to see. A brilliant rainbow arched the western heavens, each end of it seeming to set the lake on fire with its glowing colors. In a little while, as the rain advanced, the rainbow was formed across the bosom of the lake from each end of the arch, in brilliant paths to the lake shore. Meanwhile, all the lake became dark green, save the white crests of the waves, which could be seen through and beyond the rainbow far out to the limit of the horizon. The scene was indescribably grand, and baffles all power of description. There it lingered for several minutes before our eyes, as if to impress us with the unlimited possibilities of the divine Artist in painting scenes of beauty and grandeur, with his combination of sunlight and cloud and lake and falling rain. If He who painted the scene for us on the lake and in the western sky can make the earth, the transient home of man, so beautiful, what will He not do to make glorious that other home which is to be the eternal abiding-place of man?

The past week has witnessed a thinning out of our population here by the lakeside. The beginning of the school term, the cooler autumn days, and the quickening pulse of business life in the cities all contribute to the exodus from our beautiful northern park, whose summer charms have held its population under their spell during the heated term. But nothing could exceed the charming weather we have enjoyed here during the past week. The air has had a new tonic in it, and the blazing pine-knots in the fireplace give an added charm to the longer evenings and the cooler mornings. The Easy Chair confesses that no days spent here on the lakeshore seem more delightful than these quiet, restful days following the departure of most of our transient population. One may meander through these quiet woodland ways without fear of disturbance by the intrusion of others, listening to the very stillness of the woods and noting how Autumn is already touching, with her magic brush, the leaves of the maple and imparting to them her brilliant hues. From the heights of Garrison Park one sees now only here and there a rowboat skimming the surface of the little lake nestling so quietly in its land-locked security. Out upon the larger lake one may nearly always see the smoke of a passing steamer along that great highway of travel. One has time and opportunity during these days not only for his routine tasks, but for quiet meditation and for trying to "think God's thoughts after Him," and to look at this old world, with its sins and its sorrows, its joys and its hopes, as God sees it, that he may work with Him in trying to make it a better world. Oh, to be purged of all selfish aims and ambitions, and to be willing to be used of God in any way He chooses, and to suffer reproach for Christ's sake, if we may only advance His Kingdom—that is a spiritual altitude to which every true soul aspires to attain. Amid such scenes, when God seems so near and to be seeking entrance to our souls, how utterly worthless seem the trifles of wealth and worldly fame and honor with all the fashions and follies for which the world is striving! In this clear moral atmosphere, where the map of human motives and ambitions, with their relative values, becomes clear to one's vision, it is seen that the only thing worth living for in this world is to be the faithful servant of God's will and seek to co-operate with Him in advancing His Kingdom over all the earth.

The rainbow has faded from the sky and from the lake, but we know that the sun, which has now hidden his face behind the clouds, still shines on. Clouds are evanescent things, as is also the rainbow, but the sky still arches the world and the sun makes his daily circuit. It is a great thing to be able to discern between the permanent and transient things in life. What fatal mistakes are made here! When children, we used to make soap-bubbles, and blowing them from our hands see them float away on the air with their iridescent colors, and burst into nothingness. Like those bubbles are many of the objects which men and women are pursuing with all their energies, as if they were things to endure forever. When the great Apostle looked out over the world and saw that men were chasing these transient things, he exclaimed: "Now abideth faith, hope and love." Other things may come and go; empires may rise and fall; earthly joys and pleasures are fleeting things; riches take wings and fly away; but faith, which apprehends the spiritual and eternal; hope, whose rainbow hues arch the throne of God; love, whose transfiguring power turns sorrow into joy, sacrifices into pleasure, duty into delight and earth into heaven—these abide forever. Let others, then, who will, strive for the fleeting and the transient, but let us, who believe, seek the enduring riches which come through the abiding principles of faith and hope and love. He who sees the invisible and enduring world, whose future is spanned and his present cheered by hope, and who loves God and his fellowmen, he alone is possessed of enduring riches.

The farewell beach service was held at the usual twilight hour down on the sands on last Lord's day evening. Some of the resorters had already taken their departure, but there was a good representation of our Park population, with a number of visitors from the village. The theme suggested by the leader was, "Impressions Received During Our Vacation at Pentwater." If these hills and lakes had possessed consciousness, they would have blushed at all the nice and beautiful things that were said about them. Dr. Moore, whose travels have been quite extensive, declared he had not found so ideal a resting-place in either the old world or the new as our beautiful shore here by Michigan's unsalted sea. Others confessed themselves equally in love with the place. But it was not simply the impression of physical beauty and comfort which was spoken of, but the healthy and helpful associations here found, and the opportunities here enjoyed for improving both the mental and the spiritual nature. When several had spoken and many of the old, familiar hymns had been sung, the little group of worshipers stood and sang, for the last time during the present season, our parting hymn, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." Judging from the number who have already secured lots and intend erecting cottages the coming season, it will soon be necessary to prepare some temporary auditorium in the woods, near the beach, for an afternoon service. All signs point to the coming of a much larger number of our friends here during the coming summer than have hitherto visited this place. A number of improvements will be made by the opening of the season, or early in the summer, which will add to the attractiveness of the Park. Already we have in mind the formation of a reading circle, the members of which shall meet say once a week to talk over the books they may have read, exchange books, perhaps, and exchange ideas concerning them. We hope to make this a place where the mental and moral atmosphere shall be as helpful and inspiring as the pure breezes which sweep over the lake and through these pines.

The departure of the Moores, the early part of the week, has left a large vacancy in the social life of our Park, and being our closest neighbors they are missed the more. The sound of the saw and the hammer on the Snively cottage, on the opposite side of us, keeps away any feeling of loneliness. We had a visit, one day last week, from Professors Willett and Gates, of the Disciples' Divinity House of the University of Chicago, and their wives, who are here looking after the interests of "Campbell Park," as they call it, lying about as far north of the pier as we are south of it. Several of those interested in that summer colony from Chicago expect to erect cottages there the coming year, so it is safe to predict unwonted activity both north and south of the channel during the coming season. As the Methodists have taken possession of the shore north of Ludington, at Epworth Heights, and have made it a headquarters for Methodism, so Pentwater bids fair to become the center of a large summer colony of Disciples, who will come hither both for physical rest and recreation and for social and religious enjoyment. There is no purpose to make it the center of any sectarian propaganda, but rather to make its religious life as broadly catholic and undenominational as the spirit of the New Testament, and therefore a factor in bringing about that mutual understanding and good will among Christians which will lead to a closer unity of Christ's followers. It is expected, in the nature of things, that those who make this place their summer home will most likely share in this spirit and in the desire to realize this end.

The Country Church By C. A. Freer

In college days, by the sickness of a city pastor, I was invited to preach my first sermon in a city pulpit. During a Saturday evening call on the sick man, this was said: "Brother T., I have never preached in a city, and I am greatly scared." "Well, young man," said the sick preacher, "when you go to the city, put on your best suit of clothes, and when you go to the country, take your best sermon and you will get along all right." I met the condition in that incident nobly, because I not only had on my best suit, but a borrowed overcoat and hat. There is much philosophy in the sick preacher's reply. City people like fine linen, china and cut-glass, but the country people think first of the beef, beans, bacon or bread. The parallel is not wholly lost in religious matters. No people detect sham so quickly or appreciate real worth so readily as country people.

To discuss the country church among us is to discuss some conditions and tendencies. Under present conditions our country churches are for the most part losing ground. Why? Three things may be mentioned among the reasons:

1. Our infernally extreme congregationalism. We have magnified independence and liberty in Christ so much that almost any kind of co-operation is looked upon as the "entering wedge of ecclesiasticism." A few years ago a resolution was offered in our Ohio convention recommending an advisory committee on pulpit supply. Quicker than double-geared lightning a good-intentioned brother was on his feet, and not having time to even address the chair, said in thundering tones, "You pass that resolution here to-day, and in ten years we will have a pope in Ohio!" We get frightened into hysterics at the thought of co-operation. It is very hard, seemingly impossible to get churches to work together. Overdevelopment of the bump of independence and selfishness must be lessened among country churches before there can be any efficient work done among them.

2. A false pride among preachers is much to blame. Preachers are measuring each other and themselves altogether too much these days by the population of the town where they preach. We are going insane on bluster and boom. Most preachers are breaking their necks almost to do something big enough to send a telegram. One man did get ninety in the Bible school and a collection of $3.20 one Sunday, and telegraphed it to the papers. All this is fostering false pride. You can telegraph anything from a city and it will be read, but from Jones' Crossing it cuts no figure. Many a preacher is living on Elijah's manna and wearing patched underclothes and fretting his life away in some wicked city at $900 or $1,000 a year, who could do a better work, study at least one day a week and live like a king in some country town or with some country church. But his pride keeps him in the city tread-mill. But, says one, what about his children—they cannot get good school advantages in smaller places or the country! Very sad, that. Well, if 95 per cent of all our great men came from the country, is it not possible for a few more to come out maintaining their self-respect? The advantages for children are in the country, all things considered. The only thing a man really sacrifices in going to the country is his pride, and from the number of letters that came to this scribe from a note in the Ohio letter recently regarding the country churches, many men are willing to sacrifice it. There is a growing tendency among many of our good, strong preachers to seek quieter country-like places. The preachers feel that it does not take much of a man to run a country or village church. But to do it successfully takes just as good a man as the city. As Mark Twain would say, "Let preachers pull a few feathers from the tail of their pride and stick them in the wing of their judgment on this matter," and many more will go to the country.

3. The most serious thing we lack in this matter is competent leadership. The churches lack it. In one instance in Ohio one man worked three years to get three churches to co-operate. They have now had a preacher for nearly two years, and all are doing well, and the preacher living like a prince. What we need in every state is a "grouper"—a man who would give all his time to working up contiguous churches and locating a man with them. Our state boards could well afford to pay a man what the field would not pay him for such work. I am sure a good man in Ohio could make a magnificent field for twenty-five preachers in one year in this way. If we save our country churches, we must do a few such things as suggested herein. We must get over our extreme congregationalism. Preachers must sacrifice pride and feel it an honor to serve the country church. We must go at it in a business-like way that means system and thoroughness. These are only a few hints. A volume could be written on the subject.

It Is a Problem By T. A. Abbott

Corresponding Secretary of Missouri.

Has the country church a problem? Or, is the country church itself a problem? Certainly, it would seem, that there must be some difficulty, for not only our own people but other religious bodies as well, are, in conference, convention or association, talking about it and trying to reach a solution. Do not, for an instant, imagine that this difficulty is peculiar to our own people; it is worrying "other folks" as well as it is us. It may be that our Methodist brethren, with their strong centralized ecclesiasticism, are not troubled as we are, but certainly every religious body that has a congregational form of government is finding the country church problem a large one.

What Is a Country Church?

A failure to have a clear, clean-cut definition as to what is meant by "country church," will increase, instead of allaying our confusion. Congregations easily classify themselves as "city," "town" and "country" churches. Yet to the city man, very often, everything outside of the city is country. But a closer definition than this is needful. We have no insuperable problems in either city of town churches; it is the condition of the purely country church that is calling for the attention of every thoughtful man.

Lack of Leadership.

It seems to us that the whole difficulty lies in a woeful lack of adequate leadership. The men who were in the lead have either died, moved to town, or gone west. During their leadership they failed to develop new material, and their departure left the church, in many instances, helpless. I know of no country church that is or has a problem where they have adequate leadership. The idea, "Once an elder always an elder," is largely responsible for this sad failure to develop leaders. The remedy for this is a wise, prudent, rotation in office, thus giving the younger men a chance to develop their latent powers of leadership.

County Co-operation.

This remedy, however, while helpful for the future, fails to meet the present need. What of the problem now with us? Let all the churches in the county form a co-operation and carry out the Pauline injunction, "Ye which are strong should bear the burdens of the weak." This ought to be true of congregations as well as of individuals. Let a County Board be formed by each church electing one of its wisest and most consecrated men to the place. Let an Executive Committee, President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer, be elected, living in or near the most influential town in the county. Let this board and executive committee meet once each quarter and consider all the interests of all the churches in the county; once a year have a county convention, and, among other things, raise a sum of money, so that not only can the waste places be evangelized, but the weak churches can be assisted in sustaining pastors. All this to be done, not in a spirit of domination, but in loving, loyal, helpfulness, and we believe that the problem of the country church will be in a fair way to be solved. Let it be understood this is not the statement of an untried theory, but a plan that has been tried in some counties for years, and wherever given a faithful trial has never recorded a failure. Lincoln county, Missouri, for instance, organized this sort of a co-operation twenty-five years ago. It had then six churches; it now has sixteen. Its country church problem is being solved right along.

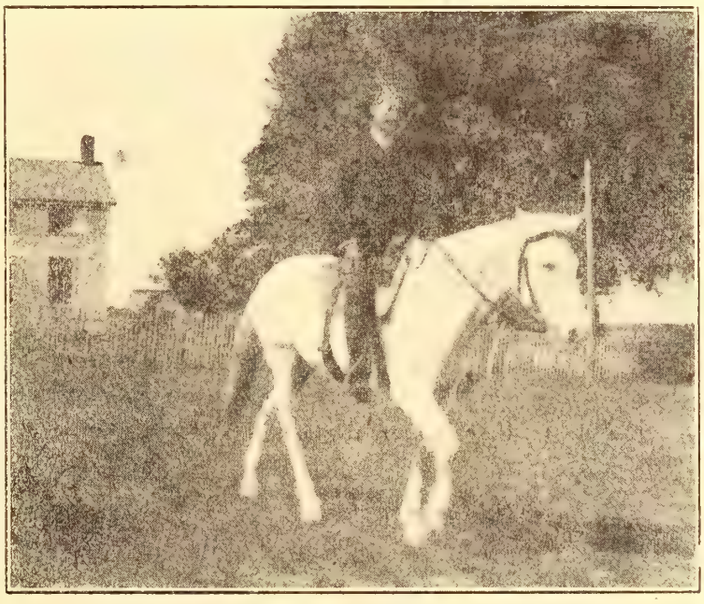
Duty of the Strong Church.

All too often there is a spirit of selfishness in congregations. They care not who, or what dies, so that they live. This spirit is hurtful, injurious, destructive. The strong town church that allows a country church, near by, to perish is following a suicidal policy.

The people of that country community, many of them, will move to town. If the church has been kept up, their coming will be a source of strength to the congregation in the town, otherwise they will be a source of weakness. For its own sake, therefore, the town church ought to put forth every endeavor to secure the strongest life in the country church, for it means its own future strength and life. "Ye which are strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak," is the policy that will solve this great problem.



Our people, in the past, have been frightened by a "bogy" called "Ecclesiasticism," but surely no one can find in the plan outlined even the faintest traces of centralization or ecclesiasticism. It is a simple plan of co-operation, making practical use of the very first law of the Christ-life, "Ye ought also to love one another."

The Country Preacher*

By O. A. Moore

The country preacher is one of the most important factors in the Christian church. The cities are partially supplied from the country, and preachers are not an exception to the rule. The country preacher's field is broad and he has the opportunity of preaching the gospel to many who may never have heard it. Sometimes the seed falls into the hearts of young men that have a burning desire to tell the good news to others, and they do more effective work, and possibly accomplish more good, than he who led them to Christ. These young men are encouraged to enter our Bible schools and equip themselves for greater usefulness than is possible to the average country preacher.

The country preacher preaches to from four to ten mixed congregations per month. This gives him a splendid opportunity for sowing the seed of the Kingdom and cultivating the soil of human hearts. He should be a man of great self-denial, for he must forego many pleasures enjoyed by others if he would meet all his engagements.

A Typical Country Preacher.

His wife should have the same zeal in the cause, for she must shoulder the responsibilities of the home while he is away and supplement his salary by her energy and self-denial. Often when the preacher returns from his seemingly fruitless field of labor, careworn and tired, she will encourage him for the cause of Christ to trust in the Lord and go again.

The country preacher does more preaching, traveling, visiting, etc., for the support that he gets than any other preacher does. Many of them are not regularly engaged in preaching, because the salary is too meager for a support. Such a preacher has to do other work for a living. Because he engages in secular work, do not misjudge him, He has the same burning desire to preach the glorious gospel of Christ. He only needs help. Help him, encourage him, put him to preaching regularly and give him a support. He may not be dressed in the latest style, and may not be very oratorical, but he tells the story enthusiastically and the people hear him gladly. He has many things to encourage him. Besides the words of cheer and comfort from the faithful few, he knows that all the homes are open to him and he is ever a welcome guest. Often he sits by the glowing fire at night and talks of Jesus and his love to families that otherwise might never know of his goodness and mercies. Evangelize the country and you will evangelize the world.

I have great sympathy for the country preacher. I know his trials and have experienced some of his denials. With your pardon, I will give you approximately my work for the last eight years as an illustration of what I have been trying to tell you. During these eight years I have traveled over 24,000 miles in my buggy and more than 2,000 miles by railroad in order to make my appointments. For five years I have driven 42 miles to one church and have not missed an appointment. Hot or cold, wet or dry, I try to go. In going to this one church, just once a month, I have traveled 2,520 miles. I go on time and at the time. Many times I leave home before daylight and travel late at night in order to get back home as soon as I can after filling engagements. I have missed only four appointments in eight years.

I have met and exposed thirteen Mormon elders and driven them out of five different localities. I have preached in twenty denominational churches, twenty-five school houses and many private homes, with about 200 additions to my congregations.

Whatever good I may have accomplished in this work, to God and my loving wife be all the glory.

President Roosevelt on Country Churches.

In a recent address, President Roosevelt lamented the decline of the social forces in our rural districts. He said: "Many country communities have lost their social coherence, their sense of community interest. In such communities the country church, for instance, has gone backward both as a social and a religious factor. . . . The country church must be revived." He speaks of large farming communities west of the Mississippi with pride, saying: "In these regions the church and school flourish as never before; there is a more successful and more varied farming industry; the social advantages and opportunities are greater than ever before; life is fuller, happier, more useful; and though the work is more effective than ever, and in a way quite as hard, it is carried on so as to give more scope for well used leisure."

Is There a Country Church Problem in Kentucky?

By H. W. Elliott

State Secretary.

This is a question that is asked me by the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and there is only one way to reply to it and that in great big letters—YES, YES, YES! The simple fact is that the large majority of our country congregations in the richest part of the state are either at a standstill or on the decline. Some in the richest counties in the state are almost ready to suspend operations. The selling of farms by our members and their removal into the county towns and cities contributes to this state of affairs. Large bodies of land are being bought up and the membership is moved out. There are some other causes that perhaps it would not be wise for me to mention. There is not any special effort being made to solve the problem by the state board, and as far as I can see there can none be made. We certainly cannot have anything to do with the sale of lands. If we could locate efficient men and group the congregations where they are not able to employ a man for all the time it might help to recruit the depleted ranks. There are churches that have men located in their own parsonages—and good men at that—whose recent history is one of loss by removal of members and sale of lands to parties owning larger bodies.

However, it is believed that this would be a factor in solving the problem, if we could get such men as are needed to locate. Perhaps this would serve to accomplish the most important thing after all, viz., to get those who are still with the country church to determine that as much as in them is they will seek to stand by and advance the work of the church. If we could once get them filled with the spirit indicated by an inscription on a monument to Greek soldiers that John Ruskin quotes, "Stranger, go tell our people that we are lying here having obeyed their word," it is possible that we would see a revival of interest in the country church. There is no problem so profoundly important to our work in Kentucky. The growth of the town and city church and the meeting of the needs of the country itself thrust themselves upon us as reasons for an effort to solve the problem of the country church.

Reasons and Suggestions

By W. H. Harding

By request of the brethren, I have spoken on this subject at several conventions, state and district. My experience has been in Canada, Nova Scotia, Illinois, Kansas and several other states. All over the land the country churches are closing their doors. I know of one county where four church buildings were sold last year and moved away, and in three cases turned into barns, and yet there are as many people there as ever. The condition is alarming. A great many people in the country spend the Lord's day in visiting and big family dinners, etc. Why is this? First, because many of the wealthy people move to town. The bone and sinew of many of our city churches are from the country. Second, the general impression is that only the "little preachers" stay in the country. The question always asked a new preacher is: "How large is the town where you are preaching now?" and if it is a large town, he is at once set down as a big preacher from a big place, but if it is a small place, well, the conclusion is that he must be a small preacher or he would not be in such a small place; and as nearly all the preachers are "big," they want to get into a corresponding place. When there is an advertisement from the country there are few replies, but when some large place advertises with a good salary, there are plenty of applicants. We have a great many big preachers and only a few little ones. What can be done to improve the situation?

First, educate all the churches that it is right to meet on the Lord's day to break bread; give more attention to the eldership and have a scriptural efficiency. I have seen churches in the country that were working and doing well because they had a competent body of officers. I have also seen a church ruined through the incompetence or else through the domineering spirit of the elders. I could give a very interesting chapter from my experience in this way.

The third item in the improvement would be to have the strong churches in the cities and towns take an interest in the churches near them that are weak. I know of one large city church with over a thousand members, and it is a living link in the foreign and also in the home mission work, and yet within ten miles of that church there are three dying country churches. I wish I could sound out a note so loud and long that it would awaken some of our churches (and I was going to say preachers, but I will not) to a sense of the work that is needed in our country churches. Let the brethren who have moved to town not forget the old home church, and let the town churches think of the debt they owe the country churches.

The last item I shall mention here is perhaps the most workable and would be the most effectual if carried out. Most of our states are divided into districts. Let each district (or, if thought best, each county, but the district is more practicable at the present stage of our work) have its evangelist, who will try to group the weak churches, so that they may have preaching and pastoral care. This evangelist, if a wise man, could adjust any difficulties that might arise and instruct the people as to the apostolic example. I believe that one of the Centennial aims should be, "An evangelist in every district." I believe we must pay more attention to our state organization. In twenty years' experience all over this country as pastor and evangelist, I have seen things that make me think that this effort on the part of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to call attention to the country church is one of the most important in a long time.

FAMILY FOOD

Crisp, Toothsome and Requires No Cooking.

A little boy down in N. C. asked his mother to write an account of how Grape-Nuts food had helped their family.

She says Grape-Nuts was first brought to her attention on a visit to Charlotte, where she visited the Mayor of that city, who was using the food by the advice of his physician. She says:

"They derive so much good from it that they never pass a day without using it. While I was there I used the Food regularly. I gained about 15 pounds and felt so well that when I returned home I began using Grape-Nuts in our family regularly.

"My little 18 months old baby shortly after being weaned was very ill with dyspepsia and teething. She was sick nine weeks and we tried everything. She became so emaciated that it was painful to handle her and we thought we were going to lose her. One day a happy thought urged me to try Grape-Nuts soaked in a little warm milk.

"Well, it worked like a charm and she began taking it regularly and improvement set in at once. She is now getting well and round and fat as fast as possible on Grape-Nuts.

"Sometime ago several of the family were stricken with LaGrippe at the same time, and during the worst stages we could not relish anything in the shape of food but Grape-Nuts and oranges; everything else nauseated us.

"We all appreciate what your famous food has done for our family." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Landlordism and the Country Church

By E. J. Lampton

One thing standing in the way of the permanency and efficiency of many churches in the country is "landlordism," the land being largely owned by a few men, who reside in some town or city. The whole community with a few exceptions are "renters," who, ever seeking something better, are changing from one place to another, almost annually. In the first place this militates against a permanent, regular growth. This year there may be a large increase and next year the same church may be greatly depleted by removals. This would not be so harmful if these changing homes strengthened some other country church, but the people frequently settle for another year or two where there is no church. For many seem more interested to find a community where they can fatten their cattle than one in which they also can have their families grow strong in the Lord and his truth. In the second place those who live on rented land after paying the demands of their landlord and supplying the imperative needs of their household, have but little left with which to sustain the church, however willing they may be to give for that purpose. This must, in the very nature of things, deprive the church in no small degree of two things essential to the growth and development of every church, first, the gospel faithfully and forcefully preached, and secondly, the tender and constant care for the sick and the spiritually weak.

Out of this and other causes grow other hindrances to the effectiveness of the country churches. They seek the service of some preacher for one year. What can a man learn of the real wants of a community in one year? They contract with him. He comes and fills his contract. He sees something better (financially) elsewhere or the church wants a change, something new. Then comes a period of writing or receiving applications, and the church grows colder and sinners more indifferent. And the wonder is that the church lives at all. Country churches are suffering from being made simply stepping stones to something better upon the part of the preachers. They need to engage a preacher for five or more years so that his interest and theirs may be mutual. If strong enough, it would be wise for the country church to have a parsonage and three or four acres of land attached and well located for the comfort of the preacher's family. If one church can not, let two or more combine and thus prepare a home for him whom they would have labor with and for them. Do away wholly with employing a preacher for a limited time. If needs be let it be for life, let the church do what they promise promptly and the country churches will, I am sure, grow in power as well as numbers.

The Preacher and the Problem

By E. A. Frost

What must be done with the country churches?

Give them the Bible, and as a general thing they will solve all of the problems that confront them. The preaching must be done, or at least is usually done, by country preachers; by men who work on their farms six days in the week and then walk three or four miles to some schoolhouse on the Lord's day to preach. Of course they do not always walk, for many of them have good horses to ride or drive. I am a country preacher myself and when able to preach I have walked eight, ten and sometimes twenty miles to preach.

As to solving the problems: First, try to put a good religious journal in the homes of all our country brethren. This will go far towards eradicating a prejudice which, I am sorry to say, exists in many of our country people; and it will also bring them into touch with the great operations of the militant, evangelistic missionary movements of our great laity as a whole.

City brother, you think, no doubt, that you have the co-operation of the majority of our people in these great enterprises; let me say now that I know that you are mistaken. Not a tenth of our people are doing what could and should be done. Whose fault is this? Yours and ours, of course. Neither the one nor the other altogether.

Second, we need more preachers in the country. We once had, in Barry county, Missouri, about seventeen churches, almost all in the small country villages, and quite a number of preachers; but now we have only a few preachers but many members still. We have now just five very ordinary preachers, the writer being one of this number. We have no young men fitting themselves for the ministry. But I have not time nor space to discuss this, yet some suggestions should be offered, I know. I will just say that if we do train up a bright young man, as soon as he is able to do effective work some city church grabs him.

Third, there should be a preacher—I mean a country preacher—who is willing to take country fare and odds and ends for his salary for every two or three congregations. I mean this, that he must not be above the laboring classes; not "stuck up," to use a hackneyed phrase, or big-headed.

Since the rural free delivery of mail came into vogue, there has been a very noticeable change in the country. Almost all parts of the country can now be reached by the daily mails, and the country is no more in a certain sense. Telephone lines now ramify all parts of the country and the day is not distant when the country people can listen to preachers and lecturers and sit about their own firesides. These changed conditions in the rural districts call for changes in the modus operandi of all of our enterprises.

A few years ago I, being in very straitened financial circumstances and in poor health, and also homeless, made an offer to my brethren in general that if they would help me get a humble home and out of debt, I would devote my time to preaching. A few noble-hearted brethren responded to my appeal and greatly aided me, yet not enough to enable me to do what I proposed. I have had to work so hard on my little rocky farm that when Sunday comes I feel more like going to bed than preaching; yet I can see where rich congregations give thousands of dollars to convert China, India, Japan and other heathen countries, and allow our own young people to unite with the various denominations around them for the want of faithful men to present the inimitable doctrine of Jesus Christ. I do

PATCHES

Why Brown Ones Come on Faces.

When a woman can get rid of brown patches on her face by changing her diet it is worth while for other women who care for their complexions to know something of the method.

A lady in Michigan City says that coffee caused the brown patches on her face by first giving her stomach trouble, then putting her nerves out of order, and the result was shown in her complexion.

She quit coffee and began using Postum Food Coffee and in less than a month the stomach trouble disappeared and within two months her complexion cleared up and is now fine and rosy.

She speaks of two men at Westfield, Ind., who have both been improved in health by leaving off coffee and taking in its place Postum Food Coffee; also a husband and wife of the same place, who were in poor health and suffered from stomach trouble. They quit coffee and after using Postum a short time the result was natural sleep, return of appetite, and a gain in strength as fast as nature could rebuild.

She gives the names of a number of other persons who have been helped by leaving off coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee.

It is a safe proposition that if any coffee user has stomach or nervous trouble, or bad complexion, he or she can get rid of the trouble by discontinuing coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee. It is easy enough to prove the truth of this by making trial. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

A MOTHER CHURCH IN INDIANA

The following is taken verbatim from the old record of the Little Flatrock Christian Church, Rush county, Indiana:

"In consequence of some differences existing in the regular Baptist church on Little Flatrock on some points of doctrine, such as particular election, limited atonement, means of the Spirit's operation, etc., after various altercations the said church by mutual consent agreed to divide, and the following brethren and sisters obtained the following letter of dismission, viz: The Baptist Church of Jesus Christ on Little Flatrock: To all Persons to Whom These Presents May Come, Greeting:—Know ye that our brethren and sisters whose names are hereunto annexed are persons of good moral character, but in consequence of some difference between them and us upon some parts of the Word of God or doctrine, they are therefore dismissed from us; done by order of the church and signed: Abner Hackleman, clerk. (Here follow the names of the thirty dissenting persons mentioned in the foregoing).

"The above-named brethren and sisters met by appointment on Friday, the 16th day of April, 1830, and after mature deliberation proceeded to give each other the right hand of fellowship pledging ourselves to each other and to God to maintain the order and worship of a visible Church of Christ according to the New Testament, having no other creed, or rule of faith and practice but the Word of God, which we most firmly believe.

(Received by letter on the same day, five brethren.)

"Appointed Bro. John P. Thompson bishop and Bro. Abner Hackleman secretary.

"Resolved, That we be known by the name of 'The Church of Christ on Little Flatrock.' Attest: John P. Thompson, Bishop.

"A Hackleman, Secretary."

Little Flat Rock Christian Church, Rush County, Indiana.

In these brief words we have all of the record handed down by the fathers of the church in regard to its formation. It is known, however, that John P. Thompson was the preacher of the regular Baptist church at the time of the division, he being one of the thirty who wished to be known simply as a Disciple of Christ and as member of a Church of Christ. About a year before the division of the church Brother Thompson made a visit to Kentucky and during his stay there it fell to his lot to hear a series of sermons by Barton Stone. Being a man without prejudice and of great intellectual powers, he became greatly dissatisfied with his previous conceptions of the Word. The result was when he returned to Indiana he began to preach the 'strange' doctrine he had heard in Kentucky, which, finally after several months of disturbance, brought about the division of the church. It is only just to the restoration movement on Little Flatrock to say that at the present time there is no trace whatever of the regular Baptist church.

During the seventy-seven years of the existence of Little Flatrock Christian Church the records kept are meager and broken and it is very difficult to write a connected history of the church. Perhaps to serve the purpose of this sketch it is not necessary but the writer feels sure there are at least two distinctive features in the general management of the congregation which will be interesting to the brotherhood. For instance, in the year 1846 the old record says, "The church met for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of building a new meeting house. It was unanimously resolved, 1st, that this church through divine favor will erect a new meeting house; 2d, resolved by a large majority of the members present, that the most just and equitable and scriptural plan to raise funds for the erection of said house is upon a principle of equality, or in other words, that each male pay according to his real worth, taking out his liabilities, when so requested."

Upon the adoption of this resolution several of the most wealthy brethren and some few others seemed to take offense and declared that they would not pay their proportional part.

At a subsequent meeting "it was moved that if those brethren, after they shall have sufficient reflection, still persist in refusing to pay their proportional part, they shall be dismissed from the church."

The records show that after three months of grace these brethren still refused to pay according to the resolution and were therefore excluded from the fellowship of the church for the sin of covetousness or an inordinate love of money! In justice to these brethren let it be said that they afterward repented and were reinstated.

From this scheme of raising funds for this church building evolved an ad valorem system of securing the finances for the regular expenses of the church, which is extant to the present day. The justness and the fairness of such a method is patent upon its very face, and it has proved so satisfactory with this congregation that it has no trouble to meet every financial call. Is there another congregation in the brotherhood using the same method?

The old record also shows that the elders of the church were careful to keep the personnel of the membership as clean and Christianlike as it was possible to do, for time after time there is record made where this brother was excluded for gambling, this one dismissed for swearing, this one for drunkenness, still another for non-attendance at church, this sister for keeping questionable company, another sister dismissed with the laconic words, "no account" after her name, and so on through almost the whole category of human sins and foibles.

The church, during its long life, has been served by the most noted men of the Restoration in various capacities—some as pastors, some as evangelists, others as visitors. Out of the large list a few names are given: John P. Thompson, John O'Kane, Alexander Campbell, George Campbell, Henry R. Pritchard, Benj. Franklin, Benj. Reeve, Elijah Goodwin, Isaac Errett, D. R. Van Buskirk, Knowles Shaw, L. L. Carpenter, J. P. Orr, E. S. Frazee, Walter Campbell, Robert Sellers, E. B. Scofield, A. W. Connor, J. W. Connor, W. J. Russell, J. H. MacNeil, I. N. Grisso, J. N. Jessup, Elden Van Winkle, Walter Stairs and A. B. Houze. It is not difficult to see why the church prospered so abundantly when one understands it was fed the bread of life by such men as these.

The congregation when I was pastor, at the time of its seventy-fifth anniversary, numbered two hundred and fifty, and so far as the writer knows was the strongest country congregation in the brotherhood. It supports a pastor full time, besides giving to the various missions from all sources over $600 per year.

On September 10, 1905, was celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of the church, but owing to an incessant rain during the day the assemblage of people was necessarily small. Among the speakers present were Stephen J. Corey, of Cincinnati, O., secretary of Foreign Missionary Society; former pastors D. R. Van Buskirk, of Greensburg, Ind.; J. P. Orr, Lebanon, Ind.; Walter Campbell, Louisville, Ky., and A. B. Houze, Flora, Ind., all of whom delighted the audiences with sermons and addresses happily conceived and well delivered.

This celebration is worthy of more than passing notice. It marks the closing of seventy-five years of indefatigable labor for the Master by the church that is practically the mother congregation of our brotherhood in Indiana. It marks the beginning of a new epoch of still greater achievements for world-wide righteousness. For three generations Little Flatrock has been a radiating center from which Christian men and women have gone to every part of the nation with the story of Jesus upon their lips. To attempt to outline the good the church has done would be an impossible task. It is incalculable. Never, until the eternal rewards are given in heaven, will the result of its labor be known.

The present condition of the church is gratifying evidence that the power and worth of some country churches is not waning, but is still a most important factor in the moral and religious development of the nation.

Little Flatrock Christian Church, proud of its glorious past, looks forward into the future, sanguine in the belief that it has not yet reached the limit of its usefulness, but that greater victories lie in the years to come when the full glory of a century rounded out in the work of the Master shows forth the matchless splendor of a still more glorious triumph.

A NOTED COUNTRY CHURCH IN ILLINOIS.

The Cantrall Church of Christ has a remarkable history. Its founders were typical pioneers. The church has been a substantial organization since its very beginnings. Its service to the brotherhood of Central Illinois has been more than any other congregation in existence. From it have sprung most of the older churches in this part of the state.

The church was established by Stephen England on May 15, 1820. So important has been the part Mr. England played in the early history of this church that a few words of his life will not here be amiss, in fact it will not be possible to give the history of the church without an account of this great man of God. He was born June 12, 1773, in Virginia. His parents moved to Bath County, Ky., when he was quite young. He was there married about 1791 to Anna Harper, who was born September 1, 1772, also in Virginia. They had ten living children in Kentucky. The family moved in March, 1813, to Madison County, O., where they had two children. In the fall of 1818 they moved to Madison county, Ill. The following winter Stephen England, with two of his sons-in-law, came up to the Sangama country to explore it. After much difficulty and hardship they found a suitable place to build their houses. They cleared the land, planted their crops and returned to Madison county for their families, bringing them to their new homes about June 1, 1819.

Stephen England was not to enjoy his new home long for it was on September 26, 1823, that he died of a cancer in one of his ankles. Mr. England was a Baptist minister in Kentucky, but I have it on reliable authority that he was acquainted with Barton W. Stone before coming to Illinois. He was familiar with Stone's effort to have men be Christians only and was never known as a Baptist in Illinois. His first effort to plant the seed of the gospel was very soon after he brought his family to the new settlement. The people, having planted their crops, wished to have religious services, so Mr. England announced that he would preach at his own house late in June or early in July, 1819. Everybody in the entire settlement came. Two women walked five miles through the grass, which was almost as high as their heads. The husband of one of them walked and carried their babe. That was the first sermon ever preached north of the Sangamon river in Sangamon county, and probably in Central Illinois. Mr. England organized the church May 15, 1820, at his own house, in what is now known as Fancy Creek township. There were eight members besides himself. The names of the persons constituting the church were Stephen

Lewis P. Fisher, Pastor.

England and Anna, his wife; Jechoniah Langston and Nancy, his wife; Levi Cantrall and Fannie, his wife; Mrs. Adelphia Wood, Mrs. Sarah Cantrall, the wife of Wyatt Cantrall, Mrs. Lucy Scott (daughter of Mr. England), afterwards Mrs. Cline. This was the first church organized in Sangamon county and the writer doubts very much if there was any other church of Christ organized in Central Illinois before this time. Mr. England's widow died June 1, 1841, both near where they first settled in 1819, in what is now Fancy Creek township. His last years were spent in much suffering, but he preached the gospel as long as he could stand, and delivered his last sermon sitting.

For a number of years after the organization of the church they were without a church home and were compelled to worship at their homes in barns and in groves. The first church house was a log structure, built at a point one and one-half miles southeast of the present church in Cantrall, near what is now known as the Brittin Cemetery. This, of course, was a simple old-fashioned log meeting-house and it was used until about the year 1846, when a frame church was erected a few rods east of the present church. In 1873 the present church building was dedicated. It was then considered one of the best country church houses in this part of the country. It is built west across the street from the old frame house on a beautiful piece of ground. From the beginning of the church until the laying out of the present village of Cantrall in the sixties it was known as the Antioch Christian Church, but with the coming of the town and the new church the name Antioch was dropped and the name Cantrall substituted.

In the beginnings of the reformation in Illinois the Antioch congregation was the headquarters of many of our pioneer preachers and debaters. The writer has not been able to learn the names of all the men who deserve a place on this list, but the following are a few of them: William Brown, James Morrow, a Brother Ryan, "Watty" Bowles and his father, Robert ("Little Bob") Foster, and Philemon Vawter. These men all visited and often preached for the congregation. Besides these there is only one other, without which the list would be very incomplete, that of Barton W. Stone. Mr. Stone seemed to have been a personal friend of the Englands and paid them a visit early in the forties, preaching for the brethren on a number of occasions.

George T. Sayles.

Bro. Stephen England was the first minister of the church and served in that capacity until the time of his death in 1823. His son David united with the church about one year after his father's death. He was first elected deacon, then elder and continued in that office to his death in the early eighties. Stephen England solemnized the first marriage in his home county. On one occasion a couple came to Mr. England from Fort Clark, now Peoria, to avoid the trouble of going to Edwardsville for license. It was lawful to advertise their intentions for ten days, and then marry without license. The couple were married in the latter way.

In concluding this short history of one of Illinois' oldest country churches a word that is quite deserving may be said in behalf of some of the congregation's present personnel. Any one who knows the congregation and has had the privilege of visiting with them will not forget George T. Sayles. He has been a member of the church for 54 years and has served them efficiently as elder for 40 years. During these years he has been temporarily away for a short time but his membership and support have been with the Cantrall congregation. He is now 76 years old, but attends regularly every Lord's day and his mind is as suggestive in the monthly official board meetings as the ordinary man's at 30. The church loves him and reluctantly awaits the time of his call to the heavenly world.

Another one of the congregation's consecrated servants is Henry H. England, one of the younger sons of David England. He was born May 19, 1847, on the farm acquired by his grandfather in 1819. At the age of about 22 he became a member of the Antioch church and has served the church faithfully for 40 years, the last 25 of which have been spent in the eldership. Mr. England has raised a large family and now owns and lives on the old England homestead.

About 20 years ago President E. V. Zollars held a meeting for the church, which was the gathering in of a number of strong, earnest men who have been loyal supports of the congregation since. John Grant, at present the able Bible school superintendent, has been, with Robert, his brother, and John S. Lake, of invaluable service in maintaining the present healthy condition of the church. The Grants were among the first students of the Illinois State Normal University, at Normal, Ill. They taught school for many years in their young manhood. The brethren at Cantrall count themselves very fortunate indeed in having a man of Bro. John Grant's like to lead them in their Bible school. Both Brother Grant and John S. Lake are elders.

The congregation at present has a membership of 125 and a growing Bible school. They are loyal to every missionary enterprise and are anxious to progress with every movement that will preach the Christ and save men. The official board consists of five elders and six deacons. All are well qualified for their work.

In the few months of the present ministry the writer can only count himself exceedingly fortunate in being called to a church of such large and fruitful experience. We are looking forward to greater things. We have just begun an evangelistic campaign. William G. McColley, of the Pontiac Church, is assisting the minister and does the preaching. The field seems ripe for a great meeting.

A Decadent Grace

By Rochester Irwin

Recently, with a deep sense of chagrin, I read in a paper published by one of our state missionary societies the following letter from a member of a certain church, in reply to the corresponding secretary:

"Your letter informing us of Brothers ——— and ——— received. I am very, very sorry to say that we will have to give up having any preaching this summer just because no one thinks that we can keep a preacher. I have always kept the preacher, every one we have had for the past twenty-five years, ever since the church was organized. When I first found out that we could get a student to spend the summer with us I brought the matter before the church, and every one present said, 'Yes, have him come; if we can not hire a preacher for a year, get one for a few months and then see what we can do.' I then told them that my daughter and two children were coming from California to spend the summer with us, and it would be impossible for us to entertain a preacher, and some one must make up his mind to take him, and I have been trying ever since, both in and out of the church, to find a place, but all say 'No.' I know that it is inconvenient for most farmers to furnish a room for a minister, but some could, and I feel very badly to have to give up hearing preaching this summer. It is now about a year since we have had a sermon in our church. I still hope for better times. Yours in hope."

The secretary fitly heads his reprint of this letter with the phrase, "The Shame of It," and comments thus:

"Some of our churches are pastorless today simply because they will make no sacrifice nor be put to any inconvenience to have a pastor. The corresponding secretary has recommended student preaching to several churches that are without pastors, feeling that this would be much better than nothing. We print one of the replies received."

Reader, have we been "forgetful to entertain strangers"? Have we "all things common," as much as we should have? Do we "abound" in this "grace" of liberality and hospitality as in the "good old times" of our fathers? Lord, give us a greater number of Marthas and Lydias!

HOUSED BY 1909

By W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary

One of the most important of all the watchwords set before the brotherhood in the Centennial campaign is one of the seven sent forth from the Church Extension office in Kansas City, "Every homeless church housed by 1909."

All will agree that there is no worthier way of celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the Restoration movement. So fully do we appreciate the necessity of having a house for the church that we have come to use the same word for the two things. The church without a meeting-house can not be strong, permanent or prosperous in the higher spiritual things of its service.

Any one of our eleven hundred homeless churches could send to any one of our million and a half of members a master solicitor like G. W. Muckley, F. M. Rains or P. C. Macfarlane, and get a contribution of five cents, or $50,000 for the building of a house of worship, but the business-like, practical, brotherly, scriptural way is for us all to voluntarily turn into the common fund the money which we wish to give for the erection of buildings other than our own, and allow this to be administered by a board of wise, consecrated men who can study the whole field thoroughly, investigate each case and give assistance in such a way that not only is the beneficiary helped, but the fund preserved entire for the assistance of other churches in the future.

All housed by 1909! With this aim in view, let the churches that have not heretofore taken offerings fall into line; let individuals who have not given contribute their little or much; let those who have supported this cause in the past increase their contributions for this supreme emergency call. It is not only that all that are now homeless shall be housed by 1909, but

"Across the shadowed sea at twilight hour
A ship comes stealing in the wake of day.
No sail-clad masts above her low hull tower.
No captain's voice, no sailors to obey—
A derelict, nothing more.

"Across life's twilight sea a ship comes sailing.
A shattered wreck, adrift upon the stream;
About its seamed sides lost hopes are trailing;
Ambition gone, and blighted each fair dream—
A derelict, nothing more.

by housing these, we shall provide a fund which will be adequate for the housing of all that will come after them.

The Preacher and the Problem.

not cite my own case as isolated. Other worthy preachers have been driven from the rich home fields because they receive no support. They that preach the gospel should live of the gospel, says Paul, and never until men can be supported and donate their entire time to preaching, prayer and study can we expect great results.

The one thing above all others that has hindered our progress in the country is the fact that there is a certain class of pugilistic preachers who, like the ancient Serpentenians, when they have no enemy on the outside to kill, fall upon their own friends and cut and slash everything as heretical that does not divert a golden stream of filthy lucre into their own coffers.

I further suggest that a cause which is not great enough to enlist a self-support is either lacking in inherent worth or else its devotees fail in their zeal toward it. The latter is the case in the subject under consideration.

If I had the power and ability I would go to each brother or sister in a given district and personally solicit his active cooperation in having meetings at every schoolhouse until church houses could be erected. I would place in his hands a good paper, even if I had to do it at my own expense. Active men should be sent into each school district to gather up the names of all members of the church. How often is it the case that you will hear a former member of the Church of Christ say: "Well, Sallie and I moved into a new neighborhood, and as we had no church there and as we did not know of any of our own people there, and as the Baptists had a good church and Sunday-school, we just united with them."

What should be done? The answer is easy. These good people, if approached in time, would gladly unite with their own brethren. Keep preachers in every nook and corner—local preachers. Let those who are well fixed and have ample means give something to hold the hands of worthy preachers up in every neighborhood.

Our Budget

—All hands to the oars!

—A long pull and a strong pull and our missionary societies will raise the needed money.

—Let nothing stand in the way of our achieving our aims.

—Church extension has the right-of-way this month. But those who have not forwarded their offerings to the societies should do this at once in order that the books may be made up.

—The plans for the Norfolk convention are rapidly taking shape.

—We will give you full particulars in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at an early date.

—Among the speakers for the Foreign Society will be L. E. Sellers, Ira Boswell, Herbert Moninger and Peter Ainslie.

—We give large space this week to the problem of the country churches.

—We believe that it is vital that attention should be focused on this subject.

—The men whose articles appear in our columns this week are those who have had wide experience.

—From all that we can learn, one of the greatest problems is how to get the inhabitants of our rural districts to pay anything like a reasonable proportion of their income for the support of the ministry. We hear of men who are worth $20,000 to $25,000 giving from $10 to $20 a year for a preacher's salary. Of course, there will be only one-fourth time and one-half time preaching when the membership is so niggardly.

—We present a brief history of two prominent country churches in this issue, while what may be called the first of our churches is also represented in our columns this week.

—The Cantrall church has just opened a special evangelistic meeting. Frank B. Thomas, who writes the account of the Little Flat Rock Church, is a late minister of that church and did an excellent work there. This is one of the churches that puts to shame a hundred other country churches that could do as much if they would.

—The office force is looking forward with expectancy to the return of the Editor, who will be at his desk, all being well, before the next issue of the paper goes to press. The Assistant Editor had a delightful visit with his chief's family at the "Pioneer" cottage, Pentwater.

—During the absence of the Assistant Editor some mistakes crept into our topic pages, but we believe the lessons of the Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor and prayer-meeting will now be found in their proper sequence.

—All news items, articles and matter for publication in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST should be addressed simply to "The Editor," and not to individuals. Orders for books, supplies and business matters should be sent to the Christian Publishing Company.

—C. C. Cunningham, pastor of the church at Garrettsville, Ohio, reports the work succeeding well and improvements being made on the building.

—Lawrence Wright commends the work in South Dakota which, while very hard, he feels is in a very hopeful condition. The need is for more good preachers.

—The church extension offering at Lyons, Kan., went above the apportionment. W. L. Harris, the minister, begins a tent meeting at Nickerson, Kan., October 7.

—A note from J. M. Plummer reports that the county convention held at Elk City, Kan., was a splendid gathering. The church there is becoming more active.

—R. B. Havener was called to his home at Windsor to the bedside of his daughter. She may have to undergo an operation and the family ask the prayers of the brotherhood.

—A new vestibule, belfry and bell are secured for the Christian church at Mulkeytown, Ill., which will be dedicated next Lord's day by G. W. Wise, the new pastor at Duquoin, Ill.

—Marion Stevenson, of our Bible school force, lectures at Deland, Ill., September 15-20. W. T. McConnell is pastor. The congregation is enjoying a period of prosperity.

—The First Church at Springfield, Mo., more than doubled its apportionment for church extension. The Scoville meeting has just begun in Springfield and there are flattering prospects for a great ingathering, writes Brother Ragland.

—F. W. Collins has closed a very pleasant work at West Liberty, Iowa, and writes most enthusiastically of the people there for their generosity in judgment and their kindly treatment. He has enjoyed ten years of fellowship with the Iowa ministry, but has thought it well to accept what he believes is a good field at Garnett, Kan., where he has just entered upon the work.

—We have already announced that the new university at Enid, Okla., will open on September 17. We have received a further statement that this announcement is authoritative, and that no change will be made from this program.

—The brethren at Owosso, Mich., are very much rejoiced at their progress. During the past year there were fifty-nine additions. The old note against the church was recently publicly burned and the financial system put on a much more secure foundation.

—We regret to learn that E. J. Lampton has for some weeks been under the care of a specialist in Kansas City, but we are now glad to know that he expects to return to his work and family this week. An article by Brother Lampton appears on another page.

—Brother Grimes reports that three of the young men from the church at Grand Junction, Colo., will go this fall to college with the purpose of studying for the ministry. Jasper Bogue goes to Drake, Carl Hibbs and Ward Hutton to the Oklahoma Christian University.

—William Pearn, from whom we published in our last issue an interesting article on the Panama Canal, has just received an appointment from the commission as chaplain. His time will be spent in pastoral work at Cristobal and in visiting the hospital.

—The Oklahoma-Indian Territory convention has just concluded. Illinois is in session this week at Jacksonville, and Kentucky begins its Diamond Jubilee convention next Monday at Latonia. Bro. Elliott is very anxious to clean the slate and wants all delinquent money sent in. Brother Hopkins asks an interest in the Bible school session. The endowment of the Bible chair is to be discussed. It is practically guaranteed.

THE CHILDREN OF OUR MISSIONARIES

must be cared for and educated in America. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society has arranged for the G. L. Wharton Memorial Home and scholarship at Hiram, O.

Other missionary societies have such homes. $25,000 is needed.

A great opportunity to put money into a permanent investment in aid of missions and in the care and education of worthy children.

Individuals, churches, Sunday-schools and societies are asked to help. Address Wharton Memorial Home. Hiram, O.

CAUTIOUS MOTHERS

Use Only Cuticura Soap, Purest of Cleansing Emollients for Baby's Skin.

Careful mothers use Cuticura Soap exclusively for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands of infants and children, assisted, in the severer cases, by Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, for the prevention of rashes, itchings and chafings, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Cures made in childhood are, in most cases, speedy, permanent, and economical. Guaranteed absolutely pure under the United States Food and Drugs Act.

—W. P. Bentley has just spent three weeks in Southern California in the interest of Oriental missions. The National C. W. B. M. is planning for a Japanese home in Los Angeles, to be the center of Japanese life in this region, under Christian auspices. The interest in this plan is strong and growing.

—Evangelist I. T. LeBaron, of Macon, Mo., has recently been added to the special list of anti-saloon lecturers. He uses the stereopticon with telling effect on this "problem of problems." His services may be secured either through personal correspondence, or application direct to E. G. Robinson, St. Louis, Mo.

—M. M. Davis, of the Central Church, Dallas, Texas, has been taking a resting trip by water to New York and thence by rail to the Jamestown Exposition and other eastern places of interest. His wife, daughter and grandson accompanied him part of the way, but stopped in Missouri to visit some friends.

—The church at Monett, Mo., is preparing for a great soul-winning campaign, with State Evangelist Joseph Gaylor in the lead. Cottage prayer-meetings are being held in every part of the city, and a spirit of expectancy prevails. The meeting began last Lord's day and Reuben Blunt asks for the prayers of the brotherhood.

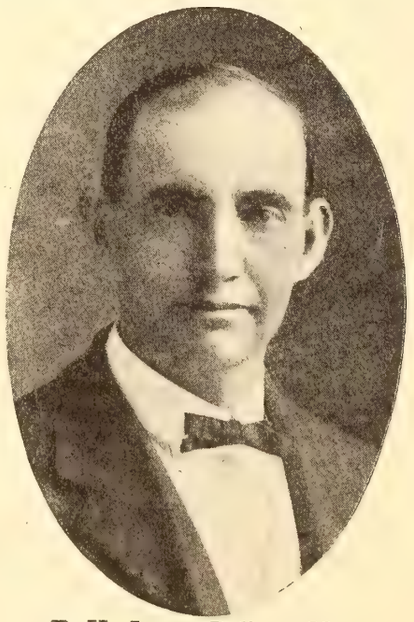
—O. J. Saunders, of Melbourne, Australia, has just completed a two years' course at Christian University, Waco, Texas, graduating with class honors and a scholarship. He is now in attendance at the University of Chicago for post-graduate work. During the present summer he has held some very successful revival meetings.

—The brethren at Jefferson City, Mo., are holding services in the circuit court room, their church having been razed to make way for a new building. We understand that the work is going along very successfully, but it has, for a long time, been cramped by reason of the fact that ours is one of the oldest church buildings in the town.

—The receipts of the Foreign Society to September 6 amounted to $257,313. It is necessary for the society to receive $42,687 during the last twenty-four days of September if it reaches $300,000. True, it received this much last year during the same time, but there were some special large gifts. It will require united and heroic effort to reach the $300,000.

—According to custom, the Christian churches of Howard county, Ind., recently met in the City Park at Kokomo for an all-day open-air meeting. E. Richard Edwards, of that city, delivered two helpful sermons and two other preachers preaching in the county—R. M. Blount, of Irvington, and D. A. McDowel, of Bunker Hill—assisted in the services.

—F. D. Power is just back from Bethany-Beside-the-Sea. On his first Lord's day in his own church he received four into membership, one of whom he baptized in the Atlantic. On September 8 he preached his thirty-second anniversary sermon, and the subject might be called "Through Nine Administrations." This accomplished preacher, writer and after-dinner toastmaster never was more popular than he is to-day. We sincerely hope that he will be spared to serve through many more presidential terms at the capital city, where he so well represents the best element in the life of the Christian churches.



Opportunity for Young Men

To study for the ministry and work part time to help pay expenses. Write Pres. C. J. Burton, Ph. B., Pres. Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

—Graham Frank has returned to his work at Liberty, Mo., after a month's vacation at Macatawa, Mich. The four Protestant churches at Liberty will unite in evangelistic services during October under the leadership of Lincoln McConnell. During November the Christian church in Liberty will be assisted in a meeting by Walter M. White, of Lexington, Ky.

—The Foreign Society as just received $10,000 on the annuity plan from a friend. He prefers that his name be not published, at present at least. This is not all he expects to do for this world-wide cause. He may visit one or two of the mission stations at some future time. This good man and his wife have consecrated their time and their all to the Lord's work.

—"You can put me down for $10 for the Bethany College endowment fund." This is the first definite amount reported to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and the donor is G. D. Jackson, of the Standard Clothing Company, of Jacksonville, Fla. We trust the brethren will not forget the needs of Bethany College, and the effort to make it thoroughly competent to carry on the great work for which it was started.

T. H. Jones, Bolivar, Mo.

—O. D. Maple was a recent visitor to the office of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, having specially in view the examination of some of the church edifices of St. Louis, with a view to getting suggestions for the plan of the new building at Cairo, Ill. Brother Maple took charge of the work there with a definite understanding that the brethren should go forward. He expects to resume evangelistic work when the building is completed.

—The thirty-third annual convention of the Colored Christian Churches of Missouri was held at New London, August 23. One interesting factor of the meeting was a conference with delegates sent by the Missouri Freewill Baptists, with a view of effecting a union of the two bodies. This matter was referred to committees for further consideration, and will be reported at the next convention. There was a large attendance, and the convention was said to have been the best ever held by our Missouri colored brethren.

—B. L. Wray, pastor of the Budd Park Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., says the new basement is to be completed by the end of October. Brother Wray speaks very favorably of Brother Combs' church, where he recently preached in the absence of the minister. The membership of this church have aided in building Budd Park. The portion of the edifice now being erected will cost about $13,000, but for the completed church about $44,000 will be expended. Thus, under wise leadership, is our plea being advanced in the hustling city on western Missouri's line.

—W. A. Baldwin, state secretary of Nebraska, has been taking a vacation, much needed after the strain of a year's work. We learn that the state convention recently held was an excellent one, but have failed to receive any report of it. The following officers were chosen for the coming year by the Nebraska convention: President, J. E. Davis, Beatrice; vice-president, H. H. Harmon, Lincoln; recording secretary, E. M. Johnson, Geneva; treasurer, T. F. A. Williams, Lincoln; B. S. superintendent, I. A. Downey, Hastings; C. E. superintendent, F. E. Day, Nelson.

—W. C. Hull, after an absence of two years from the Payne Avenue Church of Christ, North Tonawanda, N. Y., has returned to the pastorate, and was greeted by large audiences in the building where he had labored for five years. During his absence he preached in Chicago after taking advanced pedagogical work. He sustained a severe injury in Brooklyn last year, and for a time his life was despaired of, but he rallied and has at last regained his former strength. S. B. Lindsay reports that the future of the work seems to be very bright, as the indebtedness of the church has been paid off and pledges sufficient to take care of the weekly expenses have been secured.

—A. Martin, after a four years' ministry at Davenport, Iowa, has resigned, to take effect January 1, and will re-enter the general field. He is now making dates, and his first will be with one of the larger churches in western Ohio. Brother Martin may be addressed at 514 East Fifteenth street, Davenport, Iowa. During his pastorate in that city there have been some 200 additions to the church membership, and the missionary offerings trebled. Repairs costing about $2,500 have been made upon the building and a parsonage costing about $3,000 built. The congregation is in good condition for aggressive work. Those desiring information about the pulpit may address E. R. Moore, 1608 Le Claire street.

High Commendation.

The two books by Bettex, "The Bible the Word of God," and "Science and Christianity," ought to be read by every preacher in our brotherhood. During my ministry I have tried to keep abreast with thought, especially as it relates to science and Christianity; but these works of Bettex are unique. His knowledge of the subjects treated seems to be complete, and his investigations are the very latest. He is broad, scholarly, loyal to our Christian faith and Bible, yet easy to be understood, and I have never read books of this nature with so many fine passages—passages that are worthy to go down into literature. One closes these books with a mind literally bristling with sermons, and burning with messages for his people. There was a time in my ministry when I puzzled over subjects, "what to preach"; now it is, "Which shall I give them next?" and to-day I begin my sixth year with the Huntington church, with a hundred sermons ahead of me. In this age of good books and cheap books, one is inexcusable for his ignorance. No preacher can be up-to-date and feed his people who is not a reader of good books, and the Christian Publishing Company is doing a good work in calling our attention to them. Yours for good literature, Cephas Shelburne.

The Missionary Situation in Iowa.

In preparing a report for the northwest district of Iowa the following situation was revealed: Out of 85 churches in the district according to the state secretary's report, 33 gave $396 for foreign missions in 1906; 18 gave $211 for home missions in 1906; 12 gave $143 for church extension in 1906, and 45 gave $494 for state missions in 1906.

This interesting exhibit led me to make an examination of the whole state with the following result: Four hundred and sixty-five churches in the state of Iowa gave for missions in 1906, as follows: One hundred and eighty-seven gave $3,222.80 for foreign missions; 124 gave $2,028.79 for home missions; 86 gave $1,291.62 for church extension, and 200 gave $3,371.34 for state work.

The above summary carries its own argument; how woefully neglected are our missionary causes! Church extension has been the most neglected; less than one church in five gave for building and housing our homeless congregations last year! Brethren, let us of this fair state change this deplorable record this year by seeing that our church gives and also that the churches near us take the church extension offering.

Sioux City, Ia. J. K. Ballou.

The Veteran Dedicator.

On August 25 L. L. Carpenter dedicated his 700th church. On December 15 he will celebrate his seventy-fifth anniversary and more than half a century of that time has been devoted to the Master's service. In dedicatory services he has raised more than $2,000,000 for the interests of the Kingdom. It is given to but few of the Christ's followers to have a life so long, so rich in good works and so filled with the spirit of kindliness toward all mankind as is his life. And the marvel about the man is that he is among the youngest ministers of the brotherhood, in spirit.

E. F. Daugherty.

Wabash, Ind.

—It is hoped to have the new building at New Albany, Ind., the foundation of which has just been laid, completed by February of next year. It was three and one-half years ago that B. F. Cato took charge of this work when it was disorganized and the people discouraged with many little debts and about ready to give up. During his pastorate there have been 385 accessions, the missionary offerings have been faithfully taken and the congregation is harmonious and active. Brother Cato has indeed done a great work, and we rejoice with him and the brethren that there is prospect of their having so fine a building to house them at no distant date. The seating capacity of their main auditorium will be about 450, while their Bible school department will accommodate 100 in the primary class and 413 in class rooms and rotunda. The arrangements are such that all the auditorium space can be thrown into one, giving a full capacity of 1,000 seats or more. We are not informed of the exact cost of the proposed building, but will have more to say when it is dedicated.

—Of all the recent movements among us, there is none that appeals more strongly to sentiment than the proposed popular movement for the endowment of old Bethany. The tie which binds one to his alma mater is not unlike that which binds us to our mother in the flesh, and, in a sense, Bethany is "the mother of us all." To her children who have gone out from her portals, from the earliest days when her first great president thrilled his students with the great thoughts of his genius down to the last graduating class, there are no hills clothed with such grace and beauty as those which stand sentinel about old Bethany, nor is there any lullaby so sweet as the music of the old Buffalo as it goes on its winding ways through the hills, singing forever the notes of that reformation with the beginnings of whose history it is so closely identified. Bethany's children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren will gladly join in a movement to place her on a firm and immovable foundation before the Centennial of 1909. As no institution among us is so closely identified with the beginning of our history, so no event could more appropriately celebrate the completion of a century of our history than her endowment at the hands of a brotherhood which owes so much to her. Among all the other Centennial tasks to which we have put our hands, let this one be carried to successful completion, not as a detriment to any of the others, but as an inspiration to them all. Indeed, there is needed just now a regirding of ourselves for the completion of our Centennial tasks if we are to acquit ourselves honorably in the sight of the whole world. The Norfolk convention should deepen and widen our plans and put new earnestness and enthusiasm into all our purposes so that the next two years will be by far the most fruitful in our history in the epoch-making events which they shall witness.

A Generous Proposition.

At a meeting of the Garrison Park Association, recently, it was voted to offer a reduction of 25 per cent on the very moderate prices fixed on the lots, to purchasers who will close the contract for such lots before January 1, and who will agree to erect a cottage during the coming autumn or the following summer. As these lots are bound to enhance in value, now is a rare opportunity for brethren to secure a summer home at reasonable rates. Prices range from $100 to $300. Address Garrison Park Company, Pentwater, Mich., or 2712 Pine St., St. Louis.

The Trained Teacher.

The marvelous revival of interest in Bible study raises the fundamental question of the teacher. What shall we do? Shall we continue the policy of recent years of allowing any one to teach who can be coaxed? Shall we continue to allow a number of inefficient teachers to lower the standard? Shall we continue to embarrass the faithful and efficient ones who strive for the best?

Shall we not as a people devoted to the Word as no other people, take the scriptural and sensible position that we will require the teachers in our Bible schools to be trained for their work? Why should the Bible school suffer by comparison in this respect with the day school?

Can we have trained teachers? It is for the church to say. The church that demands a trained preacher of the gospel is in position to demand trained teachers of the Bible for their Bible school. And is not this a legitimate and vital matter for the church to consider through the official body which chooses the preacher? May it speedily become a matter of official concern to the church that it has trained teachers in its school.

How can they be trained? Paul was wise enough to lay this matter upon the heart of Timothy as his chief duty. Let it lie upon the heart of every modern Timothy. Does the preacher say he has no time to do it or to oversee it? Show him that with trained teachers in his Bible school he is able to accomplish much more and better things than without their help. He will soon find it to be a matter of self-interest and of efficiency in his own work to have the support of a body of trained teachers.

This is a matter that is on the heart of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We have not been talking much about it but have been getting ready to make this ideal possible with the opening of the schools in the fall. We are able now to call attention to the help we offer in training every teacher now teaching and of training the young people who will be the teachers of tomorrow.

In our Superintendent's Quarterly and in our teacher's quarterlies we offer from the first week of September a program for a teacher's meeting which provides for the scientific training of every faithful and aspiring teacher. The study of the regular lesson is provided for. A regular course of instruction is outlined in the methods of Bible school work. Another line of study is outlined in the science of teaching. Nothing more can be attempted or desired by those in charge of an up-to-date school.

For the young folks who will soon be teachers a course of training is offered in the normal training course which will be conducted in "Our Young Folks," beginning the first of October. An inexpensive textbook will be used, and the lessons will be carefully edited and supplemented and brought to date in point of scholarship and research. This course will cover the whole Bible, its books, its geography and its history. In addition to this, lessons will be given in the art of Bible school work and in the science of teaching and in the study of child nature. No completer course can be offered or enjoyed anywhere.

These are the good things we have to offer in this line. We are determined to offer the best possible opportunity for the proper training of our teachers in our Bible schools. Will you lay hold?

Bay Breeze.

August days in Northern Michigan are among the pleasantest of the year. Our workers need no vacation except to be relieved from the monotony of work for a few weeks. Our climate is ideal. A Hoosier who walks along our shady streets and breathes deeply of the bay breeze, recently remarked that the Traverse City people look to be more healthy than any other people he has ever seen in all his travels from ocean to ocean.

T. P. Ullom was with us at our Sunday-school picnic at East Bay recently. Over 500 people were present on that occasion. All kinds of athletic sports were engaged in. The ministers' race did not come off, notwithstanding the prolonged applause of the anxious multitude of picknickers; for the ministers had previously agreed not to distinguish themselves in any such manner.

Brother Ullom, former pastor of the church, was with us just one week. He is held in highest esteem by the church and city. His visit was the occasion of several obeying their Lord in baptism. We have had over 75 additions to the church since the beginning of the present pastorate, and these have not been reported in any of our papers.

Recently our cradle roll committee gave a reception to our babies and their mothers. Our cradle roll now has upon it 260 names, the banner list of Michigan in any church so far as we have heard. The "Teddy bear" craze does not effect us much. A cradle roll photograph was taken. The primaries and beginners gave a literary and musical program to the babies and mothers in the auditorium. The babies accompanied with full orchestration, and the orchestra was louder than the program from the platform, but the heavenly Father understood it all and was pleased with it if others could not understand, or appreciate. It was a great day. The Lord bless the babies! The baby is the point of contact with the parents. Pastors who do not know how to hold a baby on their knees and interest it a few moments during a call have yet to learn one of the best lessons of the Christian ministry. Pastors, go after the babies until you get them, and the parents will come then.

Traverse City, Mich. J. ALLEN CANBY.

A Baptism Incident.

Our church work in Chandler is growing steadily. We will dedicate our enlarged and remodeled house about September 22. July 28 was the fourteenth anniversary of the New Zion congregation in the country, four and a half miles from here. We went out to take basket dinner with them and had a good time.

Yesterday I was called six miles in the country to see a woman and daughter who had made up their minds that they would live for Christ and that they would be baptized. A neighbor and his wife were invited to go with us. We were met by the husband, who told us that his wife and daughter desired baptism, but did not wish to be baptized unless he would be. "But," said he, "I can not, for I was baptized when a child, into the Lutheran Church." I reached for my Bible, but he said, "Let's go to the house, where all can hear." After being introduced to the wife and daughter, and after a short prayer, I told them that I wished to read the Scriptures on the subject of baptism. I read the following: Matt. 3:5-17; 28:19; Mark 1:3-11; 16:16; John 3:22-24; 4:1-3; Acts 2:36-41; 8:12, 13; 8:26-40; 9:1-19; 10:47-48; 16:14-15; 16:25-34; 18:8; 19:1-7.

I prefaced the last by the statement that it was similar to the case now in hand, for certain ones had thought they had received a valid baptism, but when taught the way of the Lord more perfectly, they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus. After reading this text I then read Rom. 6:1-6, and compared with Acts 8:38-39. We were all delighted to hear the brother then respond, "Well, I have made up my mind that I will be baptized, for that will put an end to doubts which I sometimes have." We all went to the water's edge and there, upon confession of their faith, they were all "baptized into the Name of the Lord Jesus." For their conversion, great credit is due to Brother Heller, the neighbor who went with me, and who was similarly converted about two years ago. May the good Lord shower rich blessings upon them all.

The Last Appeal.

The books of the Foreign Society close for the current missionary year at high noon Monday, September 30. This is, therefore, our final appeal for this year. The friends are waking up. If we receive as much from September 6 to September 30 this year as we received last year, we will reach the $300,000.

Victory is in sight! Let no one fail now. Let there be showers of gifts from every source. Remember, $300,000 insures a great convention at Norfolk. Money can be telegraphed at the last moment.

We will announce results promptly. Be ready to join us in the doxology. But to help to make its singing possible send a liberal gift now!

Breaking Ground Day of the Missionary Training School.

On August 29 the first steps were taken toward the realization of the Centennial plans of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, when ground was broken for the new missionary training school and mission rooms at Indianapolis, Ind. The opening services were held in the Irvington Church, where a large crowd was assembled, among whom were visitors from Illinois, Ohio, Kansas, Michigan, Kentucky, South Carolina, Florida, Mexico and many parts of Indiana. Mrs. Moses, the national president, gave the principal address; representatives from the American and Foreign Societies had been invited to speak, but in their absence informal talks were made by Mrs. Jameson and Mrs. Atkinson, ex-presidents of the organization, and by others, closely identified with its work. The audience then adjourned to the lot where the school is to be built, and after a brief address by the Centennial secretary, the ground was broken, while all repeated in concert the national and state mottoes: "The love of Christ constraineth us," and "Love never faileth."

Mrs. Moses, president of the board; Mrs. Cunningham and Mrs. Wells, Indiana's president and vice-president; Mrs. Ferris, the most generous giver to the enterprise, and Mrs. Harrison used bright, new spades for this ceremony, which were furnished by Mrs. Ferris. A heart-felt prayer by Allan B. Philputt closed the simple and appropriate service.

The building which was formally begun at this time is to be a four-story, fire-proof structure of gray brick, with white stone trimmings. On the ground floor will be located the storage rooms and heating plant, and class rooms for domestic science and other branches. The second story will be the main floor, and here will be the offices of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the library and the administration offices of the school; the chapel will be in a wing to itself and will seat about 250 persons. The two upper floors will be devoted to dormitories and to the dining-room and kitchen. The building is to cost about $75,000—the superb lot on which it is located has been paid for and cost $25,000.

Thus was begun an enterprise which means much, not only to the woman's board, but to the entire church. The cry of the day is for trained men and women, and the need for skilled labor is as urgent in religious as in commercial, educational and scientific work. This is an attempt among the Disciples of Christ to furnish facilities for training Christian workers. The encouragement that has been given it shows that it commends itself to the judgment of the church. It was planned to spend an average of $10,000 on each of our Centennial missions; already there has been pledged to the training school, $52,000; about $36,000 of this amount has been paid into the treasury of our board. This school plans large things for the work, and it has been appropriately met by an era of large giving; there has been one gift of $25,000, another of $5,000, another of $3,000, another of $1,000, and fourteen or fifteen rooms have been taken at $500 a piece—and there are assurances that other generous offerings will be added to these.

A beautiful feature is that so many are memorials to the dear dead; the whole building is in memory of a beloved mother, and is to be known as the Sarah Davis Deterding Memorial; the chapel is a memorial to W. H. H. Graham, a noble husband and father; one of the rooms is in memory of an only son; the whole enterprise is thus invested with the "tender grace of a day that is dead," and might be truly called The House of Loving Remembrance.

Centennial Secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Wisconsin Convention.

The annual conventions of the Wisconsin Christian Missionary Association, and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will be held with the Footville church, September 19-22, and as our past conventions have been the "best yet" we are anxious that this one be no exception to the rule.

For a few years past most of the addresses at these meetings have been given by preachers outside the state; and while these have been excellent and helpful without exception, and these brethren have attended by our solicitation at sacrifice to themselves, yet it has kept our own workers out of the harness to quite a degree, and, no doubt has discouraged them coming to the convention. Now we wish to get the home talent into the discussion of our problems; and, as each section has its own problems, the workers on each particular field are better fitted to solve them.

We therefore earnestly desire that each church shall send at least three delegates with something definite to present to the convention along the line of Bible school work, Christian Endeavor and reporting what they have done during the year, their present condition, what they have before them for next year, and what they will try to do for missions, and anything else that will be of interest.

Brethren, if we have a message to Wisconsin, nothing but the delivery of the message will relieve us of the responsibility. Will you be the one to shirk? Let every delegate come filled with enthusiasm, and the spirit of God, and prayer in his heart that the Father will abundantly bless us in our planning for the giving of our message.

A Call to Prayer.

On September 17 the great state of Oklahoma is to vote on the adoption of the constitution and also vote on the prohibition clause. I hear that the whisky men have made up $1,000,000 to carry the new state for whisky. All mails are crowded with their misleading literature. They are circulating a tract that proposes to be that of the "Citizens' League," but which is absolutely nothing but the saloon men's scheme. Brethren, beware.

Brethren over the United States, help us, or Oklahoma is cursed for generations to come. If we succeed at the polls September 17 we can invite people from all other states to bring their sons and daughters and enjoy our new Christian state. Christians of other states who desire to do missionary work, come or send temperance workers. Those who can not come or send, spend much of your time in earnest prayer for the workers of Oklahoma. Saloon men in a solid body will meet at the polls September 17. Let all Christians vote as they pray.

Kentucky State Convention.

The church and people of Latonia send greetings, the city throws wide her doors, and the mayor joins the minister and our members in extending a hearty invitation to attend the state convention to be held here September 16-19, 1907.

Where it is—Latonia is a thriving town of about six thousand, just out of Covington, on the L. & N. R. R. at the junction of the K. C. division and the Louisville Short Line, and connected by street car with Cincinnati, Covington, Newport, Ludlow, Bellevue and Dayton.

How to get there—Buy ticket to Ludlow over the Q. & C., to Covington over the C. & O., L. & N. or K. C. Get off all L. & N. trains at Latonia. All trains at these points will be met by the reception committee, but should you be missed by the "White Caps," just take an electric car for Latonia, get off at Franklin St., and report at the church, a half block away.

Entertainment—Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free to all who send names in advance to Mrs. Kate Dickson, Latonia, Ky. Meals and lunches will be served by the ladies of the church at reasonable prices, while Cincinnati hotels and restaurants may be patronized by those who so desire. We are preparing for a great gathering, and shall be satisfied with nothing less. Come and let us rejoice together.

OBITUARY.

SMITH.

Edward Charles, infant son of Bro. C. E. Smith, former minister at Pine Flats, now of Altoona, Pa., died August 10, of congestion of the lungs, after a siege of cholera infantum. Sister Smith, the mother, was formerly Miss Tryphena Cresswell, of this place, and had been on a visit to her mother near here with her sick babe for several weeks, where every effort was made to restore it; but Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," and at His bidding the guileless spirit of Edward left the little emaciated body and went to dwell with the angels, to await the coming of parents, brothers and sisters to that city where "there shall be no night." The funeral took place from Pine Flats Church Sunday afternoon, August 11. Interment in a family burying ground.

The Alpha of Our Country Church

By GEORGE BURLEY EVANS

It might be a revelation to many to know that the first congregation organized in America of those who call themselves simply Christians, or Disciples of Christ, was a country church. The first Pentecostal parish ministered to by the elder Campbell was a rural congregation. I refer to the genesis of our work in the establishment of the Brush Run Church in Washington county, Pennsylvania.

This building housed a company of Disciples, who were members of the first Christian Church in America, that at Brush Run.

This church, which marks the "in the beginning" of our movement, was situated two miles southeast of West Middletown, on the farm of Paul Dunkle, now the property of Thomas Miller, in Hopewell township. It was built by John Boyd, and though small and cheap, the infant denomination was not able to pay for it immediately. After waiting two years for his money, Mr. Boyd brought suit before the squire against George Sharp, one of the deacons of the new church, and Thomas Sharp, who let the contract for the work, for the balance due on it. Judgment for $93.60 debt and interest to date was entered August 11, 1813, on the esquire's docket. This debt was canceled by payment May 9, 1814.

For several years this simple structure was used as a place of worship by the new sect. Thomas Campbell, in 1813, removed to Ohio, locating at Cambridge. Congregations being organized in other surrounding places, the Brush Run church was much depleted in membership by removals to these several offsprings. Thus the historic Brush Run Church fell into disuse.

About the year Bethany College was founded the deserted building was bought by George McFadden, who moved it to West Middletown and used it for a smithy's shop. In 1869, after receiving appointment as postmaster, he opened his office in this same building.

But in this same town, West Middletown, Pa., which boasts of possessing the material remains of the first meeting-house of the Church of Christ in America, is also found the spiritual successor of that able congregation of saints that met weekly at the historic Brush Run Chapel to break bread. The present West Middletown Church of Christ is one of the twin daughters of the old Brush Run Church. If I am not mistaken, the mother church, as a mere matter of convenience, gave birth to two separate congregations, one meeting in Buffalo, the other in Middletown.

This latter congregation has survived the vicissitudes of almost a century. It was my privilege to minister to this historic charge during two years of my course in Bethany College.

The hallowed memories of the Campbells, its proximity to the Brush Run site and Thomas Campbell's early home, the immortal influence of such pioneers in the pulpit as the Campbells, the McKeevers, Isaac Errett and W. K. Pendleton, and the later ministry of such modern masters of the Master Art as Carpenter, Wilfley, the Willetts, et al., contributed in making my stay among the saints at West Middletown a most sacred service.

The Present Church, West Middleton, Pennsylvania.

The first building used for worship by our people in West Middletown was a small brick structure. It still stands in the village, but is now turned into a private residence. In this ivy-clad chapel the aged Thomas Campbell oft broke the Bread of Life to souls hungering and thirsting after righteousness. When so blind that he must needs be led by the hand into the pulpit, we still see him ministering to his faithful flock. But it was not a case of the "blind leading the blind." He had so steadfastly gazed at the Sun of Righteousness as to blur his earth sight.

The present structure is a neat frame building, bought some years ago from the Methodists. Cyrus Yocum, a graduate of Bethany College is the present pastor.

Fairview, W. Va.

A New Country Church.

Dedicated a new house at Camargo, Montgomery county. After a talk at the morning service I undertook to raise the $770 yet to be paid on this neat frame house—worth at least $2,500. We finally succeeded in securing the cash and pledges, $784.50. President J. W. McGarvey was with us and preached on the selection and appointment of officers at the afternoon service and H. D. Clark joined us in laying on hands and a good corps of officers was appointed. Brother Clark gave us a sermon in the afternoon also. Ten and one-half months ago, as the result of a request to suggest a man to hold a meeting there, J. W. McGarvey, Jr., went to them and began to preach the gospel in a barn. There were only six members, and now there are seventy-two—many of them being brought together in that meeting. W. L. Ewers, a student, is preaching half time for the church. A meeting was continued for a week by Prof. W. H. Cord. As far as the writer can remember this is the first new organization formed in any of the Blue Grass counties in the immediate region of Central Kentucky in the rural sections, and having built a house of worship. One in the edge of Clark and Montgomery was formed a few years ago, but they did not build.

We confidently expect this congregation to continue to grow and to help in the solution of the problems of both the country and the town. The picture was taken by Miss Haddon—a young lady who has been walking on crutches for fourteen years, and is a devoted Disciple of Christ. H. W. Elliott,

Sulphur, Ky. Secretary.

Camargo Church.

A Mountain Church.

Baker's Chapel is a historic church on Lookout Mountain of civil war fame. It is a "union church." The Congregationalists and the Presbyterians and the Disciples of Christ have organizations that meet in it and the Baptists and other bodies use it. I preached in it once a month during two years and my wife taught day school there during two school years. The picture is of the Sunday-school. It is to be noticed that parents and friends as well as children are in attendance.

Baker's Chapel.

Moreover, the people had not prepared or "primped" for the picture, but a stray visitor from the North happened along and took it. Many of the Texas churches have members in them that made confession in Baker's Chapel and in a humble way this has been a center of light and learning from antebellum times. Claris Yeuell.

Draughon's Chain of Thirty Colleges.

Prof. John F. Draughon, president of Draughon's chain of thirty colleges located in seventeen states, one in this city, recently purchased the Spencerian Business College, Washington, D. C., one of the finest business colleges established in the United States.

Professor Draughon expects to open business colleges in Maryland, Pennsylvania and the Virginias and will make Washington "Northeastern Headquarters." The home office will, however, remain at Nashville, Tenn.

Draughon's company is incorporated, $300,000.00 capital. It recently paid 20 per cent dividend. About eight thousand students attend Draughon's colleges annually.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Meeting at Bolivar, Mo.

Our cause in this city has struggled along against obstacles for many years. We are not strong numerically in Polk county. It was a great undertaking for the little church at Bolivar to plan for a meeting such as Wilhite and Tuckerman hold. We built a large tabernacle out of native lumber that would seat 800 to 1,000 people. Some of the other churches stood by and wondered how we ever expected to fill it with people. Brother Tuckerman and myself held the meeting for nine days before Brother Wilhite arrived, doing our best to get everything ready. We had 12 additions when he arrived and at our Sunday night service every seat in our tabernacle was taken. Brother Tuckerman had a great chorus. They sang those splendid songs, such as "There is Power in the Blood" and "Glory for Me," with enthusiasm and fervor that brought joy to every heart. Brother Wilhite was with us just 19 days. There were 100 added to the church in 22 days. The first one to come was a little Sunday-school girl and the one-hundredth one was a man 75 year old, who had spent many years in sin. The end of the meeting is not yet. One man confessed Christ last Lord's day and the people are studying the Bibles as they have not done for many years trying to find out whether these things be true. One good pastor in the city preached on baptism Sunday morning and the people are studying to see whether his position is scriptural or not. As far as results in the way of actual additions to the church is concerned this is as large a meeting as has ever been held by any religious body in Polk county. Brother Wilhite left behind in Bolivar a united church and a happy people. The expenses of the meeting were all met by free will offerings. The field here is ripe unto the harvest and if the state mission work of Missouri would guarantee us assistance to the amount of $50 per month so that we could employ one of our best evangelists for Polk, Hickory and Dallas counties, we could easily take them for Christ and our plea.

J. H. Jones.

Northwest Texas Campmeeting.

This began at Knox City August 10 and lasted sixteen days. There were 45 additions, most all by baptism. Of this number 18 came the last day. Knox City is a fine new town. There is no church house of our people in the city. Our people hoped to erect a "union church house," but were soon shut out by other "orthodox" churches. The camp meeting was a great blessing in this new country. Our little band is planning to erect a house as soon as possible. This was the sixth campmeeting I have assisted in during the last six years, and I regard this as the greatest missionary work of my life. All of our great schools in Texas had representatives on the ground. President O. J. Wood could not attend, hence I was asked to look after the management of the campmeeting in addition to preaching two sermons a day. The railroad is just being completed through this section and people are moving in by thousands; hence the value of these campmeetings can never be estimated. I am now on my way to Brownwood, Texas, for a four or five weeks' meeting.

Georgia.

Brother and Sister P. H. Mears, who have been visiting Winder and other points in Northeast Georgia, have returned to their work at the Second church, Augusta.——J. H. Wood, of Winder, is holding a meeting for D. R. Piper at Watkinsville.——The Griffin district will hold their annual convention at Hampton beginning Wednesday night, September 25.——A. J. Mize has just closed a good meeting with 15 additions for F. L. Adams at Concord.——The writer has just closed a few days' meeting at Dial, Fannin county, with some visible and some invisible results. He began a meeting September 1 at Lowell, Carroll county.——Why do not more of the Georgia preachers report their meetings through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? It is our state paper.

Acworth. E. L. Shelnutt.

California.

Preparations are being made for the greatest year's work in our history. The state board has laid out its plans for the year; and these plans call for almost twice as much money as has ever been raised before. Old missions are to be maintained, new ones opened, weak churches assisted, and two or three evangelists kept in the field all the time.——The corner-stone of the new church in South Berkeley has just been laid. The building will cost about $20,000 and will be one of the handsomest structures on the coast. This is one of our mission points, and was started only about two years ago by our city evangelist, E. W. Darst. J. M. Hunter is the present pastor. ——The past week also witnessed the beginning of a house of worship in the city of Vallejo, another of our mission fields. A. O. Hushaw is pastor, and God is using him to accomplish great things in that important center.——Down in Porterville we recently purchased the Methodist house of worship. G. D. King is pastor, and expects to take possession about September 1.—— In the city of Salinas we bought out the Presbyterians and have already taken possession. We have the finest piece of church property there. G. E. Williams is pastor, which means that the success of the undertaking is assured.——The churches of Greater San Francisco have just held a rally at Alameda. The meeting was presided over by Dr. Rigdon, president of the Reconstruction Commission. Reports were made by the men who made the canvass in the east for funds to rebuild the churches lost in the earthquake, R. L. Cave, F. S. Ford, P. C. Macfarlane and the writer. Reports from the A. C. M. S. as to the amount of money collected to date helped to dispel much of the gloom which has hung over our people since that fatal day in April, 1906. But the end is not yet in sight. Every church should be represented in this offering, for only by so doing will the work of reconstruction become a reality. If after what has been done we fail to come up with a creditable offering, we shall place upon the church a reproach the present generation will never outlive.——Another thing. California does not propose to accept this money as a dog accepts a bone, to go off and lie down in the shade and enjoy it. By no means. In accepting help from you in this crisis California accepts a new measure of responsibility for the kingdom of God in this great western country. You have a right to demand that we do more for Church Extension, Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Foreign Missions, the National Benevolent Association, the American Christian Missionary Society, than we have ever done before. And we will do it.——P. C. Macfarlane has returned east to continue the work of securing funds for this purpose. Brethren, pray for this man and help him, for there is not a more worthy man among us. The service he has rendered the church in this state, the splendid creative and executive ability he has dedicated to Christ, together with the sacredness of the cause he goes to plead, entitle him to confidence, love and cooperation of every man in our brotherhood.

M. A. Cassaboom, who has had charge of the Kissimmee church for the past year, has closed his services. He has left for Ocoee and will go from there to Lexington, Ky., to enter the university with a view to still better preparation for the ministry. Brother Cassaboom is a good preacher and no one felt that a change on this account was desirable. The brethren here overreached themselves in attempting to build a larger and finer house than was needed, and then the building cost more than was necessary, a considerable part of the work having to be pulled down and put up by other than the first builders. To add to the rest of the troubles some of the strongest members financially moved away, leaving a few faithful ones with but little money, and a number of "raw recruits," to use a military phrase, to maintain the struggle. Under these circumstances but little could be hoped for. Brother Cassaboom felt that he was not doing the good he ought to and resigned. One very discouraging feature in the case is that we have but little material to work upon, and the town is almost completely under sectarian influence.

Texas Missions.

Many of my friends think strangely of the fact that I have recently engaged in public and oral discussion.

We have a strong (comparatively) anti-organization element in Texas. The leaders have misrepresented the organized work and many good people will not work with us nor will they hear us. I accepted the opportunity of public discussion believing that we could thus get the ears of many of these misguided people. In this I was not mistaken. Large audiences attended the two debates which have been held. The first was with L. S. White, of Dallas, held in the First Christian Church, Dallas—an anti-society church. The second was at Mt. Vernon, with President A. B. Barrett, of the Childress Institute. These were both men from the "Bible college," Nashville, Tenn., and were representative men of their school of thought.

We have evidence that great good was done. No less than four ministers who formerly opposed our missionary work have declared themselves convinced, as a result of hearing or reading the discussion, that the work had been greatly misrepresented and are now with us for a united effort.

The Mason-White debate was stenographically reported and is published in our monthly journal, "Texas Missions." It is believed that there is nowhere to be found so complete and substantial argument against anti-ism as in the half dozen issues containing this debate.

In these issues we have articles by Dr. H. G. Fleming on "Should We Divide Over Missionary Societies?" and Chalmers McPherson's paper read at our late state convention, "Our Twenty-one Years of Mission Work" in Texas. We will send these six issues of "Texas Missions" to any address for 25 cents. Send 25 cents with your address to box 280, Sta. A, Dallas, Texas. The 25 cents will go into the Texas mission fund and you will get the debate, et al.

Our summer campaign has proved a splendid success. W. A. Boggess and his helper have planted a promising church at Corpus Christi to which Charles H. Caton is now ministering. Mathis, Beeville and other South Texas points have been "revived." J. B. Faulkner and daughter, aided by Cooksey and Davis, have saved a dead church at Nocona. The Second Church, Houston, had a fine meeting with Thomas L. Cooksey as evangelist. State Evangelist D. A. Leak held good meetings at Woodville, Carthage, Kountze. W. L. Morrow has just established a new church at Aberdeen. G. N. Weaver, Chas. R. Cook and H. A. Smith have done good work in the Northeast Texas district. The Hillsboro campaign has been unprecedented in our district and report 200 conversions with accompanying good work.

The First Church, Fort Worth, has become a living link for state missions. Ward Russell, now located in North Fort Worth, is their missionary. Among our thirty-odd workers there are many other cases of conspicuous success but the lines are drawing out until I am admonished that there are others who must be heard.

Texas has now eight living link missionaries.

A Good Country Church Meeting.

We had a great meeting at Pleasant Run, a country church five miles from Yorktown, where I preach one Sunday per month. There were 26 additions—20 baptisms. Ten homes were made Christian homes. Seventeen of those who came into Christ were parents. Two ministers, Bros. J. A. Jester and O. P. Snodgrass, are members of this congregation. They have been loyal defenders of "the faith" in times past and have sowed the seed that shall continue to be the "power of God unto salvation." My family was with me and we were royally provided for by Brother Jester. Jonas Jester led our singing and his daughter, Miss Grace, was organist. Their faithfulness and help greatly added to our meeting. This is a loyal congregation and we expect great things from them in the future.

Hearsays and Guesses from the Empire State.

Never has the time in the Empire State appeared more propitious to a forward movement all along the line than now. The churches are equipped with a talented and progressive ministry that measures up to a standard of high excellence, and the adaptation of the man to the church or the church to the man is providentially suggestive.

Why not enter into the evangelistic campaign all through the state this fall and winter conducted by home talent? Certainly the circumstances are unusually favorable and mutual exchanges could be arranged that would be to the interest and profit of the churches engaged in such a plan.

Is there any tangible reason why such an arrangement would not be wise and practical, and productive of surprising results in the way of numerical and spiritual strength, and thousands of dollars saved by the churches for home use?

A fund of $10,000 is insufficient to do any great work in evangelizing in New York state, but were this sum placed in the hands of our loyal missionary band it would enable it to amply care for the missions at present under its charge and to enter some one of our populous cities to begin a new work through our state evangelist.

Perchance the sum contributed to the use of the State Missionary Society exceeded $10,000, I fancy our patient and faithful treasurer, Brother Daniel Krebrel, would accept it without a tremor nor consider it an added burden to his multiple duties. He is a man of large experience in matters financial and an expert accountant.

Under a sudden alarm of such a contingency—a $10,000 inflow—a vigorous protest might possibly be waged on the part of Dr. Long, for nearly a decade the zealous president of the state society, but with a little persistent persuasion from the churches he could be induced perhaps to suspend his obligations.

D. C. Tremaine, corresponding secretary of the New York Christian Missionary Society, began a state missionary campaign Sunday, August 18, at North Tonawanda with the Payne Avenue Church, in harmony with a plan recommended by the finance committee of which Dr. A. G. Doust, of Syracuse, was chairman, at the late convention of the society in New York city. The finance committee recommended to the state board that a state-wide campaign of education be conducted by our secretary, he, so far as possible, to visit every congregation in the state. A schedule of dates has been arranged and pastors and people should acquaint themselves with the time the visit to their church may be expected.

Whether we are glad or grieved when we think of God's omnipresence depends upon our attitude toward him. If we are his children and living in loving obedience the fact of his presence is a most joyful thought.

So it is when we think of God's omniscience. He knows all things. Like all ideas of God, like our thought of space and of eternity, this is a thought too large for us. Does this stupendous, unthinkable thought frighten us? Shall we not rather have comfort in it?

Here are some of the workings of his omniscience which are for our help. Jehovah said to Moses, "I know thee by name" (Exodus 33:13). This was to comfort Moses in an hour of great sorrow. Jesus said that his sheep knew his voice, he knows his sheep by name. He knows your name and mine and tenderly and faithfully calls us.

What if he should forget our name and should say, "I never knew you."

Our heavenly Father knows all our needs and knows them before we are conscious of them to ask him. This is the teaching of Jesus in the sixth of Matthew. The small matters of our food and clothing are not beneath God's knowledge.

God knows our temptations, for Paul assures us that he will not allow us to be tempted above that we are able but will with the temptation make the way of escape. Read 1 Cor. 10:13. We also are assured of the sympathy of Jesus from his knowledge of our temptations. What hopelessness to us if he did not know.

Similar is the thought of the psalmist who wrote, "He knoweth our frame. He remembereth that we are dust."

God knows our sorrows. The sad burden was laid upon the shoulders of his son who became the man of sorrows and bore our griefs.

The psalmist in 44:21 was conscious of the knowledge of God comprehending the secrets of his heart. If they are secrets which should not lodge there we may well tremble. But if the secrets of our heart are the longings for the better part, if they are the plannings for the things we have not attained, how happy we may be in the consciousness that God knows our secrets.

There is a knowledge of God which may well make us tremble. In Psalm 90:8 the psalmist wrote of his secret sins being set in the light of God's countenance. What a startling figure. How bright the shining of his countenance. How futile to expect to hide from the light thereof.

A comforting thought is written in the last words of the first psalm. Jehovah knoweth the way of the righteous. We may not always know it, but we shall make a safe journey if Jehovah knows it.

Let us have refuge in this infinite knowledge of God which covers all time past and all eternity to come. This knowledge is for our help who hope in him.

Let us repose in its sympathy and rest in its amplitude.

God's Omnipotence.—1 Chron. 29:9-13.

DAILY READINGS.

M. Whatever Pleases Him.	Ps. 115:1-3.
T. "Nothing Too Hard."	Jer. 32:16, 17, 27.
W. "All Things Possible."	Matt. 19:23-26.
T. "Able to Do."	Ephes. 3:20, 21.
F. "Omnipotent."	Rev. 19:1-6.
S. "All Power."	Matt. 28:16-18.
S. Topic.

David was impressed with the thought of God's creative power when he wrote, "When I consider the heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast made." And again he wrote, "The heavens declare the glory of God, the firmament showeth his handiwork."

Who is not moved by the thought of the vast reach, the eternal and infinite persistence of God's power as he gazes into the heavens this beautiful September night? He holds our world and all worlds in his hand. He guides the stars in their courses through trackless space.

Paul says that the things of God may be known by looking at what he has made, even his everlasting power and deity so that a man is without excuse who does not keep God in his knowledge.

How should we feel when we think of the omnipotence of God? How impressive to know that he is the Almighty! That all power in the world is from him and that from him all the universe proceeds.

Our feeling and thought will depend upon our relation to him. If we are not obeying him we shall probably feel that his power is a menace to us. We shall be afraid of him. We shall keep ourselves away from him and feel on the defensive. We shall blame him for being so strong when we are so weak.

But if we are his children in faith and love and life—how beautiful to think of our Almighty Father! The little child rejoices in the physical strength of its father. By and by the child comes to know that its life and home and all it has are from the strength of its father. How it glories in it and delights in it.

Let us so learn to think of God. It is his power and goodness that fitted up this world for us to live in. His power made us and endowed us. His power cares for us. He cares for all his creatures and so for us he provides our daily food and shelter. How delightful to pray, Give us this day our daily bread.

Is that all? His power delivers us from the domination of sin. In redemption he is greater than in creation. Do we fear the power of Satan? Do we know the thrill of his dominion? Have we realized the power of God in Christ to redeem us? His might is for that.

His power is strong enough to deliver us from the grave. Here is the final triumph of omnipotence over the power of Satan. It was not easy for the Almighty to redeem Jesus from the grave. Paul writes that it was only accomplished by the working of the strength of his might. Paul uses the four mightiest words in the Greek language to express the output of omnipotence which dragged Jesus from the tomb. We shall be saved by the working of the same power which is "toward us who believe."

The last word gives us the key. Jesus said once, "All things are possible to him that believes." And again, "According to your faith be it unto you." How much we may have which we do not now hold when we increase our faith in God and in Christ.

Shall we not put him to the test by obedient faith? Shall we not consequently enjoy the greatness of his gracious power?

A Witness for Christ.

Topic September 18, John 17:8; Acts 1:8.

When we speak of "witnesses for Christ," we use the language in an accommodated sense. A witness is one who has personal knowledge of the events and persons concerning which testimony is to be given. This is illustrated in the choosing of Matthias to be one of the witnesses with the eleven. He was chosen from among those men "who had companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto the day that he was taken up from us." He was to be a witness with them of the resurrection of the Lord.

We can only witness to that of which we have actual first-hand information. In this sense we may testify of our faith in and devotion to the Lord. We may declare the testimony of the gospel, which we have received from others. Our "testimony" will be of value in proportion to the fidelity of our lives to the faith which we profess. The witness of humble but faithful lives is one of the mighty factors in the spread of the gospel. Of the saints of old it is written: "They overcame by the blood of the Lamb and the testimony which they held." To overcome evil in our own selves, by faith in the blood of Christ and in his power to save, fits us to testify of his grace and commends his gospel to others. And I find myself wondering if we have not really lost something of worth out of our religious services by practically abandoning the "social meeting" of our fathers and mothers, which correspond very nearly to the "class meeting" of the earlier Methodists. Perhaps they were crude and irksome and not over-edifying, but they cultivated the sense of personal religion, which seems almost a minus quantity now-a-days. At any rate the expression of our religious faith and affections is almost among the lost arts—and a serious loss it is to the Church.

"For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me." This language is a part of Christ's intercessory prayer—the most wonderful prayer of which there is any record in the Old or New Testaments. It is in behalf of "the men which thou gavest me out of the world," and so refers especially to the chosen twelve. In a peculiar sense it applies to them as it can not to any since that day. Yet we who have not seen and yet have believed may declare his words unto our own generation, thus becoming witnesses of the manifold grace of God, which has appeared unto all men teaching us, that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. (Titus 2:11-15).

As a preparation for witnessing unto Christ "both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and in Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth" they were to receive power, after that the Holy Spirit came upon them. Now as these twelve men and those upon whom they laid their hands could not thus declare the Christ unto the "uttermost parts of the earth," it would seem that this enduement with power should be continuous. And never was there greater need than to-day for this power of the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven that men may testify the gospel of the grace of God to men. Apart from the Spirit of Truth to guide and comfort, we need to receive power. We have grown strangely fearful of the supernatural in religion in these last days. But a religion that is not supernatural is hardly sufficient to lift us out of ourselves and the meshes of materialism into which we have fallen. If Paul, in the midst of the luxuries and licentiousness of ancient Corinth needed this power from above, surely we need to be thus reinforced. His speech and his preaching were not in enticing words of men's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, that their faith might not rest in the wisdom of men but in the power of God. The Death of Moses.—Deut. 1:1-2.

Memory verses, 10-12.

Golden Text.—Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.—Psalm 116:15.

Read chapter 31 for an account of the last acts of Moses in preparation for his death.

Read chapter 32 for the superb song in which he summed up his belief about God and his understanding of God's relation to Israel. It includes: first, a statement of the might and perfection of Jehovah; second, a recital of his mercies to Israel; third, a denunciation of Israel's ingratitude and unfaithfulness; fourth, a prediction that suffering shall be the punishment for this sin; fifth, the triumphant assurance that in the end God's vengeance will be turned only against his enemies, and that his people shall be avenged and defended. The argument is plain prose, but the chapter is splendid poetry.

Read chapter 33 for the blessing of the tribes by Moses. Compare Jacob's blessing, Genesis 49. The benediction of a dying man was supposed to have special efficacy. Remember the incident of Isaac's blessing, where the magical potency of the blessing was supposed to hold good even when obtained by fraud. Even to this day many people, perhaps most people, are considerably influenced by the blessing or curse of a dying man. The words of Moses in his blessing of the tribes, like those of Jacob, are of a cryptic and obscurely prophetic character.

Chapter 34 tells of the death of Moses and his burial without human hands, tells how Joshua succeeded to the command, and summarizes the work of Moses.

Make the lesson an occasion for summing up the character and work of Moses. What qualities of character and ability did he exhibit? He had executive ability. He had a naturally imperious nature, as most good executives have, but this was softened by the knowledge that he was but using a power which had been given to him for a purpose. So he showed patience and meekness, though he was by nature inclined to impatience and perhaps to pride. Whatever his faults, the saving strength of Moses' character, as of the subtle Jacob's, lay in his peculiar openness to the divine will and mind. There was a certain fine sensitiveness to spiritual things which made him a fit medium for revelation. We say that God is always accessible to men. But all men are not equally accessible to God. Some—even some good men—are spiritually stolid and phlegmatic. With others the whole nature is sensitively attuned to catch the least breath of influence and direction which moves from God to man, as the receiver of the "wireless" is delicately adjusted to catch and register the minutest vibration which comes from the distant key.

What was the work of Moses? What did he contribute to the history of Israel? Abraham was the father of the family; Moses was the founder of the nation. The tribal elements traced their common descent from Abraham. The constructive genius of Moses made these elements into a nation. National unity was still very incomplete as subsequent history showed. But just as the American colonies exhibited more unity during the revolution than they did in the period immediately following the war of independence, so the Hebrew tribes, which were united under Moses for the gaining of independence, fell apart when their independence had been gained. Permanent unity must be worked out by later constructive statesmen.

President Brown found it necessary to remove his invalid wife to the country, for neither prayer nor most skillful treatment seemed to touch her case. She was tired and nervous and needed the bracing air and quiet rest of rural life, apart from the scenes and unwelcome noises of city life where the many harrowing things had transpired to unnerve her.

But President Brown had found his funds all exhausted six weeks after the disaster, since many of the subscriptions made upon that morning of his marvelous healing had been repudiated when the scandal was published, and he was left now with nothing but his home. His congregation was unorganized and scattered and his own good name had become a word among the rabble and he could not hope to obtain a living from preaching, there at least. What should he do?

He knew some friends in the far West, who had encouraged him to invest in some farming land some time before, so his mind was turned thither. The trip would do his wife good and the change was just what she needed; he would sell his home and go there; possibly he might find work of a spiritual character in the rural settlements and at any rate he would be able to earn his living from the soil. The thought grew upon him until an opportunity came to sell his home at a fair price. He closed the deal and in another week the whole family were safely ensconced in a Pullman sleeper, speeding toward the land of the setting sun.

As the train sped on over hill and plain or wound through mountain passes and spanned the great rivers of the continent, the president only thought and cared for the little flock and the invalid wife of his charge; with this he was kept busy.

After the fourth day's travel a gentleman stepped aboard the train at a western town and accosted them in a familiar way. Mr. Brown recognized him as a fellow-student and classmate, whom he had known in college days. Glad to meet each other, they sat far into the night talking of the past and the prospects of the West. This man was a superintendent of missionary activity in the state where the president was going and was very solicitous to have him take up certain work in that region. Their ways parted at midnight and the next noon brought the Browns to their destination.

The fresh western breeze and the change of scenery, together with a few days of country life, soon gave Mrs. Brown her rosy cheeks and returning health; and kind friends did all they could to lighten her cares by attending to the children and thus made her welcome and happy. Mr. Brown busied himself with visiting the country and inquiring into safe investments. He did not have far to look to find any amount of property in the market, nor smooth-tongued agents to sell it. The strange thing about it all seemed to him that so many wanted to sell; in fact there was no one who would not sell, if his price could be obtained. This put him upon his guard, but upon a second and closer investigation, he found that the population of the Pacific Northwest was made up of people who were of a roving disposition. Few of them lived in one place longer than five or ten years at a time, and many more moved every year, and some every season, so that their moving outfits were kept in readiness all the time, and they were found ready to go on short notice. An instance was told that will give the reader some idea of the instability of this western population. At a certain place, a church of the Congregational order was to be organized, with some thirty-eight members; but between the calling of the council and the time of its meeting, which was less than a month, all but four of the charter members moved away.

Another instance, which is "unusual," of course, as is everything else in that region, a pastor was called to a certain place rated as a thousand dollar field, and his support was subscribed for generously. But at the end of the first quarter his living fell off one-half, and before the year was half over it was found that his supporters (?) had all moved away without paying their subscriptions and he was left to work out his living as best he could. Being of true New England blood, he stuck through the twelve months and installing one deacon and two trustees from among the women who remained, he persuaded them to sell the church to another denomination that was ready to try the same ground over, and he carried the money home to his church building society.

At last Mr. Brown found a section of good land that could be purchased within his means. Fruit, stock and equipment, well chosen and in fair shape; with good buildings and not too far from a flourishing town. This was the final choice, and a few weeks later found the Browns settled upon a farm, seeing to the common rounds of toil like other farmers. Everything was new and untried to them, and in many ways it was good for them. Mr. Brown had time to meditate upon the things of the past that memory brought trooping along after his plow and reaper as he toiled on day by day. But the toil grew irksome to him after a time, since it seemed that he could do so many things to a better advantage. He had spent twenty years preparing to do and doing educational and Christian work, and now he was burying his talent in the earth. The thought stung him with remorse, and from that moment he was not happy. He noticed that his wife had been silent and sober at meals, and that she did not talk with the same vivacious spirit that she had been wont to at first, and he asked her if she were feeling as well as usual. "Yes, Edward," she replied, "I am feeling better than usual physically, but to see you toiling and burying your splendid talent in this western soil for naught but the meat that perishes, makes me sad. I notice a great change in your spirit, you are growing like your work and I do not feel that it is right. Do you not think that we could let our place for a good income and find some mission church, or school, where you could serve?" Mr. Brown was silent a moment and replied that such was his mind exactly and he would see what could be done. That night he wrote his friend and classmate about work such as they had talked of, as they were journeying westward. A letter came back in a few days saying that owing to the stringency of the times the society was obliged to cut down its work in all these Western states and there was no money to use in the work they had talked about. Further, his was the twenty-fourth letter that week's mail had brought him from men seeking such work, and unlike other features of the West, it was not "unusual," for he had fully forty applications for every actual or imaginary appointment within his jurisdiction, and as it now stood every place was well manned and every dollar appropriated. Furthermore he had found this same state of affairs in all the other denominations co-operating in the territory over which he traveled. Such was his bland excuse, which in part was true, but it has been learned since that advices and copies of the scandal from Eaton had reached him, and it is not to be wondered at that he ever after maintained silence toward Mr. Brown. As he explained to a friend he did not have time to pick up a man with such a record, whether it might be true or false.

At the closing session of the convention of the National Education Association at Los Angeles, Cal., a resolution was adopted to the effect that American children show a tendency toward a disregard for constituted authority, a lack of respect for age and superior wisdom, a weak appreciation of the demands of duty, and a disposition to follow pleasure and interest rather than obligation and order. The resolution also states that this condition demands the earliest thought and action of the leaders of opinion. Conditions are about as described, and they do demand thought and action. Men do not agree as to the reason for the condition; some say it is due to the removal of the wholesome restraint of former times, and some that it is a natural reaction from that restraint. There probably is truth in both opinions, and the subject should receive the earnest thoughts of those who have at heart the best interests of all.—Gospel Messenger.

Hope.

A lonely rock by the wayside,
All fagged and seamed and rent,
Yet over its brow the daisies
Their pure, bright faces bent;
Gay columbines danced on slender stems,
And fairy trumpets blew;
From every crevice tufts of fern
And feathery grasses grew,
Till gone were the outlines sharp and bare
That might offend the eye,
And the wayside rock was a charming sight
To every passer-by.

Dear heart, alone and lonely,
Though shattered life's hopes may be,
The Lord who cares for the wayside rock
Much more will care for thee.
Thy deeds of tenderness, words of love,
Like flowers may spring and twine,
Till joy shall come into others' lives
From the very rents in thine.

Eulogy on the Bible.

BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

As all of you know there are certain truths which are so very true that we call them truisms; and yet I think we often half forget them in practice. Every thinking man, when he thinks, realizes what a very large number of people tend to forget, that the teachings of the Bible are so interwoven and entwined with our whole civic and social life, that it would be literally—I do not mean figuratively, I mean literally—impossible for us to figure to ourselves what life would be if these teachings were removed. We would lose almost all the standards by which we now judge both public and private morals; all the standards toward which we, with more or less resolution, strive to raise ourselves. Almost every man who has, by his life-work, added to the sum of human achievement of which the race is proud, of which our people are proud, almost every such man has based his life-work largely upon the teachings of the Bible. Sometimes it may have been done unconsciously, more often consciously; and among the very greatest men a disproportionately large number have been diligent and close students of the Bible at first hand. Lincoln—sad, patient, kindly Lincoln, who, after bearing upon his weary shoulders for four years a greater burden than that borne by any other man of the nineteenth century, laid down his life for the people whom living he served so well—built up his entire reading upon his early study of the Bible. He had mastered it absolutely; mastered it as later he mastered only one or two others books, notably Shakespeare; mastered it so that he became a man of one book, who knew that book and who instinctively put into practice what he had been taught therein; and he left his life as part of the crowning work of the century that has just closed. And yet some claiming to be wise sneer at the Book of Books!

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Last Glimpses of Mexico.

March 31. On the train all day and night—and Easter Sunday! Yesterday as we traversed the Mexican desert, and today as we finished up the barren lands of the Aztecs, we were not annoyed by dust, or made to suffer from the heat. The hot wave which had made March like mid-summer even as far east as New York, had waved itself out. Rain was falling along the railroad track; not enough rain to make anything wet, of course, but enough to hold the dust down till we could get past. It takes very little of that to effect a great change in the temperature at an elevation of 7,000 and 8,000 feet. It had turned cold, and even in our Pullman an overcoat was comfortable. The natives appeared taken by surprise, but I do not suppose they really prepare for anything. In the villages we passed, the young maidens and matrons of all ages stood at their doors barefooted and bareheaded, and squeezing themselves together in a bowknot to keep warm; and the male Mexicans in white cotton underwear and without any overwear, shuffled their bare sandaled feet in the gravel and let their shirts stream to the cutting, rarified breeze. Within the adobe houses you could see a fire burning blood-red in a hole in the beaten ground, and sometimes a dog or pig would get too much smoke and come out to sneeze—for, of course, there are no chimneys. The chickens were cold, too, and hovered at the threshold of the front door among the bare feet of the household, with the advantage on the fowl's part of being able to draw one leg up to warm at the breast.

All the women were not barefooted, and all the women were not sandaled; still there was sufficient bareness to give the tone effect to every picture. And bleak and barren were those pictures of abject poverty and untamed wildness. They were all the same; a cluster of square adobe cottages or straw stacks, or grimy tents; the black-haired women with babes strapped to their backs, watching us through the solemn eyes of bygone centuries; the men showing every gaudy color in their coiled blankets; beyond all, the grim, relentless mountains shutting out the world of civilization. Among these mountains the white vapors drifted and trailed till they looked as if each ridge were deep with snow. The Sierras looked like enormous hills rather than mountains, and seeing the sunlight whiten their sides to dazzling silver but showed us how high up was the level ground of the Mexican valley. Indeed, it was not long before the train was rushing into the clouds, which slipped down the mountain sides and rolled about upon the wide plain as if that plateau was the natural playground of the clouds. I suppose they couldn't rain, because there was no empty space under them for the water to drop. These tumbling, dazzling sheets of vapor are cool and clammy to the touch, but are turned to use just as the stickiest, crookedest cactus is made to contribute to man's support, for I saw several Mexicans who were saving their clothes; each one was wandering about over the grassless wastes, wearing naught but a cloud and a breechcloth.

This morning we saw the last of Mexico. The porter had us up early to fit us for an encounter with the custom-house. In the gentlemen's drawing room we met the two real estate magnates and Mr. Carter, who was almost noisy over escaping from his years of servitude in Mexico, and an Easterner who was, as usual, in a half-dazed state over "the enormous distances of you Westerners," as he said. The engineer had left us at Monterey. There was much boon companionship in our ablutions and hair-combings, and Mr. Whedon, the magnate who had once owned two million acres in Texas and had "sold out the Dakotas long ago," washed his face and wiped on somebody else's towel, just like an ordinary mortal. His foot was better and he wore his shoe without any airs. We crossed the Rio Grande about 7 a. m. It has a wide bed, made up for any emergency, but at this time it could have done nicely with a single bed, for it was pretty lean. When we left the Mexican bank to cross the bridge it was 6:45 a. m., and when we reached the American side it was 7:20 a. m. Not that it took us longer than a minute or so to cross; but when you go over the border the time changes. On entering Mexico, turn back your watch 36 minutes; on coming into the states, get that much faster. Having crossed the river, the train was held up at Laredo by the government. I must say that Jebly made the customs officials earn their money in his case. As he can't walk, he was allowed to remain in the car while one official after another was dispatched to him. One man took his money to change it from Mexican to American currency, for on the border they trade without discount. His weight of Mexican half-dollars (we saw no Mexican dollars while in the country) were reduced to a few trivial United States coins. Another man was sent to the car to look at his ticket, to make sure he was not trying to beat his way. Another man came for his tricycle check and went away to investigate that vehicle, to weigh it, shake it, and otherwise find out if it were loaded. The two million acre land magnate obligingly got the Texas time of day for his watch. Another official then came on board to find if Jebly had been farther south than Mexico City. The quarantine had been "put on the day before," and all suspects would have to lay over in Laredo two weeks for their epidemics to develop. Fortunately Jebly had not been farther south than Mexico City, though he had wanted bad enough to cross the Gulf from New Orleans and approach the capital from the Hot Lands. So he took oath with a clear conscience and was suffered to remain in the Pullman. Then the shirt-sleeved young man who had obtained the tricycle check returned and said it couldn't go on unless $1.55 were paid on it as excess baggage (it had gone all the way from New Orleans to Mexico City for 25 cents). Then another official came on and looked at Jebly, but couldn't think of anything more to require, so he told about a great railroad strike which was expected to tie up the trains about San Antonio that very day as a sort of Easter celebration. At the last moment another official came on in breathless haste to demand Jebly's nationality; and by that time the young man was so bewildered and excited that he only looked at his inquisitor dumbly, and tried to think of some suitable answer. Mr. Carter speaks up and says: "You're an American, aren't you?" Which he was, of course, and the official went away half in doubt over it.

A stock-owner of the railroad got on at Laredo to sit in the car he owned as long as it was held there. He was a prosperous-looking gentleman, but his owning part of the railroad seemed to give him no kind of content, for he told me about his indigestion until the train whistled for courage to proceed. I knew people who have indigestion, so we were warm friends at once. After he had told me of the various remedies he had tried, I suggested not eating anything at the evening meal. The stock-owner immediately returned: "But what is this stomach for?" There is nothing like traveling for being thrown with great men and engaging them in profound discourse. I might have sat about home for a lifetime without ever talking to an owner of an international railroad about indigestion.

Jebly was determined to be very economical that day, because a very elaborate lunch which he had bought in Mexico City had been stolen by the porter, who said "some Mexicans" had taken it. For breakfast that day Jebly had a cup of coffee, a dish of baked beans and bread and butter. He estimated that at the price (40 cents and 10 cents' fee to the waiter) this was the cheapest food he could take with staying qualities. He afterward pronounced it a great success. He said beans for breakfast sort of lie on your stomach all morning, so when noon comes you not only don't want any dinner, but don't want to hear of one." The Easterner, who never felt at home with us, was in the drawing room pretty often this morning. He is taking his wife and daughter back to Boston or Concord, and he is all confused over the "lines." The magnates, who have been to New York about as often as I have been to market, got out the Railroad Guide Book, and so bewildered him with its fine-print columns and schedules, showed him so many different ways he could go, with certain advantages each way has over the others, that the Easterner is like not to get back home at all. As soon as one route is mapped out for him by the colonizer, the large-tracts-man, Mr. Whedon, will say: "Yes, I've been over that road, but they don't carry a barber shop. Now, on the Big Four—" And the Easterner clasps his head. "Don't you know," says the Easterner, "you Westerners—where are you from, Mr. Whedon?"

"Chicago," says Mr. Whedon, drawing himself up.

"Yes," says the Easterner, "to us who live East you men far out here in the West simply amaze us with your immense distances, don't you know!"

Then Mr. Whedon, who has dealt so long with Oklahoma and Kansas and California that he has come to believe that he is something of an Easterner himself, squirms and smiles grimly at the colonizer and mixes up the true-blue Easterner worse than ever. This morning I was surprised to hear the colonizer break forth into a hymn, whistling both verse and chorus. I was particularly taken off guard because, judging from certain anecdotes, matter-of-fact exclamations and handiness with bottles of beer, I had been given the right to consider him a worldly if not a profane man. I said, "That is one of my favorite airs you are whistling."

"Oh, yes," says the colonizer, "I'm a churchman and go to church with my wife on all occasions. But you see I have to make this trip to Mexico twice a week with colonists in our special car. Well, when I cross the border I'm a man of the world; and when I come back over the line I'm a Christian."

I hope when he dies he will die on this side of the line.

We reached San Antonio at 1:30 and the two land magnates left us to join their wives and be good. We only stopped at the station long enough for dinner, and when we pulled out the gentleman's drawing room seemed rather lonesome. We had only Mr. Carter left, for of course the Easterner didn't count. Mr. Carter has the Spanish or Mexican shrug to perfection. It is done with the shoulder, arm, hand and body. It is a cringing sort of wave. With palm up and outward, the right elbow is rubbed across the breast toward the left, while the arm sneaks outward. It is an answer to almost any sort of a question, and a conversation with Mr. Carter could be conducted thus:

"Did you get very tired of living in Monterey?" Shrug.

"Are the Americans congenial?" Shrug.

"But it is a good opening for a young man, is it not?" Shrug, etc.

The remainder of the trip across Texas was without much variety. At Austin we crossed a considerable river, and upon inquiry learned what we should have remembered from our geography, that it was the Colorado River. Not being strong in our geography, we could not think the Colorado River so far from home. We asked the train crew and the men standing out on the platform, and every one said it was the Colorado River, and it was. It is hilly in that part of the country. The train auditor said it reminded him of Arkansas. But after that we traveled great level stretches, sometimes with nothing to be seen but the horizon. There was a place called Round Rock, and the only thing visible is a huge sign set up in the prairie advising you to try a particular kind of tobacco. We stopped at Taylor, but as a rule we whizzed past the little stations. People are just like the stations on that Texas road. When they grow up to be of importance, opportunity and favor and honor will stop at their platforms; but while they are poor and scraggy and needy, all the through trains are going to steam by without whistling brakes. It's no use for the dogs to set out on a chase, barking and showing their teeth; all such are quickly left behind. So if you want the palace cars to stop at your door—grow!

At San Antonio the train crew had been changed and there was a new set of porters to fee. Strangers got on the car toward nightfall, and one of them promised, of his own free will, to send me a maguey plant. It will have to wear an umbrella in Arkansas. As we rolled past villages, how different from the Mexican plateau-dwellers! The little children waved their hands to us with sunny smiles, expecting nothing in return, not even a wave. But in Mexico the children have no interest in the trains except to flock to the windows and hold up their hands and cry, "Don' me centavvys! don' me centavvys;" So in my heart I blessed the merry wavings of the little arms which some of the passengers regarded so sourly. And I waved back, glad to be an American among Americans.

Night came on, and just as we were ready to go to our berths Carter came into the gentlemen's drawing room to bid us good-by, and I said "How do you do?" to him in his secondary language, thus getting rid of my last scrap of Spanish. Then all retired early, for Jebly and I wanted as much sleep for our money as possible, seeing that we must be waked at half-past three in the morning to get off at Texarkana.

Queer Names of Common Things.

"Blue Jeans" Williams he was called; and he died twenty-five years ago while governor of Indiana, a sturdy American, who got his nickname beca se of his fondness for blue jeans overall:, which he deemed the proper apparel fo: a worker. Yet the blue jeans that gave him his nickname got theirs from Spain; for centuries ago the Moors of Spain were famous for their clothes of different kinds, and among them was the stuff made in their city of Jean.

The name given to a knitted wrap, not now so common as formerly, "afghan," indicates what the learned men call its place of origin; but how many persons who ask for a shawl to put over their shoulders know that the name of the little extra covering does the same? Shal is a valley in Afghanistan, and the shawl of the West took its name and its origin from the mountains northwest of India.

Many of the dress goods of to-day indicate by their names the countries whence they first were brought to Europe and thence to America. Cashmere took its name from the far-famed "Vale of Cashmere"; but many persons who never heard of that beautiful valley use the material which bears its name. Nankeen was first made at Nanking, the southern capital of China; calico was brought to Europe from Calicut in India; muslin came from Mawsil, a city in Mesopotamia. Mohair, like jeans, was made by the Moors of Spain. Cambri is cloth from Cambria, in France; worsted was made at Worstead, in Norfolkshire, England; Holland, which we use for window shades, and frieze, which makes heavy overcoats, came from the Low Countries. Gingham and guimp were imported from Guingamp, in Brittany; and before we had sweaters we used jerseys and guernseys, shirts made in the Channel Islands whose names they bear.

Other things familiar to housekeepers have names of strange origin. Buckwheat cakes and maple sugar syrup are looked upon as a typical American dish, just as Governor Williams' blue jeans were considered typical of his Americanization. But the buckwheat, at all events, is of foreign origin, and its name is historically curious. The French and Germans call it "Saracen wheat"; but its real origin is from the North-of-Europe word boekweit, meaning beech-wheat, from the resemblance of its triangular seed to beechnuts.

Many other familiar articles of household use show their origin in their names, though these may be changed more or less from their first forms. Currants, for example, once were called Corinth grapes, because they were brought to Europe from Corinth, the Greek city on the isthmus. The meringue that nowadays seems wedded to the lemon pie of the lunch room took its name from Mehringen, a German town. The damson, which makes such excellent preserves, is scientifically the Damascus plum, and the damask that is used for table linen took its name also from the oldest of known cities. The chestnut came from Castanea, in Greece; the cherry from Cerasus, an ancient town on the Black sea. The peach is the Persian apple.

One of the most intersting names, historically is that of ammonia, which is used so much about the house. It was found in quantities in the Libyan desert, in Africa, where the priests of Jupiter Ammon prepared it for use. They exported it to Egypt; and we adopted its old name, sal ammoniac (the salt from near the temple of Ammon).

Some common words likewise have unexpected origins. A spruce person, for instance, originally was one dressed in the Prussian or Spruce manner. The horse's pace which we call a canter was first known as a Canterbury gallop—from Canterbury, fancifully said to be the easy amble of the pilgrims to the shrine of St. Thomas of Canterbury, which permitted them to tell tales one to the other to beguile their way.—R. G. Butler.

The Lady Who Smiles.

Some of us would be more surprised than pleased if we knew the impressions we make on the minds of those who know us only slightly. How many of you girls are remembered as pleasantly as was the lady described in the following incident?

A lady called at the house of a neighbor on an errand, but as the family were away she asked the hired man to tell his employer that she would call again. Being in a hurry, and not thinking but that the man knew who she was, she did not leave her name. The lady of the house returned before the rest of the family, and the man told her that a lady had been there who said she'd call again.

"Who was it?" inquired Mrs. H.

"Oh I don't know her name," replied the man.

"But you should have asked her," said Mrs. H., "so we would know who had been here. Can't you tell me anything by which I can know who came? Where does she live?"

"I don't know," said the man, but she's the one that always smiles when she speaks."

The pleasant look and the courteous manner in which the lady had spoken to the servant had been noticed and remembered, leaving a sunbeam in that man's man's heart.—Selected.

—Order Bible school supplies of us for the new fourth quarter by return mail.

—If you would like a great company of Disciples to go to the Norfolk convention over the Big Four and the C. & O. Railroads, and it is your intention to accompany this party, write us that we may guarantee these roads a party of not less than 100, then the special train will be assured.

—Marion Stevenson, our associate editor of Bible school literature, is holding an institute for Walter McConnell at Deland, Ill. From there he goes into Western Pennsylvania until after the Norfolk convention. Mail intended for him will be cared for in this office or forwarded to him.

—An audit of our books shows that we are supplying 506 more schools with our peerless Bible school helps than during the corresponding period of 1906. When the matter of literature is left to impartial committees, they invariably select the publications of our House. Our prices are as low as is asked for the inferior literature of other houses.

—Evangelist Sumner T. Martin is helping John S. Zeran in a meeting at Gurnee, Ill. They are using 300 CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS each week. They, like a host of other pastors and evangelists, have discovered that this paper, which never engages in fratricidal strife with its own brethren, but is busily engaged in the extension of the Kingdom throughout the earth, is the very best tract to use as an evangelistic supplement during protracted meetings.

—Do not longer delay ordering Bible school literature for the fourth quarter, which begins the first Lord's day in October. We will fill your order by first post, but on account of frequent delays in the delivery of second-class mailing matter we advise the schools to give immediate attention to this matter. If you have no order blank, advise us and one will be sent immediately. Samples of the best Bible school supplies will be mailed to you on application.

—Beginning with the first October issue of "Our Young Folks," there will be given its readers a series of Teacher Training instruction that will continue till January 1. Other publishers advertise theirs in book form. "Our Young Folks" readers will here secure the very best instruction and without extra charge. Those getting a standing of 70 per cent in the final examinations from this course will receive a diploma from the International Bible School Committee. We urge all Bible school workers to faithfully study "Our Young Folks" from and after October 1. Marion Stevenson will conduct this department.

—There are thousands of ministers who believe that this Restoration movement is receiving its truest and most efficient advocacy through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. If these brethren would reciprocate to us the aid they believe we render them and the Cause each week, we would soon have the 100,000 circulation we have set as one of our Centennial aims. If 1,000 of these brethren would give one day to an actual canvass for subscriptions, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would immediately begin visiting 10,000 new homes, which would mean 40,000 new readers it would influence for righteousness and zeal each week. —New Commentary on Acts. J. W. McGarvey. $1.00. President McGarvey is one of our ablest commentators, and in this role never appears to better advantage than in Acts. We would like to know that this book was in every Disciple library.

—Paths to the City of God. By Frank W. Gunsaulus. $1.25. Dr. Gunsaulus is pastor of one of our largest American churches. He is president of Armour Institute. He has many rare gifts and among them is an eloquence manifest in his writings as in his speech. Here are fifteen inspiring sermons by one of the great masters of sacred oratory.

—The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. Edited by J. H. Garrison. $2.00. This is an interesting historical resume of our great Restoration movement. Some of the ablest writers among us contribute to "The Introductory Periods:" "Period of Organization;" "The Turbulent Period;" "The Transition Period." The Editor's "Lessons from Our Past" is worth many times the cost of the book.

—The Practice of Prayer. By G. Campbell Morgan. 75 cents. The great evangelist confesses the aim of the book is purely practical. He contends that "Teach us to pray" relates to the cultivation of the habit rather than the manner of prayer. The work is a serious effort to make more universal the "morning watch," the "still hour" and the family prayer circle. It is a very pertinent message. It ought to be communicated to all our people.

—The Development of the Sunday-school—1780-1905. This is the official report of the Eleventh International Sunday-school Convention, held in Toronto. This book sold for $1.50. We overstocked and will sell the next one dozen copies at 75 cents each. It has 716 pages and contains some remarkable addresses in addition to a great deal of valuable statistics and historical data.

—A Typical Mission in China. By W. E. Soothill. $1.50. This is an exceptional book. Secretary Corey says this is the very best book on the actual work of the mission stations. It tells of evangelization, types of converts, native sermons, medical work, temples, and the various religions and their founders, including Christianity. The introduction alone is worth the price of the book.

—The Pedagogical Bible School. By Samuel B. Haslet. Introduction by G. Stanley Hall. $1.25. This book presents concisely a description of the mental characteristics and needs of the pupils at each stage of development. It indicates, too, the pedagogical order of the Bible books, suggesting sections adapted to the various grades of the Sunday-school scholars. It is not only adapted to all Bible school workers, but also for parents, teachers and all engaged in religious and mental training.

A New Motto: "All the Church in the Bible School"

By F. M. Rogers

There are perhaps comparatively few people, except those who have been actively engaged in Bible school work, who have any conception of the wonderful development of the Sunday-school idea.

One hundred and twenty-five years ago, at the beginning of the Sunday-school work, the chief object was to teach children how to spell, and there was little thought of teaching the Bible. The greater idea of gathering in the children to teach them the Word of God, to bring them to a saving knowledge of the Christ, and by these converts to build up the church, was left for later development.

And the first effort in this direction was the teaching of the whole Bible and the memorizing of verses. Not until 1825 was the limited lesson scheme inaugurated. Since that time the development along the line of Bible study has been rapid, and now the chief aim of the Bible school is to promote Bible study.

We have already lost sight of this one fact, however, as we have advanced and developed the idea of the purpose of the school—and that is, that the school should be conducted for the good of adults as well as children. In days past, aside from those who were necessary to equip the school with officers and teachers, the adult membership of the average Bible school consisted of a small mixed class in the "Amen corner," known as the Bible class. All of a sudden we have awakened to a realization that the adult should be in the Bible school, and a new motto has been flung to the breeze—"All the Church in the Bible School." One of the great problems of to-day is not a theoretical or a doctrinal one, but an intensely practical one: How can we retain our hold on the young men from 16 to 21 years of age, and how can we interest fathers and mothers in Bible study?.

For years there has been a shrinkage in the schools at the time when the scholars approached manhood and womanhood, and also a dearth of fathers and mothers. On reaching his teens, or shortly afterward, the young man passes out of the Bible school, very often out of the church service, too; and often away from all religious influence whatever. According to a prominent Bible school worker, only one out of five of the church members of America is a member of the Bible school. If this be true it is appalling.

We are aware that much thought has been given to the matter; that big-souled, earnest-hearted men have brought the energies of their keenest thought to its solution, and so far, the question is unanswered and the problem unsolved. I was much impressed by a cartoon which appeared in a recent issue of the "Adult Bible Class Monthly." It pictured a farmer riding a sulky rake across a field of new-mown hay, but instead of the rake doing clean work, great stretches of hay were left upon the ground untouched. The cartoonist called this rake the Sunday-school rake. Standing to one side was a blacksmith, who had just forged a new section of a rake,—he was extending it toward the farmer, and saying, "the new movement section never bends or breaks," and underneath the picture was the pertinent query, "why not rake a clean field?" and we repeat, why not?

Why not have the adult, as well as the child, in the Bible school?

It can not be said, "they do not need it." Ignorance of the Bible is not confined to those of younger years. Many persons are satisfied with conversion and church membership. These two, they think, have given them a passport to the skies, so "not a wave of trouble rolls across their peaceful breast." Many good people judge that, having apprehended and embraced the simple gospel, they have finished their spiritual education, and hence neglect the means of grace and knowledge.

Another, and by no means unimportant reason why the parent should be in the school, is for the moral effect it may have on the children. You have all heard the old story of the little girl's Sunday-school composed of the pig, the lamb and the calf, which she delighted in showing to the preacher; but he, on a subsequent visit, found the calf missing from the school, and when the little girl was asked what had become of it, she replied that the calf had gotten too big to go to Sunday-school. Did you ever stop to think how the children ever got the impression that there is a time when one becomes too big to go to Sunday-school? It is simply a matter of imitation. The boy has learned his father's history; he knows that at one time he was a regular attendant at the Bible school, for he has heard him talk about how they used to do when he was a boy and went to Sunday-school. The boy knows that the father never attends now, and the only reason he can see for it is that he is no longer a child. The time comes when he, too, is no longer a child, and, as a natural sequence, he quits the school, very often also the church, and during this important period he is away from the very influence of which he stands most in need, and the boy that was, and the man that is, is lost for time and for eternity.

Our purpose shall be, not to dwell so much upon the importance of having the adult in the Bible school, as to suggest some practical methods for bringing about adult attendance, for I take it, we here are more interested in the how, than in the why, of this question.

That there is great need for more pronounced effort in this direction, there can be no possible doubt, but the unsolved question is, How may the conditions be improved? To what force or forces shall we turn for relief?

In answer it may be said, first, that it is possible for the pulpit to be a much greater force in enlisting the adult than it has been in the past.

One of the chief difficulties in the way of securing adult attendance is a failure to appreciate the importance of the Bible school; and this difficulty may be largely removed by the preacher from the pulpit.

First, the preacher himself must have a high conception of the Bible school. This all do not have. I remember a few years ago that when I received a call from our state board in Missouri to become state Bible school evangelist, some of my preaching brethren advised me to "have nothing to do with that little piddling business."

For generations the preacher has been taught to put the emphasis upon the preparation and delivery of a sermon. Why, I know not, for certainly the scriptural emphasis is upon teaching. Jesus was the great teacher rather than the great preacher. But in modern times the emphasis is placed upon the sermon, and to such a degree that the masses in our churches attach but little importance to that service in which there is to be no sermon delivered.

Far be it from me to undervalue the importance of preaching, and when I

Current Events

Judge Harmon, of Ohio.

Judge Judson Harmon, of Cincinnati, delivered the principal address on Ohio day at the Jamestown Exposition. It was a splendid glorification of the splendid state which he represents, starting with its historic origin in the trans-Allegheny movement from Virginia, and coming down to the proud position of the commonwealth at the present time. Judge Harmon's appearance at this time as the spokesman for Ohio gains added significance, from the fact that a great many people believe that he himself is the favorite son of the Ohio Democracy, and is the most available man to represent his party in the next presidential campaign. The feeling is general that the next president, whatever his party may be, ought to be a conservative and an able lawyer. Judge Harmon is both. He is, moreover, a man of large and forceful personality, which even the robes of his judicial office have never been able to obscure. As a "safe and sane" leader and reuniter of the Democracy, Judge Harmon has much to recommend him. Ohio is fruitful of presidential candidates, and it is not impossible that the state may this year furnish the leaders for both parties. It would be rather a singular coincidence if the two Cincinnati judges, Taft and Harmon, should find themselves lifted up as the opposing candidates for the presidency. The country would not be in serious peril under the guidance of either one of them. The only point at which Judge Harmon's Jamestown address touched current political issues, was in his argument for the control of corporations by state rather than federal legislation. His argument was, in substance, that in dealing with a new and complex problem, where much of the procedure must necessarily be experimental, it is better to work on a small scale. If a single state enacts unwise legislation, the others can see its bad results and avoid the error; while if a single state deals wisely with the problem of corporation control, the others will be moved to follow the good example. The speech further contained one epigram which states an often neglected aspect of the question. It is this: "The smallest fortune is too great if it is dishonestly or unfairly gained." And it might be added that the smallest fortune is too great if it is selfishly and unfairly used.

The Trans-Atlantic Record.

The new Cunard steamer "Lusitania," on her maiden voyage, has broken all records for the trip across the Atlantic. At the time of this writing the steamer has not yet reached New York harbor, but has passed Cape Race, and, judging from the reports of her position received by wireless telegraphy, she may be expected to complete the voyage from Queenstown to Sandy Hook in about four days and eighteen hours. This is thirteen hours better than the previous record. Even if there should be delay on account of accidents or fogs on the Banks of Newfoundland, the vessel has already demonstrated her superiority in point of power and speed to all other ships which have ever been constructed. Her length is considerably over an eighth of a mile, and her thirty thousand tons of weight are propelled by turbine engines of twice that number of horse-power. It must be remembered that this increase in speed is gained only by an enormous increase in cost, both of construction and of fuel. Roughly speaking, the amount of coal which the vessel consumes increases as the square of the speed. The four-day voyage across the Atlantic is for passengers to whom time is worth more than money, and for the transportation of goods which on land would be sent by express rather than by freight.

Railroad Rates.

The campaign for the reduction of railroad rates shows no sign of cessation. There appears to be a probability that Governor Hoch, of Kansas, will call a special session of the Legislature to enact a new rate schedule, if the existing orders are not observed by the railroads, so as to give Kansas the benefit of the two-cent passenger rate. The Nebraska railroad commission has promulgated a new schedule of grain rates, which is being resisted by the roads. The Federal court has issued a restraining order to prevent the commission from putting this schedule into effect, pending the decision upon an injunction which has been applied for. The Governor has been asked to summon the Legislature in special session to adopt a new schedule in case the enforcement of the present one is indefinitely postponed by litigation. It is probable that such clashes between the state and federal authorities will continue until the United States Supreme Court definitely decides where the jurisdiction belongs, and whether or not the rate laws enacted by the state legislatures are constitutional. The contention of the railroads is that in a disputed case regarding a rate, it is more equitable to give the railroad the benefit of the doubt, pending the decision of the highest court of appeals, than to give the public the benefit of the doubt. If the lower rate established by the state law is put into effect, and it is afterward declared to be unconstitutional, the railroads would have no recourse except to bring suit against every individual passenger who had benefited by the lower rate during the period of its enforcement. This, of course, would be impossible; it is equivalent to no recourse at all. On the other hand, if the railroads are given the benefit of the doubt during the interval, and the final court of appeal should decide against them, the roads could be compelled to refund the excess fare which they had collected. Is it better in such a case to have half a dozen defendants and a hundred thousand plaintiffs, or to have a hundred thousand defendants and half a dozen plaintiffs. The railroads hold that the subsequent litigation would be vastly simpler and justice to all parties more certain of attainment, if they are made the defendants than if there is imposed upon them the burden of collecting a balance due from every person who buys a railroad ticket during the whole period between the beginning of the enforcement of the law and the final determination regarding its constitutionality.

The Territories.

Mr. Garfield, Secretary of the Interior, became completely convinced during his recent visit to the Southwest, that the people of New Mexico and Arizona will never be willing to accept joint statehood. The President agrees to his proposition and announces that he will not recommend any further legislation with that end in view. A suggestion has been made looking toward the addition of Arizona to the state of Nevada. This proposition has little merit beyond the bare fact that Nevada, although already a state, has not sufficient population really to justify statehood, and that there seems to be nothing else within reach to which Arizona can be added. Meanwhile, certain New Mexico politicians are urging the calling of a constitutional convention to be composed of the delegates elected a year ago when the joint statehood proposition was being considered. They believe that if New Mexico should come before Congress with a wise constitution already prepared (and a Republican delegation already assured) they would stand a good chance of being admitted. Oklahoma's fate is still problematical. The constitution, which was drafted by a strong Democratic convention, has yet to meet the approval of the voters of the territory and of the President. Secretary Taft, during his recent visit to Oklahoma, urged the people to vote against it, and wait a while longer for statehood rather than accept statehood under such a constitution. In giving this advice, Mr. Taft made it as clear as possible that he was speaking for himself and not for the President. Mr. Taft and the President, however, do not disagree on very many topics. Mr. Bryan says that the Oklahoma constitution is the best state constitution now in existence. This is only one among several important differences of opinion between Mr. Bryan and Mr. Taft.

The Coal Strike of 1900.

The issues growing out of the great anthracite strike of seven years ago, are still in the courts. Most people have gotten their coal bills for that memorable winter settled by this time, and many have even forgotten how inconvenient it was when they could get no coal at all. But the courts are still threshing it out. There are some questions, however, growing out of that strike, which are still of live interest. The coal roads are charged with conspiracy to raise the price of anthracite coal. The roads, in their answer, admit the raise but deny the conspiracy. They assert that the increase in the price of coal has been due to three causes. In the first place, the state of Pennsylvania failed to protect the property of the operators, and to maintain such conditions of public peace as would make it possible for them to carry on their mining operations in spite of the strike. In the second place, the federal government failed to take the steps it should have taken to keep the peace when it became apparent that the resources of the state government were inadequate for that purpose. In the third place, Marcus Hanna, then chairman of the Republican National Committee, used his personal and official influence to persuade many of the operators to grant a ten per cent increase in wages in order that the strike might be stopped, and the success of the Republican party in the pending election might not be jeopardized. The last item in the defense is the interesting one. The claim is that an unjust demand for increased wages was granted on purely political grounds; that this increase in wages was the real cause of the increase in the price of coal; and that, therefore, every purchaser of a ton of anthracite coal during the past seven years has been making his involuntary contribution to the Republican campaign fund of 1900. Some of these data can scarcely be accepted without further inquiry, but they are at least worth inquiring into.

Editorial

Some First Principles.

VI. Adjustment of Life to Moral Ideals.

As we have said of faith, so we must say of repentance, that it is too often conceived of as having relation only to the beginning of one's Christian life, whereas it is a continuous state in which the believer is constantly seeking to readjust his life to his growing moral ideals. It is, therefore, an essential condition of continuous moral progress and development. Repentance is not an arbitrary step or requirement which God imposes upon man as a condition of salvation, but is a necessity of his moral nature. To perceive the right and to continue to pursue the wrong, is to destroy the unity of one's life and to undermine its moral foundations. Every element of the moral nature—honesty, sincerity, consistency, in a word, conscience—impels one to do what he perceives he ought to do, and to turn away from a life that is seen to be fundamentally wrong and self-destructive.

Perhaps there is no more frequent mistake made by those who are seeking to live a Christian life than the failure to recognize repentance, or the effort at moral readjustment, to be a continuous state and an essential condition of all healthy and normal growth. The ideal toward which the Christian struggles is a perfect ideal, namely: the character of Christ. Any compromise with moral imperfections, any truce with the evil in our natures or in our lives, is fatal to spiritual development. There must at least be the honest and continuous effort to conquer whatever there is in us contrary to the will of God, in order that we may maintain a good conscience and a robust faith. We have often called attention to the relation between immorality in one's life and the loss of faith. Hymenaeus and Alexander, who, "having thrust from them" a good conscience, "made shipwreck concerning the faith," do not stand alone in the shipwreck of their faith through the defilement of conscience. There is a fine knowledge of psychology underlying Paul's admonition to deacons to "hold the mystery of the faith in pure conscience." (1 Tim. 3:9). As the smallest object in the delicate organism of the eye causes pain, so the smallest of our sins, as we may estimate them, work serious injury to our moral nature, unless resisted. If we fail to resist any moral evil in our lives we are sure to attempt to justify it in order to make peace at the bar of conscience, and it is this attempt at self-justification in the practice of evil that undermines faith, for in such an attitude the soul loses that witness of God within, without which a living and vital faith can not exist.

When Paul was relating his experience to King Agrippa, he uttered a statement that gives us a key to the moral grandeur of his life and its potent influence for good. Referring to his vision of Christ on his way to Damascus to persecute Christians, he said: "Whereupon, O king, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." This vision of Christ revolutionized his life and turned all its energies into new channels. He not only saw the vision, but he perceived the meaning and intent of the vision, and its relation to his life and life-work. He saw that it demanded a complete change in his program, and, although it involved sacrifices of which we know little, he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. Many another man's life has been completely revolutionized by coming to see, in Jesus of Nazareth, the Christ of God, the Savior of the world. But it is only as men have been obedient to the truth which they have discerned that they have received the blessing which God desires to communicate through the truth. Had Paul shrunk from the great sacrifice involved in bringing his life up to the new revelation of truth which had come to him, he would have been a moral derelict, and his name, perhaps, never would have come down to us, except possibly as one of the persecutors of the early church. Many men have had great doors of opportunity opened to them, but seeing the self-surrender and sacrifice of earthly goods, and the loss of popularity and position involved, have been disobedient to the vision which was given to them, and their light has gone out in darkness.

Among the means of Christian growth and progress, therefore, must be not only an increase in the knowledge of God as revealed in Christ, and not only an increase in faith, but a corresponding readjustment of our life and conduct to our advancing moral ideals. This involves a continuous turning away from the lower to the higher standard of life, and from the lesser to the greater good. In the light of this truth, how vain and ineffectual is the plea men sometimes make that they or their fathers have pursued such course in the past, and, therefore, it is safe enough for them to pursue still! On the contrary, what our fathers may have done with a good conscience, and what we ourselves in times past may have done without defilement of conscience, we may not be able to do today, because new light has come to us which requires a new adjustment of our life to the increased light. That is what is meant by "walking in the light." "But if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1:7). This is only saying that we can only appropriate the benefits of Christ's death for us as we walk in the light which he gives us. But as he gives us increasing light, if we are living up to our Christian privileges and duties, it follows that there must be an increasing apprehension of the imperfections of our lives and characters, which we must seek to remedy if we are to continue to enjoy Christ's favor. This is what we mean by repentance as a continuous state—the adjustment of life to growing moral ideals.

"Forbearing One Another in Love."

The above is Paul's recipe for keeping the "unity of the faith in the bond of peace." It is suggested by the article which we publish elsewhere by Claris Yeuell, entitled, "Baptists—Disciples," and commenting upon a recent article on the same topic by Dr. Moore. Both these articles refer in no complimentary terms to the article by Dr. E. E. Folk, in a recent Baptist book. It must be confessed that the chapter referred to in that book especially is marked by a limited range of knowledge and something of the spirit of a partisan and of a provincialist who has not taken a wide range of observation. It would be quite unfair, however, to judge the Baptists, or even the Southern Baptists, by Dr. Folk's statements. In Dr. Moore's article he makes the discrimination very plain. Some of the broadest-minded and largest-hearted Baptists known to us are among the Southern Baptists, and it is only true to say that some of the truest and most representative men among the Disciples of Christ, both among preachers and non-preachers, are found in the South. It will not do, therefore, to draw any sectional lines and say those south of the line are narrow and those north of it are broad. Taken as a whole, it is probably true that the Southern Baptists are rather more conservative than are Northern Baptists, but the two bodies are now co-operating as brethren, and this difference is likely to grow less as they come to know each other better and to mingle with each other in Christian work. Nor do we think that Brother Yeuell is right in speaking of the Southern Baptists as "the Baptist church in America." They would claim no such pre-eminence for themselves, and no impartial historian would claim it for them.

The good word that Brother Yeuell speaks for Methodism in the South is probably deserved, but we would not put the Methodists in contrast, in this respect, with any other religious body. We too seldom see the good points in our religious neighbors. That is one of the faults of our denominationalism. We shall never get into the spirit of unity until we are able to see the things to be commended as well as those to be condemned in other bodies of Christians. The body of people known as Methodists have contributed no small part to the religious life of this and other lands, and are worthy of all praise for their zeal and liberality. That, in some respects, they excel both Baptists and Disciples of Christ, can not be denied; but that organic union with them is as practicable as with Baptists, we do not think is true; but we do well to cultivate the fraternal spirit with all who love and serve our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

The special word which we have to say, as suggested by the comment on the article by Dr. Folk, is that we must have patience with each other, and be sure that we do not judge the whole by one. If men are honest and sincere, we can afford to be very patient and forbearing with their limited range of knowledge and sympathy. We do well to be patient with our own brethren whom we believe to be in error in may things, and whose spirit is often contrary, as we believe, to the spirit of Christ. God is patient with us and we must be patient with each other. Nothing is more touching, or more indicative of Christ's greatness, than the patience he manifested toward his disciples, who were often dull of hearing and of understanding, and whose materialistic conceptions of his kingdom must often have grieved him. He is our pattern in this respect, as in others, and we must learn to be slow to condemn one another, and swift to commend where commendation is possible. We are admonished to "grieve not the Spirit," but we are sure that we do grieve him when we harshly criticise each other, and especially when we speak evil one of another without knowing the truth of what we affirm or report. There is a tendency on the part of some of our older, and many of our younger writers, to take up evil reports concerning brethren, without knowledge of their truthfulness, and yet dealing with them as truth, that is greatly to be deprecated. It is often, if not always, done avowedly in the interest of truth and soundness in the faith, but, alas, how many sensitive souls have been wounded, and otherwise blameless reputations tarnished, by undeserved criticisms of this character!

If Christ's prayer for the oneness of his followers is ever to be realized on this earth, it must be through the exercise of more Christian forbearance and more brotherly love. If we cannot love and work with brethren who hold some views different from ours, who are more progressive, or more conservative in their thought, than we are, then the cause of unity is a hopeless one. The cause of Christian unity is not one to "monkey with," either North or South, but it is one to be prayed over and illustrated in our own lives and teaching, especially if we are surrounded by those who have a contrary spirit. The more sectarianism abounds, the more the spirit of catholicity and unity should abound. Let us never be afraid of "wasting our sweetness on the desert air." The "desert air" of sectarian bitterness needs a good deal more sweetness to make it safe and pleasant to breathe. We ought, indeed, to "stick to our own knitting," but if we have any job of knitting that is more imperative than knitting together in the bond of unity the divided followers of Christ—ourselves and others—we have not learned it.

Brother Yeuell will himself approve what we have written, for he is a man of liberal mind, who has permitted himself to be stung by some manifestations of narrowness into making a too sweeping criticism of both the Baptists and his own brethren in the South. He only needs to be reminded of the apostle's exhortation to brotherly forbearance as a condition of unity to give it his hearty approval.

Notes and Comments.

Riding down town this (Monday) morning on the street car, with a Christian business man, he remarked on how difficult it was for a Christian to live up to the high moral ideals during the week which he has had placed before him on Sunday. "One sees," this business man remarked, "men who have no conscientious scruples about their methods, raking in profits and driving bargains which he is prohibited by his Christian principles from doing, and, unless he is on the alert, he will find himself yielding to temptation and doing as others." "That," we observed, "is just where Christian courage comes in, of which the minister spoke so forcibly in his Sunday evening discourse!" He said that courage was not only a great virtue in itself, but that it "stood guard over all the other virtues." He spoke of the special need which business men of to-day had for high moral courage, to be true to their Christian principles in all matters of business.

We make a great mistake and deceive ourselves if we select a particular individual or corporation as the scapegoat to bear away all the commercial sins of the age. It would be far more profitable for us to raise the question how far we ourselves are influenced in our business life by the same principle which we condemn in others. What is the root principle of all the dishonesty, oppression and corrupt business methods which are attracting so much attention to-day? Is it not selfishness? As the Master traced back murder to hatred in the human heart, would he not trace back our commercial dishonesty to our selfish greed for gain? This is the great anti-Christ of our day. No highway robber ever crossed the path of a traveler and demanded his money or his life with a greater disregard of the rights of others than does selfishness stand with drawn sword across the path of honesty and justice and righteousness, to hold them up in the interest of its own inordinate greed.

There are just two ways in which we may regard our business, and just two principles, directly opposite, which may govern us in our business life. We may regard our business as conducted for purely selfish ends, for our own personal aggrandizement. The public is to be regarded as the field to be cultivated or exploited for our personal aims and ends, and its rights are to be regarded only so far as such regard may subserve our personal gain. If we can crush our competitor, according to this view of our business, let us do it. "Business is business." Selfishness rules supreme in this view of life and our life-calling. The other view is that our business, no matter what it is, is to be conducted to the glory of God and the good of our fellowmen. This view does not ignore business principles such as thrift, economy, honest dealing, honest wages for honest work, but it scorns injustice and refuses to build its own prosperity on the ruin of others. It scorns to do a mean and dishonest thing, on the false plea that "one must live." It prefers death to dishonor.

Needless to say, these two methods of viewing and conducting business are in direct antagonism. The one is of the world, and the other is of Christ. They have no fellowship with each other. "Ye can not serve God and mammon." There is no better field in which to present Christian principles in a way to attract the attention of men and win a favorable hearing than in the business life, and, perhaps, no position requires more real Christian courage than that of the men who to-day are at the head of large business interests. We must come to see, however, that selfishness, which is a part of our perverted and sinful human nature, is at the bottom of all the evils we are complaining of, and that to the extent that it influences us in our business dealings, and leads us to ignore the rule laid down by Jesus, to "do unto others whatsoever ye would have them do unto you," we are under the same condemnation that rests upon all monopolies and trusts that are conducted solely for selfish purposes and in utter disregard of the public welfare. This will lead us all to a self-examination of our own motives and principles of conduct, which will do us good. Then, when we have gotten the beam of selfishness out of our own eyes and hearts, we can see more clearly the motes and beams of the same kind that blur the vision and harden the hearts of others.

On returning to our desk, we find an accumulation of articles from brethren discussing the question of "tainted money." So far as we have examined these, they nearly all coincide with the views of the Editor, as he has expressed himself in these columns. It occurs to us, however, just now, that the fever of controversy on that question has reached a point where more harm than good will result from further discussion. When other motives than the simple desire to promote the cause of truth and righteousness obtrude themselves in a controversy, not good but evil may be expected as the result. To array the brethren in two distinct parties on the question as to whether it is right to solicit and receive donations for religious purposes from men associated with corporations which have been governed by the principles of selfishness, is not only out of harmony with the principles of unity for which we plead, but, from every consideration of a practical character, is unwise. On the abstract question, as stated above, honest men may hold different opinions. What then? Let each man be fully persuaded in his own opinion and act accordingly. The President of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society has said, with admirable Christian spirit: "If the brethren do not approve our solicitation or acceptance of money from such sources, we will desist. We are simply the servants of the brotherhood, to carry out its will." Why not let the matter rest there? Neither Mr. Rockefeller nor the Standard Oil Company are to be tried for their misdemeanors in our convention. That belongs to the civil courts. There is no controversy or difference of opinion among us, so far as we know, as to the non-ethical methods pursued by the Standard Oil Company and many another corrupt monopoly of our time. To create an impression of this kind is to do great discredit to ourselves and injustice to the men who feel justified in receiving unconditioned gifts and using them for missionary, educational, and philanthropic purposes. We ask for a suspension of heated controversy, that the minds of the brethren may have time to reach a state of judicial calmness and clearness before we gather in our great convention at Norfolk.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

These are the last of the Pentwater Musings for the season. There is naturally associated with them a touch of the sadness we feel in parting from a dear friend, for such this park has come to be to us. The day is in harmony with this mood. All day the clouds have veiled the sky, and the rain has been pattering upon the cottage roof and dripping from the eaves and from the leaves of the trees, whose limbs, bent under their load of moisture, seem to droop in melancholy over the season's close and the departure of their summer guests. Out on the lake the mist and clouds obscure the sky-line, so that the waters above the firmament seem to be joined once more with the waters beneath the firmament. The government dredge-boat, working out at the mouth of the harbor, moves about like a spectral ship in the thick vapors, so much is it "baptized in the cloud and in the sea." Within doors a pine-knot fire sheds its radiance in the room in contrast with the gloom without, but in spite of that fact the mistress of "The Pioneer" has been humming or singing in low tones, all day, unconsciously no doubt, the plaintive, minor old songs which we have not heard her sing for many a day, while her busy hands have been preparing the cottage to be left in its long silence. There is something in this life here by the lake-side that appeals to the heart of woman—that is, of the true woman whom the readers of the Easy Chair admire—one who loves her home, her family, her friends, and who prefers the free, simple life of her own humble cottage to the fashionable follies of the most luxurious summer hotel. Such a woman, when her household duties are done, loves to sit, with book or fancy work, and watch the varying moods of the lake, or "listen to the peace" that makes itself heard in the still woods, or in the murmuring waves. Of course there are other types of woman, but they do not come to this resort, or, if they do, they do not remain very long. So every summer resort, on the principle of "natural selection," gathers and holds a constituency that appreciates the charms it offers, and rejects all others—very much as religious newspapers do.

In the above we referred to this beach, or that part of it known as "Garrison Park," as having come to be regarded as a friend, and such, indeed, it is. It has performed many friendly offices for us during the four summers we have spent here. We love its combination of trees and lakes, its hill-tops and ravines, its landscapes and waterscapes. And then it has fitted itself to all our moods and has seemed to be in sympathy with all our states of mind and feeling. In our happier moments the trees on the hills and the waves on the lake have clapped their hands with joy. In hours of deep anxiety and sorrow, such as come to us all sooner or later, the winds have seemed to sigh their sympathy through the pines, and the lake to moan out the tale of its woes. In all these changing phases, it has been a soothing and healing balm. Some of these gnarly and aged trees, venerable patriarchs of the forest, have acquired a sort of personality in our thought, and they are companions with us when we are with them. They speak to us their message from the distant past. They seem to say: "Long years ago, before the white man invaded these shores, there were many great trees like ourselves, making great forests, through which roamed many wild animals, hunted by savage men. Then came the white man with his axe and saw and his lumber mills and our fellows have all gone, and we alone remain to tell what has been in the past." Compared with the age of these venerable pines and hemlocks, the village of Pentwater is but an infant of yesterday. And these sand dunes have wonderful stories to relate of the giant forces which have reared them, and they boast an age that goes back beyond the trees which have grown upon their sides and summits. And then the lake, not to be outclassed, tells how it helped to rear these sand dunes, long before the trees, or wild animals, or savages were on this shore. Through the long, uncounted millenniums of the past, therefore, Nature has been preparing this shore for the use to which, in these last days, it is being put. Why should we not esteem it as a gift from God, and use it as he doubtless intended it should be used?

The departing trains to-day took away a number of our friends, and we noticed in their mutual good-byes this almost universal refrain, "Meet me here again next summer;" and the general response was, "Sure." It is a good thing to say of any place that the oftener people go there the deeper hold it has upon them and the more anxious they are to get back to it. This is often said of Pentwater. This has certainly been our own experience. This is partly due to the fact that we know the place better, and partly to the fact that each year brings more of our friends which, after all, is a most essential part of a happy summer outing. Beautiful scenery, cool and invigorating atmosphere, magnificent sunsets and glorious landscapes are all well enough, but their appreciation is greatly heightened by the faces of our friends who can share with us the enjoyment of such attractions. During the summer now closing we have had a larger number of our friends here than in any previous year, but the coming season, unless all signs fail, will witness a much larger number of mutual friends and acquaintances gathered at this resort than in any previous year. Several new cottages are already under contract to be erected the present autumn or during the next spring and early summer, and no doubt others will join our summer colony before the next season closes. This will enable us to make the summer not only more enjoyable but more profitable in many ways. Many strong bonds of fellowship are formed among those who meet for the first time at a resort like this, and it is pleasant to hear their good-byes at parting made cheerful by the promise of meeting each other again next summer. The hope of meeting again is the one bond that can soothe the pain of parting friends. As it is with all our shorter separations, so it is, only in a much larger degree, with the longer separation caused by the incident which we call death. The hope of meeting again, if not next summer, at least in some glad, eternal summer, with those we have loved and lost awhile, is the one hope that enables us to bear the pangs of separation from those we love. The heart still sings:

> Roses will bloom again,
> Old friends will meet again,
> It will be summer time,
> By and by.

No, we have not read all the books we intended to read, and accomplished all the literary work we intended to perform, and the summer ends with unfinished tasks to go over into the autumn and winter, just as every summer ends, and just, perhaps, as life itself oftenest ends. There are always elements entering into our life-plans which we can not foresee, and hindrances which can not be avoided. But who knows but what these hindrances and delays may be as much a part of our life-plans, and perhaps as important a part, as the things we had set our hearts upon? There is no better rule that we know of than to do each day the work that seems to be at hand and most pressing, and to do it the best we can, and not worry about that which we can not do. But if we have read books less, we have read Nature's great outspread volume more, and perhaps that is just as well. The great book of Nature, bound by rising and setting suns, whose leaves are skies and clouds and hills and lakes, and whose words are trees and shrubs and flowers and rocks and sands and streams, and whose author is the Creator himself, who has written a message on every leaf of his great volume—that is worthy of the study of a lifetime, and, for aught we know, it may be a part of the splendid activities of the life eternal to search out some of the deeper mysteries of this wonderful book. No other book is to be compared with it, save that other sacred volume written by holy men of old, who were inspired of God, and which contains the revelations of his truth and grace, and the sacred experiences of elect spirits who have had a vision of divine things and have written down what they have seen and heard and felt. All other books are profitable only in the measure in which they help us to understand the one or the other of these great volumes.

By the time we had reached this point, night had dropped her curtains of thick darkness over hills and lake, and the wind, having risen, was blowing a stiff gale out of the west with a driving rain which washed the face of the western windows. The fire had burned to a bed of coals, and the stenographer moved a suspension of literary work and the utilizing of the coals for popping corn. The motion was seconded by Mrs. Easy Chair, and of course prevailed, and soon the popping of the corn mingled its cheerful sound with the roar of the lake and the sough of the wind through the trees. How wild the night! We thought of the friends who had left us in the afternoon, expecting to cross the lake from Muskegon, and hoped they had delayed crossing for a calmer night. All night the wind kept up its pace, and the sullen roar of the lake, as the wild waves thundered on the beach, mingled with our dreams. This morning the lake presents a scene of wild grandeur, and where we sat a few evenings ago on the sand about a roaring bonfire, the great waves are now washing the beach and bringing in the material for other bonfires for the coming summer. But the winds can not blow away, nor the wild waves obliterate the happy memories of the summer that has gone to join its sisters in the silent realms of the past. Amid these sublime and turbulent scenes, with the breath of the autumn gale full upon us, Pentwater Musings makes its bow and says its "Adios" for the season.

Ecclesia in Ecclesia

By William Durban

We have often seen the phrase, "Imperium in imperio," quoted in reference to things civil and political. But we do not so frequently see any allusion to the system which involves an "ecclesia in ecclesia." Yet the latter is really much more in evidence than the former, if we only noticed it. And in the older countries people are beginning to open their eyes to the fact of the church within the church.

Now, every fabric that is characterized by any degree of complexity is sure to consist of the esoteric and the exoteric elements. There is some enveloping integument in every organism. The body is the envelope of the inner man. The talk about simplicity is somewhat overdone, is it not? For the too much ignored or forgotten fact is that this universe knows nothing at all of any such thing as simplicity. As Pasteur Charles Wagner—God bless him for his beautiful work in the heart of "la pauvre France"—has become so famous for his writing about "La vie simple," I wish he would talk to us a little about "La vie complexe," which is, after all, the real thing. The simple life is all an imagination. I like imagination well enough. But let us own up to what is imaginary. I live a very, very simple life myself, but it is much more complex than simple. I shall not stop now to explain this. My kind readers can think out this matter easily enough if they try.

Now, it is when we come to think of religious life in any of its departments that the very idea of simplicity baffles us entirely. I fully admit that the Quakers and the Plymouth Brethren go in for ecclesiastical simplicity. Well, the world in its simplicity quietly passes them by. To-day they count very little. If they were all caught up in the heavenly rapture, only a few would miss them. What I note is that the Christian churches of every variety tend to adopt more and more complicated forms of Christian organization. They do this in order to efficiency. They want to touch the people on all sides. The Institutional church is a case in point. So is the Emmanuel movement. Churches now take up temperance, Christian Endeavor, sociology, economics, politics, municipalism, amusement, and everything that they think will be helpful to humanity. They are right. The idea of a spiritual monopoly is absurd. Man is spiritual, mainly so, but he is much besides, and one part of our nature is just as sacred as the other.

Now, the ecclesia in ecclesia is the natural development of the fact that all nature tends evermore to depart from simplicity and to complicate itself infinitely. And therefore we ought to comprehend on natural principles why even the most ignorant people delight, just as truly as the cultured, in the elaborate forms and ceremonies of ecclesiastical cults, utterly regardless of the fact that they understand nothing about the meaning of what they see and hear. So it comes about that there are two churches in one. If there ought not to be, according to some of us, there they are all the same. I refer to the church of the clergy. This is the interior church. I shall be faced, of course, with the argument that Jesus never set up an exterior and an interior church. No, but he did nothing to prevent this dual development. For he ordained a set of men who were altogether different in their functions from the rest. That, to begin with, involved the very principle on which I am writing.

At this time in England there is a crucial conflict in the Anglican church. To me it is intensely interesting, because I was born and trained in venerable and powerful communion. There are few institutions on earth so potent for good and evil as Anglicanism. Mr. Jowett, the great Birmingham Congregationalist, reckoned by some critics to be the greatest of living preachers, recently said that Bishop Gore had, since becoming the first bishop of Birmingham, changed the whole aspect of the great capital of the midlands. That is just a passing proof of the power of the Anglican church. Now, this is a dual church. It consists of the clerical church and the popular church, and it happens that these two are in conflict in certain serious respects. The church of the clergy is ritualistic; the church of the people is evangelical. The clergy is drifting Romeward. The people are turning their backs on Rome. And yet both parties are fighting for Anglicanism.

Is there anything analogous to this in other Christian communions? I am of opinion that the analogy subsists in every religious body. I mingle much with ministers and much with congregations. I am journalist, editor, preacher, lecturer, and so come into contact with all sorts and conditions of men. And what do I find? Let me just tell you. I sit in a company of preachers and enjoy myself unspeakably. Saying very little myself, for I am an enthusiastic listener, I generally note that my brother parsons talk simply in "ad clerum" style, on topics in which laymen would take little interest. They unconsciously converse in the language of the church within the church. They can not help it.

It has been my privilege to read Dr. W. T. Moore's new book, "Preacher Problems." I do not suppose that the grand old doctor knew that he was writing a volume which would prove that there is a church within the church. Very few people indeed, excepting ministers, will be able to enter into the spirit of this fine bit of specialist literary work. We preachers naturally form a set of clerics. We fall apart from the laity. There is no disposition in many quarters to acknowledge this; but it is a fact, and it is in accord with the laws of the universe. And so far as the distinction subsists legitimately it is beneficent. Take the Scottish and Welsh people. They are the most religious nations on earth. And in each case it is the interior church, the church of the ministry, which has made the nation great. As soon as parsons tend to become priests, then the interior church is turned into a curse. The "hiereus"or sacrificing priest has no right place in the New Testament, since Christ is the one and only "Hiereus" under the Christian dispensation, and he is in the heavenly court. Now the only priest on earth is the presbyter. I here touch a point eminently well understood by us who call ourselves Disciples of Christ. Therefore I need not go further in this direction.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and most of the Anglican dignitaries are to-day seeking to make the Church hieratic. The majority of the laity in their own church are resisting the effort, and are determined to Presbyterianize the Church. Here you have the key to the situation. This explains why in England the religious education question is always with us, and is a torture to the community. The clergy will be defeated in England, because England is soundly Protestant at heart and will remain so, for one reason if for no other, that we have poor old Ireland, cursed by priestcraft, as a lurid object lesson close under our eyes in one direction, and close by in another direction France and Belgium, with all the troubles of clericalism and anti-clericalism. What I have said in these lines will be very comprehensible to any of my American readers who have been in England long enough or often enough to know what are the conditions. Others may find it not so easy to grasp the significance of my statements, but should any queries arise it will be a pleasure for me to explain further.

HOPE.

Thomas Curtis Clark.

THE deeds that through the world have rung
Were done 'mid doubts and fears;
The tend'rest songs that e'er were sung
Were born of tears.

The fairest visions come in dreams
In darkness of the night,
And hope's fair rainbow fairer seems
To tear-blurred sight.

The light of love more brightly shines
When fates no longer bless;
The heart of man to God inclines
When in distress.

Open-Air Gospel Meetings—An Experience

By Joseph Keevil

The city of New York, with its teeming population of over four million souls, gathered from every quarter of the globe, presents a problem to the Church that demands heroic action if a solution is to be reached. We must face the truth, taught by years of experience, that our present methods of church work do not reach the masses of our city. The problem of city evangelization is yet unsolved. And when we remember some of the noblest characters, brightest minds and devout souls that have blessed the ministry of the Church in America have given their lives for the redemption of the city, and were not permitted to see the desire of their souls satisfied, the problem impresses itself upon us.

The Humboldt Street Church of Christ is located in the Seventeenth ward of the borough of Brooklyn, a section composed of the working classes, with a large per cent of Jews and Catholics. The state census of 1905 gives this ward 66,959 souls. A religious census taken in 1906 by the Church Federation divides the population as follows: Roman Catholic, 5,255; Jews, 511; Buddhists, 2; Latter Day Saints, 1; with a total Protestant membership of only 4,232. Or, within fifteen minutes' walk of our church building, there are 56,958 souls who do not claim any church affiliation whatever.

In the face of this great unchurched population, the Protestant churches are only just holding their own. Church attendance, as a rule, is composed of the "faithful few." Not a single church is crowded at any of the regular services. We are forced to face the fact that we are not meeting the rapidly changing conditions, and as a result we find the Church here is losing its hold upon the people. The people will not come to the Church, so the Church must go to the people. It was honestly facing this condition that the Humboldt Street Church felt the imperative need of putting forth a worthy effort to discharge her duty in reaching the unchurched masses around her.

Open air meetings have been held in the city with success. In this way we felt we could at least present the message of salvation to the people; so the church unitedly agreed, if possible, to enter upon an open air campaign for at least the full month of August. To do such a work as we felt ought to be done, we greatly needed a trained city mission worker and money to support him. John Waugh, who for seven years had served acceptably the Brooklyn City Missionary Society, and had about three years ago united with the Church of Christ, was persuaded to lead in the work. Our State Missionary Society, the American Christian Missionary Society and M. L. Bates contributed liberally to his support, and made possible the work. The meetings lasted from July 28 to Sept. 1. We conducted 34 meetings on fifteen different street corners, touching as far as possible the main thoroughfares, where the larger audience could be gathered. The meetings were well attended. We reached each night from one hundred to a thousand people with the gospel message. The people heard us gladly and marked interest was manifest. Suitable literature was distributed. Eight thousand cards containing a clear, definite statement of our position on one side, with a picture of the church printed on the other, were carefully distributed. Two thousand five hundred copies of our church paper, "Gospel Herald," were especially prepared for distribution, and over 2,500 tracts were carefully given away. Chief among them were, "What the Disciples Practice and Teach," by I. J. Spencer; "The Disciples of Christ; Their Plea as a Religious People," by F. D. Power; "The Unity of All Christians," by W. J. Wright, and "The Doctrine and Progress of the Christian Church," by W. J. Wright. We aimed constantly to make the whole work constructive. We preached the gospel, presented the aim and plea of the Church in a straightforward way, placed special emphasis upon the truths for which we stand as a people. The church stood loyally by the work, many of our ladies helping in the singing and distributing literature. Our Men's League and the church officers helped in every way possible. This has been a blessing to us, and we hope a much greater blessing to the thousands who heard us.

The campaign was educational. We kept constantly before us the aim to, 1. Preach the whole gospel to the people; 2. To acquaint the people with the work and teaching of the Church of Christ; 3. To get acquainted with all who could be interested in our work. The first was done faithfully by Brother Waugh. Each night the New Testament plan of salvation was clearly presented. It was refreshing to hear the great and vital truths of Christianity preached on the streets as Brother Waugh is fully capable of preaching them. He should be kept at it. The second aim was accomplished by the preaching and the tracts, etc., distributed. The third aim was accomplished by personal work during the meeting and at the close. Brother Waugh, assisted by the ladies, did splendid work in house to house visitation. A large list of individuals and families not members of any church have been secured. These we hope to interest more and win them for Christ and the Church. With this in view, arrangements are now completed for a special protracted meeting this fall, to be held by our state evangelist. This has been a time of seed-sowing. We look to the Lord for the harvest. The work has demonstrated three facts:

First—The open air work is a practical way to help solve the problem of reaching the masses in the centers of population.

Second—The Disciples of Christ present the message of the gospel that wins the attention and sympathy of the people.

Third—The Disciples of Christ are especially equipped to enter upon work of this character because of their special message, and they can accomplish greater results than the denominational churches.

I wish in closing to express my appreciation of the help given by our missionary societies and Brother Bates, and of the splendid work done by Brother Waugh. As a church we are stronger. By our experiences we shall profit and lay our plans better and stronger for a campaign next summer, until every man, woman and child in this section shall have heard of Christ. This we believe to be our duty; this, by the help of God, we hope to accomplish.

CHANGE FOOD

And Lose That Uneasy Feeling

A man who has always been a "skinny chap," although hardly ever ill, tells of the way he put on flesh and reduced his irritability and nervous condition.

By chance he had a taste of Grape-Nuts food at the table of a friend and enjoyed the flavour so much that he began to have it every meal. He says:

"In a short time I found myself another person, the old feeling of discontent and uneasiness left me entirely, it became a pleasure to go about my work, whereas, before, for years, I had always had the feeling of being a little weary, but now I seem to have a surplus of energy for everything; my weight has increased 11 pounds in four weeks, and am still gaining.

"I have never been very sick and am satisfied if my present improvement in health continues, I shall not be.

"The change that this food has made in my life has been remarkable and so satisfactory that I am glad of the opportunity to tell you." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Baptists—Disciples

By Claris Yeuell

Dr. W. T. Moore is correct in his diagnosis of the theological symptoms existing among Baptists and Disciples in certain sections of the country. In Dr. Edgar E. Folk's "neck of the woods" baptism is the sum of all bigotries and the Disciples in the same "settlements" are the "abomination of desolation," although perhaps not spoken of by Daniel the prophet. Brother Moore reaches his conclusions from books; I reach mine from personal contact. To "monkey with" the union question in the South is casting pearls before swine and wasting sweetness on the desert air. I draw no distinctions between Baptists and Disciples in this matter; they are all dipped in the same pond. Catholic, irenic, I might almost say Christian Baptists and Disciples are, like angel visits, few and far between. The curse of strict construction is on both their houses. Legalism is their presiding genius. If a Baptist becomes a Disciple, he is made twofold more a child of law than he was before, and most of them that I have met had better remained Baptists. I think that as Baptists they did, perhaps, have a little more of the milk of human kindness.

The Methodists of the South are the most unifying influence here. They stand for enlightenment and Christian usefulness and charity to a greater extent than does any other body. In fact, all over, Methodism is deserving of much more praise than Disciples have usually meted out to it, and in seeking allies we ought to look more in that direction. In practical everyday unity Methodism is giving us lessons which we need to learn. I believe our committees would do more toward promoting unity by "conferencing" with the Methodists than with the Baptists, or almost any other body. Family quarrels seldom heal. They are the worst kind. Baptists and Disciples are too much of the same family and are too much alike to see much that is good in each other, and they can see each other's faults.

Brother Moore says: "I am quite sure that not one in a hundred of the Baptist preachers outside of the Southern Baptist Association would agree with what Dr. Folk says about their own faith." While the percentage is probably much larger, the Southern Baptists are practically "the Baptist Church in America," very much as the Southern Democrats are the Democratic party in America. In dealing with the Baptists we have to deal principally with the Southern Baptists—they are the Baptists—and they are too high a persimmon for us to touch. Anyway, what good have we accomplished by the various overtures we have made to unite with any religious body? Better, perhaps, stick to our own knitting, keep our boat close to the shore, preach the gospel in its simplicity, sweetness and strength, and practice unity among ourselves and cultivate courtesy toward all.

speak of preaching, in contrast with teaching, I am not speaking of that preaching characteristic of apostolic times, which was also teaching, but of the modern sermon or address rather, where a text is used simply as a point of departure.

We should not feel that in every service there should be a sermon. There may be the enforcement of the scriptures upon mind and heart by teaching as well, if not better, than by preaching. I would rather have twelve persons studying their Bibles, than the same number listening to a sermon.

Right here is one of the most grievous maladies of the race, not only in heathenlands, but in the heart of Christendom; right here, right here amid our churches is ignorance, ignorance of the things concerning man's highest interests for time and eternity. The people are still as of old "perishing for the lack of knowledge." The supreme need of the audiences that fill our churches is not the awakening and cultivation of their emotional natures by the power of music and song; not the gratification of their taste for novelty and display and entertainment, but it is light they need—the light of the Word of God to dispel the darkness of ignorance that rests on their souls.

Before we shall reach adults in large numbers, emphasis must be laid upon the ministry of teaching, and upon the Bible school as the best agency we now have in our churches, through which we may secure the desired results; and this matter must be stressed by the preacher from the pulpit.

In my humble opinion, there is one other thing needed to accomplish this desired end, and that is, a closer relationship between the Bible school and the church,—a relationship that will destroy the line of demarcation between them that now exists, and make them really one. It ought to be possible to define the Bible school in truth as the church engaged in the study of the Word of God, but every one knows that such a definition would falsify the facts. The nearest I have ever seen the problem solved, of how to get all the church into the Bible school, has been when there has been a combination of the two services, and I do not believe it can be done otherwise.

Of all the excuses offered by adults as reasons for not attending the Bible school, none is more frequently heard than this one, "I just haven't time." Sometimes this is a flimsy excuse, but it is a fact that we do have so many services, that it is with difficulty one attends all. If this situation is keeping from the Bible school many who ought to be there, and, if the school is so important, then why not have fewer services? So long as we have two morning services, clearly set off from each other, people will choose between the two, and those who elect to remain away from the Bible school will be adults.

Doubtless, to some, this suggestion may appear like an innovation, that "it is not the way the fathers did." But we should not make the mistake of supposing that our accustomed way, perhaps the ancestral way, or indeed any particular way of doing things is piety. God is not served by any particular routine, and as his ministers, you and I should not be content with simply making certain wheels go round so many times every seven days, but should look for something profitable, that is worth while and that will bring results.

Why is not the church bold enough and strong enough to shake off the fetters of conservatism and cultivate a spirit of enterprise? Why stand stock still, or run in ruts, instead of keeping pace with human progress? Why hold fast methods and measures of an obsolete past, in face of better plans? An enterprising people will study progress, drop dead forms and effete usages; dare what is new if it be better, and hold to what is old, only as it proves vital and vitalizing. God is not served by any particular routine.

Ten years ago I undertook to work out the theory that the different services on the Lord's day should be different in character, that no two services should have exactly the same object; that the morning services should be especially for the edification and building up of the membership in the faith, and the evening service an appeal to the unbelieving.

In some way we must reach our adult people with systematic instruction in the Word of God, and the only hope of reaching a considerable number of such people is to utilize a Lord's day service for this purpose. Week day or week night meetings are poorly attended, so I suggest as a plan for enlisting the rank and file of church membership in Bible study, a teaching service, that will be a combination of the now existing morning services from which nothing shall be eliminated that is essential to either.

At the West Side Church in Springfield, we have been demonstrating the value of such an arrangement as that of which we have been speaking. The morning service is known as the Teaching Service. The Bible school is no less a school, and the usual morning preaching service has nothing eliminated that is essential, and it makes possible the holding of the two within a period of two hours. This arrangement has contributed very materially to the Adult Bible class attendance. Before this plan was introduced, we had a Bible class of about 3 members. In one month after adopting this new order, the enrollment had increased to 120, in two months to 191, and now practically all who attend the morning service are in the class recitation, though not all are enrolled as members. With a resident church membership of 473 that we can account for, we have a Bible school enrollment of 550 (this is without counting home department or cradle roll), and the senior or adult department enrolls about one-half this number.

After all has been said pro and con upon the subject, that which militates chiefly against adult attendance is an improper conception of the importance of the Bible school, and the multiplicity of services. Correct these two errors—lead the people to see their need of the service which the Bible school renders, and then make it easier for them to attend by reducing the number of services, and the matter of having a large adult attendance will be comparatively easy.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Vacation time is closing. Bethany Beach is the ideal place to rest. Plenty of sleep, long and quiet hours, abundance of pure air and sunshine, freedom from care and worry, good fellowship, wholesome food and exercise, back to nature in its best forms—this means peace, rest, health. I took three fourteen-mile walks which did more good than a month of Chautauqua programs, with note book and pencil and unceasing rush to keep up with lectures, or a year of the bustle and hustle of Atlantic City. Overtaxed brains and tired nerves can not find a sanitarium on earth equal to a stroll to "the Inlet" and back again along our Delaware beach. Bishop Coleman, of the Blue Hen State, has set a fine example to the preachers in his walking tours. For fifty years this gentleman has found recreation and pleasure in these journeyings, and, though in his seventy-first year, is as enthusiastic as ever over the delights of pedestrianism and attributes his vigor and ability to do hard work to this healthful exercise. He lays aside his clerical garb and dons the attire of an everyday citizen, uses no disguise, but does not tell who he is and finds his

"Theaters in roadside nooks,
Where men are actors and suspect it not."

Last year the bishop's tour covered 210 miles along the Susquehanna and through the Cumberland valley. He walked an average of twenty-one miles a day, his banner day being twenty-six miles. He has many entertaining experiences. Last year he was asked several times what he had to sell and what industry he represented, was taken at one place for a fortune teller, and was offered a job at picking apples by a farmer. The cost of such a vacation tour is very trifling. At one hotel where he stopped to spend the night he secured supper, lodging and breakfast for 50 cents, and at times has been given reduced rates under the impression that he was too poor to ride. Sometimes he has slept in barns. He sees the country, comes in close touch with the people, gets back to mother nature, and returns a new man to his work. So Delaware can teach us how to get an ideal outing. At the beach one can walk a dozen miles north or south over silver sand to heavenly music and never strike a board walk, or steel pier, or carousal; or he can stroll along beautiful country lanes by lovely farms and through splendid colonnades of pines, and by his walk, and his conversation with nature and men, find rest. Legs are a great institution. I have sometimes felt through automobiles, airships, electric cars and all that, legs would gradually become extinct; so use them while you may—they are going fast. I have a standing challenge to any preacher to walk from Washington to Harper's Ferry, only sixty miles, but can not get an acceptance. Six miles a day is my ordinary indulgence.

The closing days of the assembly at Bethany Beach were full of interest. Prof. George Gerwig, J. E. Stuart and Miss Mattie Pounds were with us. The church there is without a pastor. We need a live man who can not only care for the little congregation at Ocean View and do some missionary work on "The Shore," but also direct the interests of our summer program. It is an excellent field for a wide-awake and up-to-date young preacher. The Washington churches have fulfilled their promise for dog days—"All services all summer." We fight the slump. All preachers who close meetings in hot weather simply cater to the slump. My first summer at the capital my elders said to me: "We close for Sunday evenings in July and August." I said: "I don't believe in it, but if it is your custom I will yield." Then, I thought, I can visit the other churches and hear the other preachers, and it will be easy on me to get up only one sermon a week. My first Sunday evening I started out and visited three churches and found them all closed. I was disgusted. My second was equally profitless. The next summer I said to the elders: "You can stay at home Sunday nights if you wish. I don't require of you the second service. But there may be other needy souls like myself hunting around for a place to worship on Sunday evenings in the heated term and I shall have a place for them." Since then for thirty-one summers we have never closed and our summer attendance has always been respectable and often large.

Prof. Philip Johnson, of Bethany, preached two Lord's days and J. H. Craig, of Indiana, one at Vermont Avenue. Recently L. G. Batman and M. M. Davis have been among our visitors, and our saints heard them with great profit. Rudolph Heicke, of Iowa, also has been a welcome visitor. Six were added during the summer. Sunday, September 8, the pastor preached his thirty-second anniversary sermon. The year past has been altogether the best of the thirty-two. "Ebenezer!"

George A. Miller spent his vacation in Illinois and Kentucky and held two meetings, at one of which he had nine additions. There have been nine added also at Ninth Street Church. C. M. Kriedler and E. B. Bagby filled the pulpit during the pastor's absence. W. F. Smith, of Whitney Avenue, took his rest in July in Kentucky and Virginia. W. G. Oram, of the H Street Church, summered in Ohio and our lay preachers conducted his services in August. Claude C. Jones, of Thirty-fourth Street, Chautauquaed. He has the Chautauqua habit. Smith had three additions and Jones five during the summer. Thirty-fourth Street is about to build a $6,500 chapel. W. T. Laprade, of our Vienna Church, held meetings in Virginia during his vacation and baptized nine. J. E. Stuart, Fifteenth Street, was away only two Sundays, preaching at Charlottesville, Va., and Bethany Beach. Five have been lately added to his fold. A. E. Ziegler has been preaching for the Tuxedo Church. The work at the capital is prospering and promises well for the coming winter. Best of all, several of our young men are turning their attention to the ministry, and our lay preachers have been doing good service and the Sunday-schools in all the churches have nearly as many members as there are communicants in the churches themselves. It will surprise you if you study the matter, to see how infrequently this is true among the Disciples of Christ.

Now for the conventions. We of Washington are first of all deeply interested in the Maryland state meeting at Christian Temple, Baltimore, October 1-3. It will be our "veribest." Preachers' day, October 1, the program of which you will see in this paper, is a red letter day; and all the rest will be of the same quality. Then Norfolk, October 11-17. We are to have good times at Norfolk. Old Virginia hospitality we will have at Norfolk. Best of all missionary reports we shall hear at Norfolk. Some specially important meetings we are going to hold at Norfolk. A great exposition session with J. H. Garrison as a speaker at the auditorium we are to enjoy at Norfolk. Nobody can afford to lose Norfolk.

FOUND OUT

A Trained Nurse Made Discovery.

No one is in better position to know the value of food and drink than a trained nurse.

Speaking of coffee, a nurse of Wilkes Barre, Pa., writes: "I used to drink strong coffee myself, and suffered greatly from headaches and indigestion. While on a visit to my brothers I had a good chance to try Postum Food Coffee, for they drank it altogether in place of ordinary coffee. In two weeks after using Postum I found I was much benefited and finally my headaches disappeared and also the indigestion.

"Naturally I have since used Postum among my patients, and have noticed a marked benefit where coffee has been left off and Postum used.

"I observed a curious fact about Postum when used among mothers. It greatly helps the flow of milk in cases where coffee is inclined to dry it up, and where tea causes nervousness.

"I find trouble in getting servants to make Postum properly. They most always serve it before it has been boiled long enough. It should be boiled 15 to 20 minutes after boiling begins and served with cream, when it is certainly a delicious beverage." Read "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Our Budget

—Already our state secretaries are looking forward to the offering for state mission work, which will be taken the first Lord's day in November. We shall hope to publish, at an early date, a report of the progress and plans from the leaders of our work in the states all over the country, and give them this notification to get their copy prepared.

—Those who have not read our serial story might begin it by commencing with the chapter wherein the judge's son is restored. A returned missionary writes that he wishes it might be true historically, and not only fiction; but we may say this is based on a striking and real case which came under the author's observation, while all the characters and acts woven into the story have been taken from real life that have come under his observation and ministry. We trust that every one will give the story a fair reading and see its real purpose.

—Just as we go to press comes announcement of conventions of Western Washington at Centralia, September 23-27, and Montana, at Missoula, September 22-25. Brethren should try to get their important news to us earlier.

—The party going with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special to our convention will start from St. Louis on Tuesday afternoon, October 8, going via the Big Four and the Chesapeake and Ohio. We will see the best of the scenery through the mountains, will stop at Richmond, and have a boat ride down the historic James River to Norfolk. We are planning to come back by steamer up to Mount Vernon, going thence to Washington. Fuller particulars will appear in our next issue. Those desiring to go with us should write at once, stating whether they wish us to make reservations for sleepers and hotels.

—Arrangements have been made for a new house of worship at Bedford, Ky., after a first visit of John T. Holton, who is to preach also at Olive Hill. We trust that he will have a very successful work and we know that he is going about it in the right way.

—In addition to his regular preaching at the Third Church, Indianapolis, Harry G. Hill has addressed county meetings recently at Brownsburg, Hendricks county; Lebanon, Boone county; and Franklin, Johnson county. We have more than forty churches in these three counties, and each meeting was attended by large delegations.

The brethren enter upon the new year with purposes and ideals for yet larger things.

WORLD'S GREATEST SKIN CURE

And Purest and Sweetest of Emollients for Skin, Scalp, Hair and Hands is Cuticura Ointment.

Cuticura Ointment is beyond question the most successful curative for torturing, disfiguring humors of the skin and scalp, including loss of hair, ever compounded, in proof of which a single anointing with it, preceded by a hot bath with Cuticura Soap, is often sufficient to afford immediate relief in the most distressing forms of itching, burning, and scaly humors, eczemas, irritations, and inflammations, permit rest and sleep, and point to a speedy cure of infants, children, and adults when all else fails.

—James M. Brewster has resigned his work at Belle, Mo., where he has been laboring ten months. During this period there were 25 additions—19 of them having come in a special meeting. He reports the work progressing and a new preacher wanted. He is ready to labor either as a singing evangelist or in the pastorate. He prefers central Missouri.

—C. L. Dean has been visiting Colorado, and accepted a call to the church at Loveland. He will enter upon his field November 1. We have a membership of about 200 there and a good property. Health compels him to seek this new field a few miles from the Rockies. Brother Dean has ministered for the church at Woodward, Ia., during the past two years.

—A note from Brother Durham calls our attention to the fact that the names of J. J. Haley and W. R. Warren were omitted, by mistake, from his report of the California convention. Brother Durham indicates that the fault lies in St. Louis. We regret that any lines were lost from the report, and gladly state that the presence of these brethren was an inspiration to the convention.

—We continue to hear good reports of the congregation at Bryan, Texas. They have just increased their church extension offering from $5.50 to $20.25. In view of the fact that a heavy payment was due on their handsome new church and that the membership is not a large one and none of them wealthy, this shows the right spirit. James A. Challener rejoices that his lot is cast with them.

—J. F. Williams has been filling the pulpit for a couple of Sundays for the First Christian Church, Wilkensburg, Pa., in the absence of George W. Nepper, the pastor. Brother Williams is planning to devote all of his time to the ministry. Brothers Warren, Slater, and his church board, and others will vouch for Brother Williams. He may be addressed at 520 Wallace avenue, Wilkensburg, Pa.

—Howard J. Brazelton has closed a three years' pastorate at Earlington, Ky., and accepted a unanimous call to the church at Macon, Ga., upon which field he has just entered. In his late work there were eighty-seven additions, with $4,500 raised for all purposes, $1,000 of which went to missions and benevolences. His successor at Earlington has not, so far as we are aware, been chosen. The work there is well organized.

—The members of the church at Canon City, Colo., where J. B. Hunley ministers, are rejoicing that H. O. Breeden is to conduct their meeting and dedicate their handsome new house of worship. The meeting is to begin September 22, and continues for a month. Mrs. Hunley, the pastor's wife, will be the soloist. A great advance has been made along all lines in this difficult field, and prospects are good for success in the coming meeting.

—The building at Shelbyville, Ind., has just been repaired, recarpeted, etc., at a cost of $1,000. The Ladies' Aid had charge of the work and all expenses have been met. As the building was erected in 1902 and is of Bedford stone, it is now in excellent condition. Large audiences were present and there have been eighteen confessions and two additions by letter since the last report. H. O. Pritchard is the minister.

—Bro. George Lobingier and his wife will celebrate the fiftieth aniversary of their marriage on Monday evening, September 23, at the First Christian Church, Lincoln, Neb. Being necessarily absent in body at the time, we wish to be considered present in spirit on that occasion, with our heartiest congratulations to these faithful servants of God for their completion of a half century of happy and useful married life. May their last years be their brightest and best.

—Ralph C. Sargent has just taken up the work at Ellensburg, Wash., having closed a pastorate of nearly four years at Pullman. During this time a building valued at $20,000 was erected and most of that money provided for. More than 300 were added to the membership and the net membership more than doubled. The church has observed the regular missionary offerings and has some of the most faithful and devoted workers of the brotherhood.

—L. J. McConnell and his wife go to Pasadena, Cal., leaving Shreve, Ohio, where they have been about two years, having gone from Youngstown to that point. Mrs. McConnell is an ordained minister, and she is of great assistance to her husband. Both are graduates of Hiram College. During his two years' recent ministry there were some 80 additions to the membership, an old debt of $1,500 wiped out, and many improvements put upon the building.

—Mansfield, Ohio, a city of about 22,000, has a Christian Church Sunday-school with an attendance of about 385 for the past quarter. This school wants to enter upon a contest with any other in a city of less than 50,000, where the average attendance for the past quarter has been less than 500, the points to count to be agreed upon by the contestants and the contest to run the fourth quarter. J. H. Donaldson, of the Mansfield Lumber Co., is the superintendent of the school.

—The seventeenth anniversary of A. C. Smither's pastorate at the First Christian Church, Los Angeles, Cal., was celebrated on September 8. There were special services in the Sunday-school and Endeavor society. The pastor preached in the morning and delivered a stereopticon illustrated lecture, being the first of a series of evening sermons on his recent trip through the Orient. Brother Smither, we believe, has been in one pulpit longer than any other preacher west of the Rockies.

—J. H. Reeves has resigned the work at Carthage, South Dakota, and will go soon to Oacoma and Presho. He is remaining a little while to complete his work at Carthage, where a house of worship is being erected. When the congregation is housed he will take up the other work, which he feels needs him. Mrs. Reeves, who was engaged by the Ramona church, has already gone to their new field of work. Both of them speak in very complimentary terms of the brethren at Carthage and Ramona.

—Our congregation at Lexington, Mo., has let the contract to George Kilgen & Son, of St. Louis, for a new pipe organ which is to be an exceptionally large and complete one. A special arch will be built at the east side of the pulpit. It will take some four months to build the instrument. R. B. Briney enters upon his sixth year as pastor of this church this fall. On the first Sunday in November, E. L. Powell is to begin a meeting. All of which goes to show that the church is in excellent condition and looking forward to a greater work.

Opportunity for Young Men

To study for the ministry and work part time to help pay expenses. Write Pres. C. J. Burton, Ph. B., Pres. Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

—F. D. Power has, during his thirty-two years' ministry in Washington, paid more than 50,000 visits and preached over 5,000 sermons. There have been at least 1,672 additions and out of his congregation there have been established seven churches in and about the city with a total of 2,300 communicants, and more than 2,100 in the Bible schools. This is a growth from one small chapel with 150 in its congregation. To-day this church has 621 enrolled members and 470 in its Bible school. During the past year it raised over $8,000. The past year was its best.

—The brethren at the Roland Street Church, Syracuse, N. Y., have just issued their first weekly bulletin, which is a very neat appearing sheet. We notice that the first recital on the new pipe organ at the Central Church is announced. Experts pronounce the new instrument very good. It was made possible through the benefaction of Mr. Andrew Carnegie. It is the aim of the Roland Street Church to make their Men's League a model. C. R. Stauffer, the minister, sees the need of much personal work and is getting a grasp of the situation.

—During the first week of September the Board of Church Extension received $1,100 on the Annuity Plan, $500 of this amount coming from a sister in California and $600 from friends in Indiana. The second week in September the board received an annuity of $6,000. This is encouraging to those who are contemplating making gifts to the board in this manner, and the Board of Church Extension is a good and profitable fund in which to place money. For information in regard to the annuity plan, address G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—While these lines are being written, the brethren in Kentucky are looking toward their convention, which will be in session when our paper is published. We learn that arrangements are being made to place a living link in the field by the church at Owensboro, while the executive committee of South Kentucky has arranged for W. E. Spain to assist the general evangelist all the time as leader of song. He is a young man of splendid character and accomplished as a musician. An office secretary is to be employed soon. This will permit the general evangelist, W. J. Hudspeth, to be in the field almost constantly.

—In another column we publish some last words from Dr. Osgood who, with his wife, returns to their field in China. Dr. Osgood has accomplished a great deal for the foreign work during his visit to this country, both by his speeches and his writing. He has a faculty for picturing the missionary life and a great many incidents to present. We have encouraged him to write for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and have in hand, and in promise, contributions from him. Many will be glad to know that probably a book from the pen of Dr. Osgood will appear before very long under the title, "Breaking Down Chinese Walls."

J. L. Hill and wife have just been welcomed back at the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, after a two months' visit to Europe. The auditorium was beautifully decorated for the "home-coming" services. On Monday evening a brilliant reception was given Mr. and Mrs. Hill at the church. During his absence, Evangelist W. H. Pinkerton supplied for him. This was a very happy arrangement, as Brother Pinkerton had conducted two revival meetings at the Central Church, and is known and loved by the congregation. He will continue in evangelistic work, and is engaged already for a number of meetings far in advance. His present address is Ghent, Ky.

—Some of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST departmental heads have been feasting royally at the editorial lunch table for a few days, owing to the kindness of some thoughtful country friends. A good-sized box, fresh from the garden of Elder J. H. Smart and his wife, at Decatur, Ill., came by express, and the delicious fruit and vegetables were matched by some toothsome young chickens. From Pike county, too, came a donation to the feast, sent in the care of one of the young ladies to whose watchfulness every week many of our Sunday-schools are indebted. This is one of the compensations that we had for grinding away at the daily toil in St. Louis in the midst of the hot season. It was a real feast, and we thank the donors.

—On the first Sunday in September, Russell F. Thrapp entered upon the seventh year of his minstry wth the church at Jacksonvlle, Ill., where the State Convention has just assembled. There has been substantial growth under his leadership, no less than 794 persons having been added to the roll. The Bible school has trebled in membership and the amount collected for missions has increased six-fold. Brother Thrapp was born at Tallula and educated at Eureka College, and has been in active pastoral work for eighteen years. The Jacksonville Daily says that no minister in that city is more universally liked and trusted by the people of all denominations.

—A preacher in West Virginia, being anxious to go to the convention, asked THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST how he could do this. It was suggested that he get some subscribers for the paper. He writes as follows: "Not being a canvasser, but just a common country preacher, I was a little fearful, thinking I would never be able to get so many subscribers, but I got nine this morning in about two and a half hours, and most of these are non-Christians. so you can count on my being one of the preachers going from this state." This country preacher wants us to put his name on our book list to receive one book per month. "There is," he says, "one thing I like about THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and that is it does not try to take sides on all fool questions and opinions of some big men to the exclusion of good reading matter. The article of Hamilton Jefferson Lintwhite is timely and to the point."

—We regret to record the death of two workers in foreign fields. Strother M. Cook, missionary at Lagos and the Yorubu country, died at Ibadan, West Africa, June 1. Brother Cook has been carrying on an independent work there for some years and was not widely known among the brotherhood. His sister, Mrs. Lucy J. King, lives at Burgin, Ky. A. B. Maston, the editor of "The Australian Christian," is dead at his home, Melbourne, Australia. He was born in Ohio fifty-four years ago, and went to the land of his adoption in 1880. As a preacher and publisher of Christian literature he took there a foremost part. He leaves a wife and two sons and two daughters. The boys are at present at school in this country, Harry being at Hiram and Roy at Valparaiso University. News of his death on August 20 was received by cablegram. Very many in this country will be sorry to learn of the departure of this good man.

—We have received an appeal from Henry C. Canter, one of our brethren in Indianapolis, Ind., who has had a sad time during the past year, owing to sickness in his home. Three of his family, all about grown, were removed in five weeks by typhoid fever. One, after three months' dangerous sickness, is spared, but both Brother and Sister Canter are left in poor health, with several children to support and with a small salary to meet heavy expenses. By the kindness of friends his actual indebtedness has been reduced to a little under $40. His case seems to be a very deserving one, and we feel sure that there are those among our readers who would like to help him meet his obligations and get on his feet before the approaching winter adds to his burdens. Contributions may be sent to him at 1120 North State avenue, Indianapolis, Ind., or to C. E. Underwood, minister of the Fourth Christian Church, 927 North West street, at that place.

—On another page we publish an account of an attempt on the part of some of our brethren in Brooklyn, N. Y., to carry on some street meetings. In late years this method of propaganda has been left largely with the Salvation Army and volunteers, but in England it is still a very common custom for the churches of all denominations to have bands of workers go out in the summer evenings, both during the week and on Lord's day. The success which has attended the efforts of Brother Keevil and Brother Waugh at Brooklyn ought to cause workers in other parts of the country to test this kind of work in their own fields. For a long time it has been largely left in the hands of the city missionaries and lay-members, but now some of the strongest preachers in the country see what can be done in reaching the masses by this method. We understand that from July 28 for a period of five weeks only two meetings were missed, and these because of rain, and there were thirty-four in all held.

A Million for Missions in 1907.

Do you remember the rejoicing and thanksgiving when it was announced in Tomlinson hall just ten years ago that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society had passed the $100,000 goal? And how the rafters of Music Hall at Cincinnati resounded at the jubilee convention in 1899 when the American Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions each reached the same high water mark? But what a pity so few of us were in San Francisco in 1905 when Muckley reported a half million fund and Rains announced a quarter million in the year's offerings!

But watch Norfolk!

Already there is a gain of $10,000 for the American Christian Missionary Society. The people are multiplying who say, "It must be Christian America!" The secretaries have put their work where it would count. The San Francisco reconstruction offering will swell the total. Mark the increase announced at Norfolk!

Do you think the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will stop at its modest aim of $215,000?

Why, that would be an increase of only $9,000!

Is not every auxiliary striving to break its own best record? Are not thousands of grateful women and enthusiastic Juniors throwing in extra offerings at the year's close—just to heap up the measure?

Three hundred thousand dollars for Foreign Missions!

The advance has been steady throughout the year. Possibly enough unremitted money is now in the hands of church treasurers to make up the total. But the friends of our Lord will not rest in that confidence. There are annuities to be closed up in the last month of the missionary year. Personal offerings from men and women who are loyal to the Christ of the missionaries and true to those for whom he died will put the grand total beyond the chance of falling below the $300,000 needed for this year's work.

Did you notice the new churches in line for Church Extension last year? Well, the missionary churches are moving up to make it unanimous for that million dollars by 1909. We must have it for our unbuilt churches. There is no one else to provide it, so we are bringing in $100,000 this year! Read Medbury's "Loyalty to the Loyal."

It is eminently fitting that the people whose purpose is the restoration of apostolic Christianity should be the first in America to organize a National Benevolent Association. And the rapid growth of this work in its hands is one of the surest evidences of the movement's fidelity to first principles. The eleventh institution of this ministry, a Home for the Aged, is just being opened in Eugene, Ore. The brethren of the Northwest have provided it. The erection of a new building for the Central Orphanage at St. Louis has been made possible by Robert H. Stockton's gift of $50,000. But as the whole brotherhood shares the honor and the benefits of this holy service, all of us should have a share in the maintenance and advancement of the work. The year closes September 30. The report will be made at Norfolk next month. What have you done? What has your church done? There is time enough yet, if you will be prompt in sending an offering of $1 or $100 to J. H. Mohorter, general secretary, 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

What about the states? About forty commonwealths and numerous smaller districts are doing missionary work that counts. They have not been idle this second year of the Centennial campaign. Southern California and Arizona reached their goal of $10,000 from 10,000 Disciples. Northern California in its ashes increased its offering, 33 1-3 per cent. Wait till Kentucky and Missouri, Ohio and Illinois and the other big ones finish the year and then hear the grand total!

Come to Norfolk and hear it! Watch your paper and read it. Consider what you have done or failed to do for each one of these great interests and amend the record in this month of grace. Make sure that your church, Bible school and Christian Endeavor are all in on every count. Clinch the year's effort with a personal offering. Then you can shout hallalelujah and sing Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow. For behold! He has given the increase and made of your pittance a million!

A million for missions! With faint hope we sought to reach it by 1909 and our feeble efforts have been rewarded while our meagre faith has been rebuked by a million in 1907!

The note of joy will ring all the clearer and stronger because the year has also borne surpassing fruits for education, benevolence and local work.

W. R. Warren,
Centennial Secretary.

Union Bible School Institute at Indianapolis

We believe it has been left to the Christian churches of Indianapolis to inaugurate the newest plan for simultaneous campaigns. Other cities have led in simultaneous evangelism and kindred movements, but so far as we know the campaign which is now on among the fourteen Christian churches of Indianapolis is the first of its kind in the whole history of the Sunday-school movement.

Last winter all the churches of the city united in a simultaneous evangelistic movement, which has resulted in a splendid increase and enthusiasm among our churches generally. No better evidence can be given of this fact than to say that eight of our fourteen churches are now planning to build larger and more convenient houses of worship, being urged by the necessity of congregations that have outgrown their present quarters.

The ministry of our city is remarkable for its fellowship and fraternal feeling; the congregations for their oneness of purpose and loyal co-operation. These conditions have led the pastors and church workers to consider and plan for further union efforts. At the last meeting of the ministerial association preceding the summer vacation, Bro. L. L. Faris, the associate pastor of the Third Christian Church, and a specialist in the Sunday-school department, read a paper before the ministers on "Some Practical Phases of Sunday-school Work." The discussion that followed led to the appointment of a Sunday-school commission composed of five of the preachers, which met frequently during the summer to report its investigations along the lines of Sunday-school methods and up-to-date plans. This investigation was carried on quite extensively, the commission considering fairly and open-mindedly almost every phase of Sunday-school work that had anywhere been tried by the more aggressive schools. The result of their findings was embodied in a little pamphlet which has been scattered broadcast among the Sunday-school and church workers of the city. This little leaflet proposes a simultaneous Sunday-school campaign, and provides the lines along which it is to be conducted. Believing that the plan is a wise and good one and that other cities might care to take advantage of the commission's conclusions, made after very careful consideration, we desire to give to the public some of the peculiar features of this campaign.

The first step taken by the commission was to call together in a mass meeting the Sunday-school workers in our fourteen churches, that they might have laid before them the plan of the campaign and the urgent need of more aggressive methods in the modern Sunday-school. The attendance at this mass meeting was an agreeable surprise to the most sanguine. The enthusiasm kindled at that time was carried back to all the schools there represented. It was decided to have a general campaign committee consisting of the pastor and Sunday-school superintendent and one representative from each Sunday-school. The members of the investigating commission were made ex-officio members of this general committee and the officers of the committee. As they stand at present this commission consists of L. L. Faris, chairman; O. E. Tomes, secretary and treasurer; Austin Hunter, Charles Underwood and H. G. Hill. Standing committees have been appointed to have in charge special details of the campaign. Plenty of time has been taken to allow for thorough information on the part of everybody that could possibly be interested, and not a little enthusiasm has been aroused. Each one of the city papers has given considerable space to the important features of the movement, and by keeping the matter constantly before the people the congregations and Sunday-schools are becoming aroused to the importance of the campaign.

A union Sunday-school institute will be conducted, beginning September 19, and concluding Sunday afternoon, September 22. After extensive correspondence the program committee has secured some of the ablest Sunday-school specialists in the entire country. Perhaps the most unique feature of the entire campaign will be the simultaneous rally of all the Sunday-schools, Sunday afternoon, September 22, in Tomlinson Hall, the city's largest auditorium. The separate schools will gather on various corners of the downtown streets, form in line and, led by a military band, will march to the hall. Such a show of strength will, we believe, be a revelation to those who are ignorant or lukewarm regarding the magnitude or importance of the modern Sunday-school. Two weeks following this union rally, on October 6, each one of the schools will conduct its own rally in its own building, which will inaugurate a contest campaign which is to last for three months. In this campaign, the general efficiency of the school will determine the final rank. Weekly bulletins will be issued from the headquarters of the executive committee to all the schools, showing the standing of the various schools. These bulletins will show such items as attendance, collection, increase in attendance and collection, number of classes, number of teachers, number of teachers present, number of teachers in the teachers' meeting, number of teachers taking teachers' training course, number of teachers tardy, number enrolled in cradle roll, home department and organized adult Bible classes. And all of these items are to be taken into account by the committee on ranking, which will make its report at the close of the campaign. The movement has already begun to have its effect in the wise and far-reaching preparations made by the schools, that they may be ready to enter into the campaign with a good start. Those schools that do not now conduct teachers' meetings or teachers' training classes, and who have failed to take advantage of the home department and cradle roll, and organized adult Bible classes are now organizing and planning to add these almost essential features to the departments of their present school. Brethren of other cities that are interested in this campaign can secure further information by addressing the writer of this paper or Bro. O. E. Tomes, secretary of the commission.

Foreign Mission Notes.

At the meeting of the executive committee of the Foreign Society in Cincinnati, September 13, the following new missionaries were appointed: P. A. Sherman, Rib Lake, Wis., to either India or Africa; Miss Katherine Blackburn, of Chicago, to Bolengi, Africa, and Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Place, Bellevue, Pa., to Tokio, Japan.

The missionary conference, held in the mission rooms of the Foreign Society, September 10, 11 and 12, was the largest and most enthusiastic in the history of these conferences. Including the missionaries at home on furlough there were twenty-four missionaries of the Foreign Society present.

Last week the Foreign Society received three gifts on the annuity plan; one from a friend in Ohio, one from a friend in Indiana and another from a friend in Texas. This makes $11.300 received on the annuity plan during the month of September.

Work in Oklahoma and Indian Territory

I have just returned from Oklahoma City, where the missionary and other forces gathered for Christian work and worship.

Since leaving there I have read Thomas R. Dean's article on the subject of "the union" of the two territories' work.

On Friday morning, September 6, the question came up and, as Brother Dean feared, there arose quite an opposition, not to the union, but to the mode of accomplishment.

When Chairman Smith announced that the "two conventions were no more," and that the Oklahoma mass meeting was now in session, and Brother Dick Morgan arose and moved that we take up the report of the committee on constitution and by-laws, quite a little opposition and discussion took place, led by Brothers Morgan and Dean for, and Brothers Manly and Hawkins against. For a while it looked as if we might have a war of words, there being at times a half dozen persons, perhaps, trying to get recognition. Three times I tried to get a motion before the house, but failed, and the discussion lasted an hour or more. The motion was to allow the Indian Territory brethren to retire and settle the matter for themselves. At last Brother Hawkins told the convention that nothing else would satisfy the brethren of Indian Territory, whereupon Brother Morgan got the motion before the convention duly seconded and it carried unanimously. It was now after noon and the C. W. B. M. had the afternoon. But the Indian Territory brethren met and settled the problem favorably and were evidently better satisfied than they would have been had the convention or massmeeting endeavored to vote on the Morgan proposition.

At any rate when the assembly was called at 5:15 everything went off like clock work and by 6:15 the whole matter was concluded and the two territories were united in every good work. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Some reporter or reporters, however, missed a good opportunity.

Seen on Furlough

By William Remfry Hunt

From the pretty little gardens and the quiet landscape of an English suburb away across the seas to Chu Cheo, Central China, takes in a grand sweep of perspective. It is one of those unique, unpainted pictures which in its peculiar background, strange figures, pathetic appeal and inspiring service, is framed only in the souls of those who have lived, wrought, thought and served in such an environment.

We were much benefitted by the ocean voyage. The sea was kind and the ship was strong and we were privileged to have no less distinguished a person as companion de voyage than his majesty, the King of Siam, who, born in an eastern court and named Prabat Somdetch Pra Paramindr Maha Chulalongkorn Patindr Tepa Maha Mongkut Pra Chula Klao Chow Yu Hua! Chulalongkorn I., prominently reproduces the color and form of his environment. He is capricious and acts with an oriental's delight in the meretricious and to also a victim of ineradicable superstitions. Withal, he is a friend of civilized institutions and speaks English well. He loves travel and foreign politics and was en route to Rome, Vienna, Paris, Copenhagen, and has been the guest of King Edward at Windsor Castle. Only one of his hundred sons and less than one of his forty-one queens were with him. We had personal audience with him (never, of course, addressing him by all of his ornamental names), and he presented us with an interesting souvenir.

It has taken some time to get used to motor cars, electric trains and elevated railroads, in all the rushing life of the west. There is a terrible delirum of speed. One cannot ride a bicycle now-a-days unless he is a specialist. The motor cars clear the roads of traffic and cover them with dust clouds. We are anticipating with interest a motor car run after careful life insurance. To a man who, in normal conditions in China, rides two miles an hour, and with much caution at that, the change is, to say the least, startling. The meadows and the buttercups and daisies are as the draughts of a new nectar to us.

In the din of city life, by the sea shore, along country lane, in mansion and hamlet we have seen something again of the pathos and swirl as well as of the quiet and matchless landscape of England's natural beauty. At the Crystal Palace we listened to ten thousand voices singing selections from Handel and other immortal composers. From the heights of the Alexandra Palace we looked over London—that mightiest, most sinful and yet most philanthropic of modern emporiums. We have been entertained by its unspeakable colloquialisms, its very own accent in language, its variety of churches, its babel of conflicting theologies, and even the almost theatrical performances of its municipal acts.

At West London Tabernacle, Brighton, Southampton, Hornsey, Tulham and Gloucester I have preached to large and enthusiastic audiences. I spoke of the great work in China and gave them records of personal experiences, facts and incidents of the actual life, joys and sorrows, struggles and victories of Christian work among the Chinese.

It was a real joy to meet Dr. B. B. Tyler returning from the great Sunday-school convention in Rome. On her way back to India we met Dr. Mary Longdon in company with Alice B. Carleton, who is returning to Punjab, and who has been a student in Worcester College. She knew our own missionary colleague in Chu Cheo, Mrs. Mendenhall, and spoke very nicely of her and her influence. Dr. Mary Hess Brown, of New York, also visited us in our home. She is taking special medical work in London and Brussels. We met and welcomed home Mark Wayne Williams. These links and bonds of friendship have greatly cheered us and broadened our outlook. He said "howdy-do" to the inimitable and beloved Dr. Durban, and took afternoon tea with Dr. John Clifford, who is the greatest leader in social reforms.

From China we hear splendid reports of the great Centenary Convention. Nearly two thousand missionaries attended. The convention was unanimous in the decision of one united Christian Church in China. Nobody voted until there was unanimity. Their speeches had the ring of coin from heaven's mint. It was because of the grand fact that China is turning to Christ that these heroic, spirit-filled, apostles of the new age could thus rejoice.

"These beautiful and holy faces, Lit with their loving and aflame with God."

were turned towards the dawn of a new day for all Asia. There were represented the following:

Societies	82
Missionaries	3,833
Stations	632
Village Stations	5,102
Ordained Preachers	345
Unordained Preachers	5,722
Tribal Women	894
Pupils	57,982
Baptized Believers	178,285
Enquirers in Training	78,582

The condition of the vast fields in China was never so fruitful and never presented such great opportunities for Christian investments.

Dr. Osgood's Farewell.

To Many Readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

On September 24 we sail back by the steamship Korea to China. You are sending a goodly party of young men and women to accompany us. At least one business man will go with the party and spend the fall studying the fields where Christ is doing wonderful works in these modern days. Two ladies will go out to visit missionary friends.

We have been in America for a little over one year. You have welcomed us to many of your homes and churches. The innumerable questions you have asked, the interest with which you have listened to our addresses, the speeches you have made in our hearing, the money you have given and the wonderful kindness you have shown to us when we have been your guests have shown how much you love the great work of the Church of Christ.

We have been surprised and pleased over the wonderful change which is taking place in the American churches in their attitude toward foreign missions. The people are recognizing that the real work of the Church of Christ is to save the world. Business men and women are seeking to place this great work upon a business basis that it may be accomplished more quickly and economically. The rank and file of church members are beginning a definite study of missions.

We are going back to China greatly encouraged, for we know of the keen interest which you have in our work. We shall be glad to do anything which will tend to strengthen and deepen your fellowship with us in the saving of China for Christ. Our address is Chu Cheo via Nanking, China. A 5-cent stamp should be placed upon each letter and 2 cents on each postal sent to us. Letters from the homeland always cheer and encourage us and we shall be glad to hear from you. Trusting that this same fellowship with you will follow us to the field and that your prayers will constantly go up to the throne of God for us, we go out as yours in His service, Dr. and Mrs. E. I. Osgood.

LETTER FROM INDIA.

I have just finished reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that came this week. I wish you could know what a joy it has been to me all these weeks that you have been sending it—not only a joy but a help, an inspiration. I thank you sincerely for this kindness.

I have wanted to write in answer to your request for an article three years ago. But it has been that my best in the way of an article was not by any means fitting for a place in our "CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST." It is only of the things that fill my life here—the little, simple, every-day incidents that I can write. To us these things are momentous as life itself, to others they would be dull. Sometimes there is something that is tragic—some occurrence that would arouse interest anywhere, but so full is it of real heart-pain to some one of our brown-faced friends that we shrink from telling it outside. And as for the philosophy of the life about us and sage reasoning on the adaptation of Christianity to their needs I am going to write about those things when I can; I can not yet; I am learning, still.

But I wish I could do something to show my gratitude for this dear visitor who comes so regularly with its spiritual uplift. I am asking our Father to show me a way.

I have taken such an interest in your pioneering at Pentwater. I know how lovely it is to live under the trees while one's home is being builded in the clearing you have helped to make in the jungle. It is different here—some different—with the dense jungle undergrowth. But the beauty of the "out-of-doors" is the same and the little living things that so shyly welcome you at a distance, but, gaining confidence, finally decide to take you into partnership and let you live among them. Are there not colonies of striped squirrels in our thatched roof, and flocks of birds about in every cosy nesting corner. The very first little good we had opportunity to do after setting up our tent in the jungle was to mother two baby parrots whom some little heathen had stolen from their home, and a glad day it was some weeks after when the poor sorrowing mother heard the call of her little ones in the door of our grass hut, and after a little demurring and explaining, brought her mother offering of food to the ready little mouths and then assumed all responsibility, only letting them live with us until they could fly. We have found human mothers since with not so much grace in their hearts.

But it has been with the people around much the same as it was with the squirrels. How shy they were at first! At what a distance they would stand to gaze at us! Sometimes as we entered a village it would be deserted—not a living soul to be found. They had seen our approach, and, like wild deer, found their hiding places in the jungle. It is not so now. They come to us confidently from these villages. They know us as friends.

There was a large ingathering the second year, mostly of the wandering famine peoples who had been driven from their own villages by hunger. They had found work with us in clearing the jungle and building and had heard the teaching. So these, the very poor and ignorant, decided to stay and make homes near us and take the good gospel message to their hearts and claim its Saviour as their own.

These were not rich in grace in those beginning days, but they were willing to be taught. They have mostly prosperous homes of their own now and are growing in Christian character. Since that second year our increase has been slow. We are trying to plant our good homes where they will do the most good. It is good to see that people are learning to know Him and the hope he gives. I think the work of the spirit in India this past year has been wonderful. Have you heard much of it? India's Christians are being strengthened in the faith, filled with noble ambitions. It shows itself in humble things and in magnificent things, too. We have been rejoicing in a little paper, the organ of a national missionary society, edited, and ably edited, by a native Christian, officered by splendid native Christian men; a society that takes no notice of existing differences between Christians, but strives to work in harmony with all for the spread of the Kingdom and the deepening of Christian life. To us it means much—this reaching up, standing together. Heretofore the Indian Christians have been strangely apathetic, depending on the missionaries for every onward movement and for all support in such. This is an effort at self-supporting evangelization that is a proof of the Spirit's work.

Our Way to Build a Church.

Precisely the action, in kind, that the Englewood (Chicago) church has just taken, probably has not been known in the annals of our brotherhood.

Having on the tenth day of this month paid off the last cent of indebtedness on our ($40,000) church property, our official board two days later met to determine whether we would proceed to erect the model Sunday-school building we have for a year and more had in view, and at the same time enlarge the church auditorium. The cost of this improvement—with furnishings—it was estimated might total $50,000. The decision reached was that we would wait a few years longer and then replace our present buildings with an entirely new structure at an expenditure of not to exceed $100,000—putting at this time only a few thousand dollars into remodelling and enlarging of the present Sunday-school rooms; doubling the seating capacity, and also so throwing these rooms into the auditorium proper as to accommodate church audiences larger by 50 per cent.

Just at this juncture Brother W. S. Lockhart (the minister of one of the living links of Englewood church—the Chicago Heights work)—came before our boards, asking help, and unfolding the exceptional opportunity they have—if at once improved—of building a church in that suburb of phenomenal growth, they now having a population of 18,000 gathered within the past fifteen years.

On the following Lord's day (July 14) our minister, Charles G. Kindred, on the eve of leaving the city for his summer vacation, in an impassioned appeal before a full congregation, enforced the plea for assistance that had thus come to us from the child we have taken under our care. A called meeting of the joint boards—elders, deacons and trustees—was held July 16, with the result that at a business meeting of the church on Wednesday evening, July 24, the following recommendation was adopted by a more than two-thirds vote: "Resolved, that we recommend to the church the securing of a loan on our property of $10,000—to be reloaned to the Chicago Heights church for five years; provided they (over and above the $12,000 already secured by them in subscriptions and cash) first raise in cash an additional $10,000, said total to be used in erecting and furnishing a church building for their congregation in Chicago Heights, on which they are to give us a mortgage as security for our loan; they to bear all expense of making said loan, and to pay the interest on same, also, they agreeing to repay us as soon after dedication of their new property as a commercial loan can be placed thereon."

A resolution to make the vote unanimous was then adopted.

There is a tide in the affairs of men—and churches—which, taken at the flood, leads on, etc.

How many imitators of the above described "way" shall our brotherhood furnish—against the "1909 Centennial"? W. P. KEELER.

Further Correction.

Brother Shelburne's "correction" calls for further correction from me concerning the "Letter of Instruction" to young Christians. I am the author of the first part of the quotation from Rev. 2:10. Some other has added to it, James Small, I think.

E. L. Frazier.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Dear Brother Shelburne: I am sure Brother Frazier will not claim more than one-tenth part of "that pastoral letter." I printed that tract about fifteen years ago as it appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, with the exception of a paragraph at the close. The body of the tract was made up from the writings of Isaac Errett, E. L. Frazier, Z. T. Sweeney, R. W. Abberley and the undersigned, hence the reason no signature was attached. James Small.

Columbus, Ind.

[So it would appear from the foregoing that the Pastoral Letter was a composite document, and that Brother Small was the "redactor." Now let the higher critics get to work and decide how much and what part was written by E. and also by F., S., A. and S. This would be higher criticism brought down to date.—EDITOR.]

Manchester, N. H.

We are here in this city at the invitation of the C. W. B. M. to undertake to build up a church that shall stand for New Testament simplicity and catholicity. Manchester is the largest city in New Hampshire, in fact, in northern New England. It is wholly a manufacturing city, but is also one of the most beautiful cities I have ever seen. We have a multitude of foreigners here. Two-thirds of the population is said to be foreign-born, and of these one-half are Canadian French. The Amoskeag mills here are famous. Our work here will be pioneer work, pure and simple. The Disciples are practically an unknown quantity. I have to-day, after almost two months' search, found my first resident Disciple. We are beginning in a small way in our own home at 66 Brook street. We have purchased folding chairs, which we place in the large sitting room, where we can seat about fifty people. The attendance has so far been most encouraging. But it will be impossible to get the people we want most to reach to come to a private house. On September 8 we began holding Sunday evening services in the St. James M. E. church at 7:30, following their usual vesper service, which is at 6 p. m. We advertised these meetings well and have good hopes. We have been very kindly received by the people of the city and the city papers and the pastors.

A COLORADO LETTER By B. B. TYLER

Great things, and unusual, are done in Colorado, especially in Denver!

Dr. William Bayard Craig is breaking the record in "our brotherhood," as pastor of the Central Christian Church. It is very unusual for a man who has held a successful pastorate to return, after an absence of years, and do again his first works. But this is what William Bayard Craig is doing at the Central—and even more. It was during his former pastorate which, speaking roughly, began twenty-five years ago that the first building occupied by the Central church was erected and paid for. During this pastorate, of seven or eight years, the "mother church," as we all think of and designate the Central, reached a high degree of efficiency. It was ready for, and active in, every good work. The Central is the "mother" of our congregations in Denver, and, you may say, in the state of Colorado. Brother Craig thinking that his work was done surrendered this pastorate and organized the South Broadway church. After caring for it three or four years he left Colorado. For a number of years he served as Chancellor of Drake University.

About three years ago Dr. Craig returned to Denver and resumed the pastorate of the Central Church. The "mother church" is today, probably, in better condition in every respect, than at any previous period. During the pastorate of Bruce Brown, a modern house for worship and work for an up-to-date Church of Christ was erected in a good locality. This building is now a hive of intellectual, social and spiritual activity. The membership has been largely increased since the beginning of the new pastorate under the old pastor. The Bible school is out of sight, larger and more efficient than ever before. The Central Christian Church Sunday-school comes nearer to being a meeting of the church for the study of the Bible than in any congregation that I have known. Men and women as well as boys and girls attend, and are interested in the Sunday-school of this congregation. The last contribution of this Bible school to missions was more than $900. Last year its offering was more than $600.

The Colorado Christian Summer Assembly, Pine Cliff, on the Moffat road, about thirty miles from Denver, has just closed a session which was better than either of the preceding assemblies. There was a better program, the addresses and papers were of a higher grade, and the attendance was larger and more representative.

J. A. Sill, for many years a member of the Christian Church in Colorado Springs passed into the life beyond on August 17. Brother Sill was born in Washington, Tazwell County, Ill., Dec. 23, 1847. He was educated in Eureka College. He lived in Fremont, Neb., from 1876 to 1893, since which time he lived in Colorado Springs. He served the church at one time as a deacon. His business life was identified with the mining interests of Colorado. Mrs. Sill died March 11, 1907. Two sons, Rush and Harley, and one daughter, Frances Marie, mourn the departure of a good father and mother. J. A. Sill was a manly man. His pastor, Crayton S. Brooks, tells me that Brother Sill spoke of the change that awaited him with real enthusiasm—spoke as if he were going on a pleasant journey. He expressed regret that he must leave his sons and daughters; but the thought of the meeting on the other side, with his life companion, filled him with enthusiasm.

Sometimes I wish that the Christian Church might have the Methodist organization. I have this desire to an unusual degree as I think of the approaching departure of Crayton S. Brooks, from Colorado Springs. If we were Christians of the Methodist line, and if I were a bishop, with a big B, I would shake Brother Brooks and set him down hard. He would not leave his charge in Colorado Springs. He has done a good work. The membership of the church has greatly increased during his pastorate. There was a recent addition of two hundred to the membership. Now in a few days he will go to New Castle, Pa. Who will nurture those spiritual babes in Colorado Springs? This question haunts me. No stranger can care for them as can Crayton S. Brooks. He knows them; they know him. The law of the land compels a man to care for his natural progeny. Does not the law of our Lord require a man to care for his spiritual children? To the Christians in Corinth Paul said: "I have begotten you through the gospel," and how intense his anxiety was for the welfare of his spiritual children is evidenced in his New Testament letters.

I am interested in the controversy over Mr. John D. Rockefeller's little contribution to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. My Irish blood is warm, and I am inclined to participate in the melee. I do not like what Mr. Rockefeller has done, in this case, and I want to say so. I am not at all satisfied, and I do not care if Mr. Rockefeller is informed in respect to my feelings in this matter. That was a poor, paltry sum he gave. He ought to have given more. Why did he not give $250,000 while he was in a benevolent mood? I confess that I have a grudge against this wicked oil magnate. Thomas W. Phillips protests that he has no personal feeling against Mr. Rockefeller. I confess that I have. Mr. Rockefeller has not treated me with due consideration. I tried to get $3,000 from him for our new pipe organ in the South Broadway church, and I failed to secure the gift. It was real mean on his part to decline to make this contribution. He could have done so without conscious effort. Then I would have been his friend. As it is I am not, and henceforth am his enemy. It seems that our genial F. M. Rains "stands in" with Mr. Rockefeller. Now if he, or any other person, will secure from Mr. Rockefeller $3,000 or any other sum for our new pipe organ, or for any other purpose, and will send the same to me at 158 South Pennsylvania avenue, Denver, Colo., I will receive the money gladly and will publicly express my sincere and heartfelt thanks to all interested parties. B. B. Tyler.

Dependable Books

We recommend each of these to our patrons.

—Home Life of Alexander Campbell. By his wife. Original price, $2.25. A few copies will be sold for $1.25. It contains a fine steel engraving of Brother Campbell at 41 years of age, and of the gifted authoress at 68. Its 503 pages ought to be read by all interested in the domestic facet of this wonderful man.

—Elocution and Oratory. By Allen Griffith. $1.50. This is now in its 24th edition. To reduce stock, will send postpaid for $1. This is less than cost price. Its instruction has never been surpassed, and its selections are of classic eloquence. Preachers, other public speakers and students will find it full of quotables.

—After the Primary; What? By A. H. McKinney. 75 cents. This "primary" is more important than those political. It holds its sessions in Bible schools instead of on the hustings. The book marks one of the latest results in psychological research and pedagogical experiment, and will be invaluable to parents and pastors, as well as to Sunday-school teachers. It is already in its second edition.

—How a Man Grows. By John R. T. Lathrop. $1.25. This has to do with Cosmic and Christian ethics, Cosmic and Christian regeneration, with the forces in man's becoming what he ought to be, with the certainties of religion, the religion of the future and the coronation of man. The introductory chapter on the "Problem of Man" is worth the price of the book. Its task is a profound one, but it is all accomplished as in the light.

—The Culture of Simplicity. By Malcolm J. McLeod. $1. It treats of simplicity and spirituality, happiness, greatness, trust, scripture, sorrow, culture, etc. The first suspicion of imitation is quickly dispelled. The book stands on its own merits. More vivacious, more practical for the American reader than Charles Wagner's "The Simple Life." It explains more clearly how the life may be lived, and reaches the root of things in the Gospel of Christ.

—The Old Faith Restated. Edited by J. H. Garrison. $2. The underlying thought of the Editor "was to present a fresh and independent restatement of the great truths and principles of Christianity as they are apprehended, held and advocated by representative men of the Current Reformation to-day." "Grounds on Which We Receive the Bible as the Word of God, and the Only Rule of Faith and Practice," by Bro. J. W. McGarvey, is the opening chapter. Other most helpful contributors are G. W. Longan, J. S. Lamar, J. J. Haley, I. B. Grubbs (on the "Doctrine of Justification by Faith"), H. W. Everest, J. B. Briney, D. R. Dungan, A. I. Hobbs, W. K. Pendleton, J. M. Trible, George Plattenburg, B. B. Tyler, B. W. Johnson. Such clear restatements as are made by these brethren were never more needed than right now. We have, perhaps, sixty of these volumes still in stock.

Most of the above are listed as "net" by the publishers, but we will send them to readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST postpaid at prices named.

Southern California Convention.

On Sunday evening, August 18, the greatest convention in the history of the Disciples of Southern California closed its sittings. A similar statement might have been successively and truly made of every convention held in this territory for the past six or eight years; for, perhaps, in no section of our country has the Christian Church advanced with such rapid strides. Now, at length, the momentum is such as to astonish even the leaders themselves.

An idea of the interest of the brethren in the work in this section of the state may be gained by the numbers that attend the annual conventions. This year seventeen hundred persons registered, and at the services on the two Sunday evenings not less than three thousand persons assembled to hear S. M. Martin preach. This leads me to say that for several years now it has been the custom of our convention to engage one or more persons as spiritual attractions in the way of preaching and Bible lectures. Brother Martin maintained his reputation as a great evangelistic preacher.

Charles A. Young took us over a field hitherto untouched by those who have lectured before our conventions and awakened not a little interest by the manner in which he connected the prophecies of Isaiah with the apocalypse of St. John.

At this point I may as well mention three who were present from the regions beyond the borders of our state and who stirred our hearts by their thrilling appeals for the interests in whose behalf they spoke. Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., lifted the women of our C. W. B. M. to exalted heights of enthusiasm by her stirring presentation of the Centennial aims of that marvelous organization. Nor was Centennial Secretary W. R. Warren one whit less effective in his appeals to the brethren in behalf of the purposes which our brotherhod has set itself to accomplish in missionary, church extension and educational ways by the time of the Pittsburg convention in 1909.

J. H. Mohorter was present and gave us a most telling address in behalf of our National Benevolent Association. Other interests of a general character were presented by home forces appointed for the occasion.

It seems impossible even to mention all the things of interest and importance which were done and said at these meetings. Among other things that helped to enrich the occasion were three lectures, one each by Sister Smither, Brother Smither and F. M. Dowling, on their recent travels in the Orient. P. C. Macfarlane addressed the convention in behalf of our stricken churches in and around San Francisco. The time set for taking the offering in that behalf in the East was not auspicious for California. Our convention appointed the first Sunday in November for our churches in Southern California to take the offering for San Francisco.

The C. W. B. M. occupied the first two days of the convention. Their work for the first year shows the following results: Money raised for general fund, $1,291.05; for state fund, $851.71; for special fund, $1,889.52; for other purposes, $1,066.99; for the Centennial fund, $351.71; making a total of $5,450.98. This is a total net gain of $983.49 over last year. The expressed aim for the past year was $5,000, which was surpassed by about $100.

Pledges for the work in Southern California and Arizona the coming year were taken on the ground. The sum raised was about $7,500. This, combined with the home offering in May, will put at least $10,000 in the hands of our board to be expended in extending the cause in this section.

The report of our corresponding secretary, Grant K. Lewis, deserves to be published in full, not only because the facts contained of work done would be calculated to arouse other states to emulation, but because in composition it is a literary gem worthy of preservation. I present herewith his summary of work done and moneys expended during the year. It is embodied in the following letter:

Dear Brother Martin: Here are some figures for your help in reporting the convention to the paper. We put money into thirty-one different places last year. These thirty-one churches have a membership of 1,822. They baptized 237, added 525 otherwise, total 762. These thirty-one mission churches raised for missions $2,500, for benevolence $500, for salaries $11,000, for current expenses $3,000, for property $16,000; total $33,000.

We have, all told and everything counted, seventy-one churches with a membership of 10,500. These churches baptized 1,000 and added otherwise 2,000, making a total of 3,000. This is a gross of 30 per cent, a net gain of 10 per cent. These seventy-one churches raised $130,000 for local work over against $100,000 last year, $22,000 for missions over against $15,000 last year, making a total of $152,000 as against $115,000. During the year six new churches were regularly organized and regular preaching established at three other places. The secretary reported receipts for home missions amounting to $10,605.42. These are all the items which occur to me now. Very sincerely yours,

Grant K. Lewis,
Secretary.

The singing at the convention was, I think, the best we have ever had. Dr. R. C. Mitchell, recently from Buffalo, N. Y., generously donated his services to lead the singing and his wife presided at the organ and piano. To both of them we are greatly indebted. One or two occurrences which were not strictly part of the convention deserve to be mentioned on account of their importance.

One of these is the business men's banquet. One hundred business men and preachers were present at the repast, which was furnished by the ladies of the Long Beach Church. At this meeting it was mentioned that one of our young men who has been attending Berkeley Bible Siminary, was in need of the means of continuing his studies. In about five minutes $300 was pledged for that purpose. But a week or two before this the Magnolia Avenue Church, Los Angeles, had subscribed a like amount to send one of her young men to Berkeley. Five young men from Southern California have gone, or will soon go, to prepare to enter the ministry. Two of these go from San Diego to Kentucky University, and two from Los Angeles and one from Long Beach have entered Berkeley Bible Seminary. Our presiding officer, C. C. Chapman, who has already served the convention for two years in that capacity, was elected again for the coming year. A similar honor was conferred on Mrs. Reba B. Smith by the C. W. B. M. She goes by their appointment to attend the national convention at Norfolk.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Kentucky Evangelistic Notes.

The meeting held by C. R. L. Vawter, with our help, at Munfordville resulted in a reorganization of the church with twenty-three members, five of them being additions. A preacher has been employed for part time. Good work was done in a hard field.——Seven added by C. W. Campbell in Rockcastle county.——E. Petty reports seventeen added in Carter and Elliott counties.——A meeting is now in progress at Bromley, where J. P. Bornwasser serves and H. C. Bowen is doing the preaching.——There were nine additions in Pike county as the result of the work of H. H. Thompson, and a fine county meeting held.——Thirteen added tells the story in part of the labors of H. L. Morgan in Clay and Laurel counties.——A dozen additions in Whitney and Rockcastle by J. W. Masters.——Ten additions at Latonia and the preacher, H. C. Runyan, and people entertaining the convention. On the first Sunday in September the enlarged house was opened for worship in a formal way. H. W. Elliott was with them and about $1,800 was pledged to pay for the $3,000 addition. Everybody full of enthusiasm and hope.——In the Big Sandy Valley field, occupied by S. J. Short, there were seven additions.——Z. Ball baptized forty-two and added nine otherwise in Madison, Lee and Clay counties.——Fifty-three additions constitute a part of the results of the work of D. G. Combs last month.——W. J. Cocke added twenty-five and had in many ways a good month. ——H. W. Elliott was busy all the month in the effort to bring matters to a successful close for another year's work. The results have been great and our receipts to date of writing are in advance over last year's corresponding date by more than a thousand dollars. If we receive as much from now (September 6) until the convention, we will meet all the obligations of the year. The receipts during August were $884.04.——November 3 is the next great date. This is true because it is the time for the annual offering for state missions. It is not too early to be planning for this important matter. The number of congregations observing the proper date is steadily increasing. It is hoped that some of our good churches helping us out now "on the home stretch" will double up and get in line at the proper time. Concert of action adds power to any work worth while. If we make the record that ought to be made this autumn for Kentucky missions, we must begin to plan and pray now for a great victory.

H. W. Elliott, Secretary.

Sulphur, Ky., September 6.

Ohio.

Vacation days are over. Now for a good long, hard pull in Ohio for the next ten months. Let this year break all records in evangelism and missionary enterprise.——F. F. Shultz has become preacher for the brethren at Nashville and Ripley, in Holmes county.——W. H. Hedges has bid farewell to Ohio and Lindenwald Church, Hamilton, and betaken himself to Kalamazoo, Mich. We are sorry to lose him, but send our prayers for his new work.——John Mullen has resigned at McConnellsville, and will evangelize for a while. But some church that wants a good preacher would better take him.——Wesley Hatcher went beyond his physical strength some at Hamilton last year, so the church very generously gave him a six weeks' rest in Northern Canada and paid the freight. He reports himself greatly rested and ready for another year of hard work. Such thoughtful acts of a church pay large dividends.——I. J. Cahill addressed the annual reunion of the 121st O. V. I. at East Liberty, Ohio, recently, and also lectured at Violet chapel on "Peter's Wife's Mother."——Charles C. Smith comes to Orville September 1 from Blanchester, where he has done a faithful, plodding work that weighs well.——We extend a most cordial hand to James Wharton, who comes back to Ohio from Niagara Falls and will preach at Minerva. We have no church in Ohio that is more thoroughly entrenched in the community where it is located than Minerva church. We hope for him many years of happy service.——The Cleveland preachers began their Monday meetings September 16. These meetings are held the first and third Mondays of each month at the Y. M. C. A. building, and are always interesting and profitable.

Are you troubled by Christian Science in your church or community? If you are, get from the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, James M. Gray's book, "The Antidote for Christian Science." It is one of the sanest and strongest books on this modern fad I have read. Every preacher ought to invest 75 cents in this book.

What is your preaching program this year? Or have you none and go hit and miss? After five years' experience nothing appeals to this scribe so much as expository preaching. For the mornings of this fall and winter Isaiah will be the book studied. George Adam Smith, Alexander MacLaren, Delitzsch, Principal Douglass, Joseph Parker, Moulton, et al., will do service as helpers in this effort. Any man who has not tried this method of preaching has not yet known the real delight of preaching. It is a good antidote for the sermon-lecture tendency among the preachers, and the mere entertainment mania among the people. It takes good, hard, old-fashioned work on the preacher's part, but it pays him sixty and one hundred fold. Try it.

C. A. Freer.

Georgia.

C. R. Miller, of Tallapoosa, has just closed a meeting for Ephesus church, Carroll county, with twenty-seven additions.——The ten days' meeting at Watkinsville resulted in forty additions.——The Atlanta and Macon preachers will attend the Griffin district convention, which will be held at Hampton, beginning September 25.——I am "storming the fort" at Lowell, Carroll county. Lowell is a pretty village, eight miles from Carrollton. The meeting is being largely attended and the prospects are bright for some permanent work.——G. R. Cleveland, who has been in New York City for several months, desires to return to Georgia.——It is getting time for us to begin our preparations to attend our state convention, which will be held in our prettiest church house in Georgia—the First Church, Atlanta. Program soon.

Idaho.

The Sellers-St.John meeting was brought to an abrupt close by a diphtheria quarantine that shut us out at the close of the tenth sermon. Good interest was being created.——The autumn opens with renewed determination on the part of the Idaho brethren. Payette commences well under their new minister. Boise is making a quiet hunt for a preacher for the capital city of the state. The Institutional church will be one feature of the incoming man. The way is open for a profitable work in Boise.——Secretary Jones is making flying trips to many of the smaller points, rounding out his plans for the forthcoming fall and winter campaign. The Idaho State Board is undertaking to make a dollar cover as much territory as possible.——Meridian is looking for a preacher, as is also Emmett.——Idaho is the greatest place on earth for men to quit the ministry. The eastern preacher ought to send along his size before coming out here, for not all of them fit here in the West. "Get a little piece of land" soon stares him in the face, and that "rainy day" of old age keeps coming up for consideration, and the first thing he knows he discovers that even a preacher has a perfect right to "provide for his own," and there you have it.

Caldwell, Idaho. B. W. Rice.

From Pittsburg, the Centennial City.

Vacations are over and the pastors of all our churches were in their own pulpits on September 1 to present the needs of church extension. The members of the First Church, Allegheny, report that Wallace Tharp preached the most telling sermon of his pastorate at their evening service. This shows what rest and recreation can do for the pastor.——J. E. Emanuel, the pastor at Homestead, was back from his vacation and entertained the first all-day meeting of the season on September 2. There was an excellent attendance and the addresses of J. G. Slayter and A. W. Place, the retiring and incoming presidents of our ministerial association, were highly appreciated. P. C. Macfarlane, of California, gave the leading address of the forenoon on our "Ministry of the Future and Its Message."——L. N. D. Wells, of East Orange, N. J., filled the pulpit of the East End Church during August, while Brother Slayter was on his vacation. Brother Wells has many warm friends in Pittsburg and vicinity. He delivered his lecture, "The Beauty Spots in America," in the Belmar Church, and was greeted with a fine audience. ——Brother Blood, who has been holding the fort at Duquesne during the summer months, reports the work growing and the prospects encouraging. ——Brother Hughes, of Turtle Creek, reports not only a goodly number of additions, but that the new house will soon be under way for the autumn campaign.——A simultaneous evangelistic campaign is being prepared for this vicinity, to begin October 21, in which about thirty churches will take part. The evangelists doing the preaching will be our local pastors, they exchanging with each other. The campaign is expected to continue about six weeks. There is no reason why we should not have excellent results, for we have some of the best pastoral evangelists in the country.—F. M. Gordon, pastor of the Knoxville church, stayed at his post all summer and has been demonstrating what good can be done by using the opportunity presented by the rush Sunday afternoons to the parks. It is a common occurrence for at least 50,000 people to visit parks within the city limits, and Brother Gordon took his choir and a good practical sermon to McKinley Park, on the South side, every Sunday afternoon, furnishing entertainment and instruction in the gospel way of salvation. The direct results were seventeen confessions. He not only stayed by the work, but preached three sermons every Sunday.—J. A. Jayne is doing the best work of his life since he took up the pastorate at Belmar Church. He is accomplishing a marvelous work and everthing is moving forward.——The Western Pennsylvania convention will be held at Beaver September 24-26, and a rare treat has been planned in the program. Let everybody in Western Pennsylvania arrange to attend. J. D. Dabney.

Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all; and also because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100 not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.

The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the Doxology and The Lord Is In His Temple.

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

How would Nineveh compare with some of our modern cities? Particular attention is called to the fact that it was a great city. It was great in territory and population, in political strength and importance, in material wealth and magnificence: but it was also great in wickedness.

In all the above particulars many of our modern cities are like ancient Nineveh. They are great in population, power, wealth and luxury: but they are also great in wickedness. There is more righteousness, but also greater sin; more churches, but also mightier forces of iniquity; more luxury, but also greater misery.

Men see chiefly the material greatness of a city, and are impressed by its greatness and magnificence. Jonah was sent not to congratulate Nineveh upon her prosperity, but to cry out against her wickedness. Christ saw the wickedness of Jerusalem, and wept over it.—Luke 19:41.

The fact that Christian people are waking up to the needs of the city is a hopeful sign. City missions are receiving more consideration from the church to-day than ever before. Our cities are great centers of commercial activity and political power. The politician looks after the cities. To the mind of the statesman the cities present the most serious problems in connection with our government. The church should study seriously the problem of city missions.

It has been said, "As goes America so goes the world." If that be true we might as well say, "As go our cities so goes the world"; for it is our cities which will determine how America is to go. From any point that we may look at it city missions is of tremendous importance.

BIBLE READINGS.

1.	A prosperous city mission.	Acts 19:8-12.
2.	Paul preaching in Athens.	Acts 17:22-34.
3.	A corrupt city.	1 Cor. 6:9-20.
4.	Philip in Samaria.	Acts 4:4-8.
5.	A city wept over.	Luke 19:41-48.
6.	The missionary's message.	1 Cor. 1:17-24.

The word of the Lord came to Jonah the second time,—verse 1. We severely criticise Jonah for not going when the Lord came to him the first time. But has not God come to some of us more than once, intending to send us on some like mission, and we have not obeyed?—John 8:7.

Their wickedness is come up before me,—Chapter 1, verse 2. How is it with the wickedness of New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, and the other cities of our land? Does God hate our sins less than the sins of Nineveh? We are sinning against greater light. So much greater also will be our condemnation.—Matt. 11:20-24.

Preach unto them the preaching that I bid thee,—verse. 2. Jonah was not to invent the message, but only to deliver it. God has given to us in the gospel the preaching which is needed in the cities, and it is our business to preach it, preach it plainly, boldly, and confidently. There is only one gospel for the city and the country.

So the people of Nineveh believed God—verse 5. How did they know that God had sent Jonah? The proof was in the preaching. The message is the proof of the call. Wherever the Word of God is taught in its purity there will be some who believe it.—Isa. 55:10, 11.

And God saw their works,—verse 10. What was the work which God saw? It was repentance; they turned from their evil way. Then when they repented, God repented also of the evil which he had said that he would do unto them. God waits to be gracious.—Isa. 55:7; 1 John 1:9.

The late Dr. Howard Crosby says, "Our cities can only be evangelized when every Christian citizen becomes an evangelist." It is true of the city, town, or village in which we are living. What are we doing?

A Chinese missionary in New York, Fung Yuet Mow, says that at a missionary conference which he attended in Canton, China, there were fifty native Chinese missionaries present, and half of them had been converted in our missions in America.

In twenty-two years Rev. Antonio Arrighi, the Italian Presbyterian minister of New York, has received 1,300 Italians into the profession of faith, and has been instrumental in sending fourteen students into the ministry.—Selected.

When we have learned to smile and weep with the poor, we shall have mastered our problem. Then the slum will have lost its grip and the boss his job.—Jacob Riis.

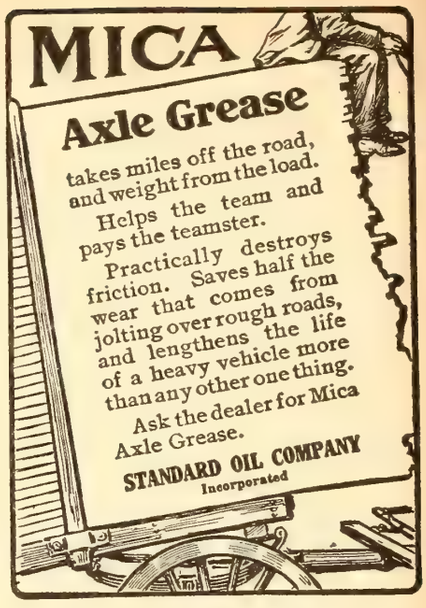
Without being appointed by our church as a city missionary we may do much missionary work in our own immediate community. The number of the church's unsalaried missionaries should be multiplied tenfold.—Lesson Quarterly.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

A Servant of Christ.

Topic September 25: John 13:13-17; Matt. 24:45-51; Matt. 15:21.



The recognition of Christ as Master and Lord is one of the conditions of discipleship. Many of us, I fear, are willing to call Christ Rabbi, teacher, without accepting him as Master in the full sense of the word. The Pharisees of old called him Rabbi, but refused either to accept his teachings or to follow his leadership. And multitudes are guilty of the same inconsistency to-day. Some of us who call him Master are slow to take up the tasks of a servant. We shrink from the menial service that falls to our lots. The washing of the disciples' feet by the Master was to teach them that no service was too menial for the true disciple. This is the heart of the matter. The washing of feet was the service of the bond-servant. It was an act of hospitality. Owing to the custom of wearing sandals, it was an everyday matter in that country. And Jesus would teach us to do the everyday duties of the Christian life as he did them. He would teach us humility. "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." So the washing of the saints' feet as an act of hospitality is commended on the part of those who were widows indeed. The mistaken notion that it was ever intended as an ordinance in the Church is an illustration of the ease with which good people can miss the point of the Master's teaching and example.

The lesson that Christ would teach, in words and by example, is that "The servant is not greater than his lord; neither is he that is sent greater than he that sent him." This sweeps the whole field of service in all our relations to the Master, whose we are and whom we serve." And as we can only serve him by serving others, it applies in all the manifold relations of our discipleship. It means more, very much more, than simply washing one another's feet. It means "in love serving one another."

"Who, then, is that faithful and wise servant whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?" And the Lord's own answer follows: "Blessed is that servant whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing." Doing what? Watching? Yes, but more: Giving the household their meat in due season. And that means doing his duty every day. It is not brilliancy the Master asks of us, but the doing of the everyday duties, and doing them every day. That's the test of discipleship. And right here is where we fail as preachers and people. It is not better preaching we need so much as better practice. The blessed servant is the busy servant. Jesus says so. The Master's "so doing" is an emphasis of the importance of the blessedness of everyday service.

The incident is told of a pastor who wrote a little note of commendation, half-apologetically, of a humble disciple who was moving to a distant place. Among other things he said: "He is not brilliant or gifted, but is just an everyday Christian." Replying to this note some time afterward, his fellow pastor wrote: "If you have any more 'everyday' Christians to spare, send 'em out here!" It's the sort we need everywhere. To give the household their meat in due season means just the sort of faithfulness that mother has, who hustles around and gets our breakfast and dinner and supper right on time, day after day, rain or shine, cold or hot, winter and summer, till the summons comes to fold the hands and rest. What would we do without mothers? Some one has said: "God couldn't be everywhere, and so he made mothers." And these faithful disciples—the Lydias, the Phoebes—the "servants of the churches," are the blessed ones everywhere. We could not get along without them. The pity of it all is that we have so few of them, and so many that are satisfied to be shirkers instead of servants. What sort are you, anyway? Would you be happy in the Lord's service? Then go about it every day. "In due season" means every day, "in season and out of season." The only way to be ready when the Lord comes is to keep busy all the time!

"Would you know earth's highest happiness?
Make some other heart rejoice!"

Review.—Read Psalm 90.

GOLDEN TEXT for the quarter: The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy.—Psa. 113:8.

There is no nation of antiquity whose origin and early history we know with anything like the completeness and detail with which we know the early history of Israel. Whatever theory of interpretation is applied to the historical matter in the Pentateuch, it still remains true that we know the story of the rise of the Hebrew nation in a way in which we can not pretend to know the origin and early development of Greece or Rome or any other nation of the ancient world.

And in that early history of the people of Israel, the one outstanding fact is the consciousness of the presence and the power of God in controlling the destinies of the nation. There is more essential history and philosophy of history in any narrative which takes full account of that fact than in any chronicle or annals, however accurate in details, which leaves that fact out of account.

The lessons for the past quarter cover the entire period from the escape from Israel until the death of Moses at the end of the generation of wilderness-wandering. In summarizing the work of Moses, in the last lesson, we necessarily gave a summary of the history of the nation in this period, for Moses was throughout the guiding and controlling personality. All that was done was done through him. Those achievements, to recount them again, were: the exchange of slavery for freedom; the gaining of a temporary practical unification of the group of disorderly and disunited tribes so as to form the beginnings of a nation; the formation of a code of laws, including a small nucleus of immortal principles of both religion and equity and a sufficient body of concrete decisions to indicate how these principles were to be applied to the life of the people; and a common religion which found expression chiefly in a ritual but also in a more or less general conviction that the future prosperity of the nation was inseparably connected with the faithful observance of this ritual and fidelity in all other respects to the God in whose honor it was performed.

Having gained these things, the people of Israel, it is safe to say, had achieved as much as any body of people ever accomplished in the space of one generation. Some of their laws are still approved by the most enlightened modern intelligence as wise and just, but in general the Mosaic system of jurisprudence has passed away with all its harsh punishments of trivial offenses and its lavish employment of the death penalty. But the fundamental principles, both of equity and religion, still stand. They are Israel's great contribution to civilization.

Above all, the principle which God was trying to teach Israel during this time, and for many years after,—namely, that righteousness is essential to national success and glory—not only abides but is finding new and convincing illustration in these latter times. The whole of our contemporary movement for honesty in government, for fairness in politics, for the settlement of international disputes by reason instead of force,—all of these are but the modern applications of those principles which were first stated and which began to be applied in the age of Moses. And the whole disgraceful story of modern greed and graft in government, with its train of national weakness and disgrace, is a dramatization of the warning which Moses left with Israel before his departure, "Beware lest thou forget the Lord."

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

In order to give information to the workers interested, and to inspire many to take up the new movement for the enlistment of vastly greater numbers in the Bible school than have ever yet been enlisted, I call attention to the following from the historical sketch of the Adult Bible Class Department, given by W. C. Pearce, superintendent, during the International Adult Department Conference at Lake Geneva, Wis., August 4-11, 1907:

First of all might be mentioned the organization of adult Bible classes in all parts of the country. Some of these show immense memberships, reaching as high as 1,000 members in one class. In Marbury, Ala., they have 375, out of the town's population of 400, members of the Sunday-school. Ashland, O., has over 40 per cent of the voting population in the Sunday-schools. There are not any saloons in that town. This increased interest is not confined to the East, West, North nor South, but is apparent everywhere.

While I was general secretary of Cook county, a young man came into my office one day, full of enthusiasm for the men's work. I had never heard of him before, but soon learned that he was the president of one of our large men's classes and was earnest in his desire to see the work extended to every part of Chicago. I listened to him and entered heartily into the work with him. A department was finally organized for Chicago, and a choice committee of men went to work. As the result of these activities the adult department of Chicago has grown from about 40 classes to 1,400. In 1903 a trainload of men went from Chicago to the state convention and organized the men's department of Illinois.

At the same time a movement was going on in New York, known as the New York Union. These two states worked together, and other states, too, took up the work. As a result the international committee in 1905 appointed an adult committee. Inside of six months this committee had knowledeg of many adult classes throughout the country. At Winona Lake in 1906 when the international committee met they did several things. (1) They created an international adult department; (2) they adopted an international emblem for adult classes; (3) they decided to put a man in the field his entire time. In January, 1907, the committee saw their way to appoint an adult department superintendent.

One of the first things that our adult committee did was to recommend that we hold these conferences. The establishment of this new department of work required new policies, new plans and a new literature. Therefore this conference and the one at Pocono Pines, Pa., August 13-15, were planned. At the same time the committee voted to keep open books for publishers and editors. That is if you desire any information which our records contain you are welcome to it. Another action of the committee provided for the issuance of certain leaflets and literature, which have since been prepared and sent out.

This, in brief, is the history of the adult Bible class work.

ADVANTAGES OF CLASS ORGANIZATION.

I have the following to suggest along the line of class organization:

1. It Divides the Work.—It gives everybody something to do. We must, as I see it, do this work by emphasizing the work of the class officers. If there is anything vital to the work of the organized class, it is this division of work.

2. It Develops Workers.—A bright, active business man joined an organized class. They put him on the membership committee. He could do the work required of him, there. He became used to approaching men, and did it so well that he was put on the sick committee. This, too, was within his power, and he did it faithfully. I visited in his school not long ago and this young man stood there praying for the conversion of four men. They did not come just then, and as I went out, I said, "Don't be discouraged, my brother, they will come yet." "Come," he said, "Come, they have got to come!" —and they did come that night. If you had given him that work to do at first he could not have done it, but all the time he was working on the other committee he was growing closer and closer to God and his great work.

3. It Gives Permanency.—Let me give you an illustration to emphasize this. In studying the characters of Whitfield and Wesley, it would not be hard to tell which was the greater preacher, but Whitfield's work is gone, while you will find Wesley's monuments over all the world. Wesley was an organizer; Whitfield was not. The teacher renders his greatest service when he puts others to work at something that will last.

4. It Gives Strength.—All of us are stronger than some of us. All of us are wiser than some of us. The strongest class is the class working as a unit through organization. This is not your class, or my class, it is our class. When every member feels that way you will have class strength.

5. It Develops Class Spirit.—I can locate the classes all over the country where members feel for the class, think for the class and work for the class. A broad-minded class spirit is an essential to class success.

6. It Promotes Fellowship.—Mr. Barnes, a Sunday-school worker of Liverpool, came to visit this country. He came into touch with the Wesleyan class of the Western Avenue M. E. Church, Chicago. The class has a corresponding membership list upon which appear the names and addresses of all who have been members of the class, but have moved from the church or city. The teacher of this class gave Mr. Barnes letters of introduction to these members in the various cities he was to visit, and they extended to him every possible courtesy. The fellowship of our organized classes may be made to reach around the world.

We ought to have in Missouri ten of these classes of 100 each formed before Christmas. You start one of them next Sunday.

The Law and the Gospel.—2 Cor. 3:1-18.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

This is the first and only time that the law of Moses is called "the letter that killeth," alluding to the chief event of its history—the writing of the ten commandments on tables of stone. The gospel of Christ is called the "spirit," alluding to the chief event in its introduction, the "baptism of the Holy Spirit." The old covenant threatened condemnation and death, the new covenant promised forgiveness and life. The law of Moses made a good Jew; the gospel of Christ made a good man; the law of Moses is called the law of sin and death and vanished away; the gospel is called "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" (making us "free from the law of sin and death"). The observance of the law of Moses made a heavy burden; Jesus said, "My yoke is easy and my burden light." The law of Moses ministered chiefly to the temporal wants of the Jews; the gospel promises spiritual salvation to the human race. As the name of another was sometimes given to the law of Moses, so also is the name of Christ given to the gospel. "Now the Lord is that spirit, and where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty;" substituting words with evident meaning, we have "the Lord is that gospel and where the gospel is, there is liberty." And is it too free a rendering to say "If any man accept not the Gospel of Christ and walk in it he is none of his"? (Rom. 8, 9.) The spirit of Moses is in his law; the spirit of Christ is in his gospel. Would it be an erroneous theology to say, "The fruit of the gospel is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, fidelity"? Quoting from Isaiah, Peter says the "Word of the Lord endureth forever," and adds, "This is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." And Paul says it is profitable, for whatever is necessary to "furnish a man to all good works."

In a meeting of the board of the "Utah Gospel Mission" a few days ago, the question was raised whether our circulation of Bible truth, with a view to correct Mormon ignorance, was bearing any visible fruitage. The answer was that time is an important factor and that we were too impatient. "Yes," said the Baptist minister, one of the members of the board, "Sow the Gospel truth liberally, and the Holy Spirit will do the rest." I was left to infer that the Holy Spirit accompanies the truth as a daily prompter; or that he is in the truth, as leaven working "to leaven the whole lump." I take it that this is the view of most of the denominations. But does the Scripture sanction this view? All my life I have been taught that the Holy Spirit has a three-fold mission. He reveals the divine truth; he confirms it by miracles; he dwells in the hearts of those who obey him. We have taught the people that this exhausts his mission. But is it unreasonable to say that the God who loved the whole world so that he gave his only begotten Son to die, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish but have eternal life; who is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, watches over the progress of his kingdom and guides and controls by a divine force—call it spirit or over-ruling providence or divine immanence—so that his preached word "shall not return unto him void * * but prosper in the thing whereto he hath sent it?" None of us know the scope of the Spirit's work? Our business is to preach the word, "that is able to make wise unto salvation." God will take care of the rest. R. Moffett.

DAVIS.

Mrs. Rebecca Nave Davis was born eighty-three years ago. She belonged to one of the best families in central Missouri. When a child eight years old she came with her parents to Clinton. Later she was married to Col. Joseph Davis. Into their home came ten children—three sons and seven daughters. Five of these preceded her to the better land. She was converted in Lafayette county and became a member of the church in Lexington. Early in the Civil war the family moved to Fayetteville, Ark., and bought the beautiful home of President Robert Graham. Later Colonel Davis lived in Austin, Texas. When peace was declared the family returned to Missouri. After the death of her husband Mrs. Davis made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Mary E. Owen, of Folsom, New Mexico. She was in declining health for a long time. While on the train en route from Folsom to Trinidad, Colorado, the summons came, and the mother passed peacefully away while in the arms of her two devoted daughters. The remains were brought to her old home in Clinton. The funeral services were held at the residence of Mrs. B. G. Boone and the body was laid to rest beside the grave of her husband in Englewood cemetery. Mrs. Davis was a woman of bright mind and beautiful disposition. She was strangely kind to the poor and to all in distress. During the war her home was an asylum for sick and disabled soldiers. "Her pious and useful life was extended to an honorable old age, and closed by an exemplary death. Her charity had its source in religion. Her love of her neighbors was the genuine effect of her love for God. Her resignation was the fruit of her faith. She died in hope because she had lived a Christian." N. M. Ragland.

JOHNS.

Mrs. Martha Johns died at her home in Hampton, Fla., August 5, 1907, in the sixty-fourth year of her age. She had been a faithful member of the Christian church at that place for twenty years or more, and was a true woman in all the relations of life. She leaves a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss in her departure.

F. B. SCRIMSHER.

The earthly house of this tabernacle of F. B. Scrimsher, the beloved minister of the Second Christian church at Houston, Texas, has been dissolved and the spirit fled to the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Brother Scrimsher's sun is gone down while it is yet day, he being almost 35 years of age. In the year 1904 he heard the call of the Lord of Harvest and gave up a lucrative position for the meager salary which the ministry offers. He spent the year 1904-05 at the Bible school at Lexington, Ky. In the summer of the same year he preached his first sermon and having put his hand to the plow he looked not back. He was the 4th district evangelist of Kentucky. He served the church at Hico, Texas, Raton, New Mexico, and one year at Houston, Texas. Here as elsewhere the work prospered greatly. In his short ministry of two years at least 150 have come to Christ. He fell asleep at Lexington, Ky., July 5, 1907. Bro. Mark Collis of Broadway church, preached his funeral. His remains now rest in the Lexington cemetery in the shadow of the stately monument of Henry Clay and the modest stone of "Raccoon" John Smith.

To his young widow and fatherless child a loving brotherhood extend their sympathy and we are assured that the link in the chain cannot long be broken, but will be welded together again by the fires of God's love when all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God.

"Not on the field of battle
Where war clouds hang their pall;
Not where the rifles rattle,
Does manhood always fall,
But often toil and duty
Lead to the gates of death."

Chapter XIII.—A Modern Evangelist.

And they who sowed the light, shall reap
The golden sheaves of morning.

My country is in every clime;
I can be calm and free from care,

These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily whether those things were so.—Acts.

That evening a fine appearing gentleman with a light grip in his hand walked up the front path and lifted his hat to Mrs. Brown as she came to the door. "My name is Pratt," said he. "I am an evangelist traveling under no particular name or board, but seeking to lead hungry souls to the bread of life. I learn that Mr. Brown has been engaged in gospel work, at some time, and thinking that he would like to take up a line of work for his neighborhood, I called to talk with him to that end. Mr. Brown greeted his guest cordially, as he was hungry for fellowship; and fellowship of the character that stood before him, for as he looked into Mr. Pratt's keen, honest eyes, he saw a man after his own heart, true to principle and aflame with love for his fellowmen. No signs of sordidness nor love of money in that face, but pure love and deep concern for the well-being of humanity. He evidently was not a place hunter either, for no expression escaped his lips, nor did he betoken anxiety for the loaves and fishes, but seemed to take it as a matter of course that as God had promised food and raiment to those who served him, it would be so. If there was one promise more than another upon which he seemed to rest his case, it was: "My God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." Taking his hat and other luggage, Mr. Brown showed him into the living room, where they sat down and exchanged thoughts until Mrs. Brown informed them that supper was ready and at the table they continued the interesting talk they had begun, which was leading them deeper into the hidden things of the word of God at every exchange. Not the slightest tone of controversy or disagreement, but a deep sweet-spirited conversation ensued throughout the meal and on into the evening, until Mrs. Brown warned them that the hour of midnight was approaching. Handing Mr. Pratt the Bible, they listened reverently to the word from Philippians 2: "If there is therefore any comfort in Christ, if any consolation of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any tender mercies and compassions; fulfill ye my joy, that ye be of the same mind, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind, doing nothing through faction or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself. Not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Thus he read and then prayed with an unction that made them feel that truly here was a man who, like Christ, was going about seeking not his own glory nor his own pleasure, nor the meat that perisheth; but to do good and to communicate the gift and grace and comfort, which he derived from the word of God. Truly they had entertained an angel unawares, in the stranger to whom they had opened their door this night. Nothing was too good for this man with the mind of Christ, who came not to be ministered unto but to minister.

The next day they talked on and forgot the farm work, the past and all else save the Word and its precious teachings, and President Brown was all aflame to be about the same work of teaching and preaching the unsearchable riches once more. He had been kept in enforced idleness by his wife's sickness, and then his farm work had occupied his mind for many months and he had now awakened as from a dream. No door seemed closed to him now, and being desirous that his neighbors should hear this man of God, he took a saddle horse and galloped about the neighborhood inviting all to come to his house that evening to hear him preach as they had arranged.

Throwing all the rooms open, seating capacity was made for about one hundred persons who crowded in that night to hear the strange pilgrim preach. He had some to tell them the story of the cross without being hired to do so, and what a sermon it was. The people sat in amazement as if an angel from heaven had come down to speak the matchless love of him who died for sinners lost. He seemed to know every promise by heart, and the Bible was as an open book continually before his face; for he did not discourse to them upon learned themes of philosophic lore, but his soul was as one on fire with the love and word of God. And they were unwilling to let him go without another night of the teaching. Many poured into the house during the day to enquire more perfectly concerning the things he had spoken. Thus the interest increased and spread until the Brown house could not contain the crowds that came and a large tent that had been stored in the city by some traveling troup, was brought out and set up for the occasion. It was estimated that two thousand people were assembled at times there to hear the Word. Small tents were set up, extempore houses were built, and many camped upon the ground from surrounding towns and villages, until it had the appearance of a small village. The man of God seemed to wax greater and to set forth the way of salvation more clearly, at each succeeding meeting, of which there was now no less than four and five each day. Thus the work of grace progressed for four and five weeks in the power and demonstration of the spirit until hundreds were moved to depart from sin and iniquity and to follow the Christ. And to say that neighbor Brown's zeal had been stirred to newness of life and power, but faintly expressed his renewal.

A committee of the representative men came to him one afternoon while the meetings were in progress to inquire what was to be after this man should go away. Could they not arrange with him to keep up regular services? Would it not be best to build some kind of a meeting house to worship in when the tent should be impracticable.

A subscription paper was drawn up to test the wish of the people, and it was found that over two thousand dollars could be had at once, and they knew that this represented only about one-tenth of the available cash that would be put up if a united effort could be secured.

The next step was to ascertain if their neighbor Brown would consent to devote his whole time to the enterprise and lead them in the work of establishing and maintaining a religious interest in that community. He was overjoyed to have his neighbors come thus to ask him to do that which he had felt strongly that God had called him to, and so he felt the double call to be unmistakable.

The question as to what denomination the work should belong to then properly came up, and a canvass was carefully gone over to determine the preference of the worshipers, and it was found that no less than twelve different denominations had representatives in the congregation that could be drawn from a radius of seven miles from where the edifice was to be built. And seven of these had about equal numbers represented. A crisis seemed inevitable, for a spirit of denominational preference began to strive in their bosoms for supremacy.

Her Keepsake.

"You shan't have it! I won't give it up!"

A very old and forlorn looking woman had been arrested for vagrancy in the streets of a great city. She was dirty, ragged and miserable. Her brown and wrinkled face wore a distressed and weary look. Her bony fingers closed tightly over something held in her right hand, thrust under her ragged apron.

"You shan't have it!" she said, angrily, to the officer whose duty it was to search prisoners before confining them in their cells.

"Let me see what it is, anyhow," he said, half coaxingly.

"It ain't anything you'll want," she said, drawing back, with her hand still hidden in the folds of her apron.

"It ain't anything I can do any harm with. It's jest a little kind of a—a—keepsake."

The old woman began to cry, with her arm held over her eyes. "You'll have to let me look at it," said the officer, kindly but firmly. "It's the rule of the prison. You may keep it, perhaps, after I've seen it."

The wrinkled hand came slowly out from under the apron, the bony fingers were unclasped, and there in the shriveled palm lay a ragged little shoe.

"Pshaw! I don't care for that," said the officer, a little huskily.

"I knowed you wouldn't," sobbed out the woman. "But I keer a good deal fer it. It's a keepsake, you know."

A keepsake—the one little bond between the life that was and the life she now knew, a tiny remnant of the happy past clung fondly to in the sorrowful present.

"It was my baby's shoe, his first and only one," she said. "I've carried it thirty-five years, an' I'd have been a worse woman 'n I am now if it hadn't been for that little shoe."

There was no proof that she was a bad woman now. Unfortunate she surely was, and the world had not been kind to her. Vagrants have hearts and souls. That ragged little shoe had for all those years been the treasure and the comfort of the one; it may have been the salvation of the other. It may have been her shield against temptation, her strength in hours of weakness, her consolation amid all the sorrows of her hard life; and, in the end, it might lead the helpless old soul to the cross of the Christ who had carried her babe in his bosom, and whose arms were outstretched toward herself.—Companion.

Slow Train Through Arkansas.

April 1, but I didn't meet a joke all day. At half-past three this morning we were waked up, and at four the train slowed up for Texarkana. The sleeper was silent save for us and the Easterner, who was prowling up and down the darkened aisle in his dressing gown and slippers. He told us good-by; but Mr. Carter was asleep, dreaming visions of never going back to Mexico. Jebly's tricycle was put off the baggage car and he was put in it, and we went into the station waiting room. It was cold. There had been a fire and perhaps gay faces and dancing lights and jollity. But now the stove was stone-cold. Three sullen-looking travelers sat moodily about the desolate room, with heels drawn up under them, and the ticket agent, sound asleep in the next room, wore an expression even in his sleep which signified, "It's no use to ask me any questions." As we were to wait for the seven o'clock train (according to the magnate's directions), we settled down to keep warm in our coats and say nothing. The station door had some sort of patent device for keeping it shut when you slammed it to, so that, technically, it wasn't locked or bolted, but couldn't be opened unless you had the secret password. We had hardly composed ourselves in sluggish discomfort when a train arrived and a stream of passengers flowed off to our waiting room door. They first turned the knob to start in, and kicked their feet against the door, which didn't give an inch. Then they beat upon the door. Then they tried to rattle it from its sockets. Then they glared through the window and saw us quietly seated in our chilly nooks, no doubt looking to them warm and prosperous. This made them more violent, but the ticket agent never woke up. I tried to open the door to them, and this caused a cessation of hostilities. But when they heard me retreat their excitement grew intense. Finally they circled around the building and came in the street door. They said nothing; neither did we. After a while another train came. There was the same battering, jarring, expostulations at the door, the same fierce glaring through the window, the straggling about the building, the dead silence on the triumphant entry at the back door. Then another train came and we had it all over again. Then another train and the same state of siege. At last a few of us declared we were going to have a fire in the stove (this in a loud voice for the benefit of the ticket agent, who still shammed slumber). We scurried about Texarkana, confiscating stray bits of wood, and after a time a blaze was roaring up the pipe. Then the men stood in a solid circle about the fire, like a crowd of Mexicans watching a cock-fight, and the ladies in the room crossed their toes to keep them warm and longed for the day.

When it was about seven we learned that our train didn't leave till nearly noon. So we were transferred to the other station, had breakfast, sat on a sunny corner of the platform talking to a man who was going to New Orleans to shoot alligators (he had his gun in his hand), and felt that we were well acquainted with Texarkana. There was a negro wandaring about, very black and polite, who proved to be a porter on the St. Louis special to Mexico. It was a pleasure to chat with a porter off duty, because we knew he couldn't be expecting a fee. All of us said things about Mexico that we would rather say behind her back than to her face, and at last the porter cried out with real enthusiasm: "Boss, ain't you glad we's 'Mericans?"

At 11:30 the train was ready to start for Gravette, the town in our home county, and we took our seats in the chair car because we didn't want the extra expense of a Pullman. Besides, why do people ride in Pullmans, anyhow? It is on the chair cars that you see the real life of the country through which you are passing. I pitied the people on the Pullmans in their aristocratic seclusion as I hobnobbed with women eating lunches of garlic flavor, babies who were sticky and men who had left their coats at home. Before we drew out from the station I was treated to a sight I had not seen since leaving Arkansas. A man was standing upon the platform chewing tobacco, with visible results about his feet. It made me feel that I was indeed getting home. Texarkana is a most satisfying place for a chewing man to chew. He can stand in Arkansas and spit over in Texas. It is so far beyond the thought of a gentleman to chew in New Orleans that there are no cuspidors in the hotels; and in Mexico, the Mexicans would be scandalized at the sight of a man chewing tobacco, as Americans are at the sight of a man wearing his shirt streaming to the breeze and the ladies sitting in the street with their bare toes turned up to the sky. No one could gravely accuse a peon of being clean in externals, but their mouths are not guilty of the contamination that befouls the mouths of your hale and bluff citizen of the Central states.

The baggagemaster wouldn't take a cent for carrying Jebly's tricycle across Arkansas. We are crossing Red River now. And is this it again? No, it is a lake. We cross it three times in little more than a minute. How it winds! Oh, to be on it in a boat with plenty of worms! Ogden, Hilton. And at Hilton, to repeated "Boards!" from the train auditor, brakeman and porter, and all except the conductor, who does nothing at any time that we can discover, finally two men amble up to the train and leisurely climb on. We wait to see if we can not scare up some other passengers; but nobody else will hear to getting aboard, so on we jog.

Extensive forests lying on a flat level. scarecrow in the middle of a field in which nothing has been planted for years, it would seem, reminding me of a vast stretch of the Mexican desert which its owner, who no doubt never saw it, has had enclosed by a neat wire fence. As we slip along from station to station the people from the last poke their heads from the windows and address the loafers by name. When fresh groups of travelers come into the car, somebody knows them to a man, and the continuous journey is like an expedition of friends, and friends of relatives, taken on the installment plan. The train on which I traveled from Gravette to Texarkana must have felt bad about passing so many towns without speaking; but that was in the night. And now, as if to ease a wounded conscience, it stops at everything. A young lady has seated herself before the mirror in the forward end of the car, and I can not look before me without catching a view of her reflection. I hope she won't think I'm studying her. I am obliged to turn sidewise to escape the suspicion. * * * Great stretches of pine trees. We cross the Arkansas river and now swamp after swamp lies before us, low, wet, slimy, but verdant with the dogwood always in white blossom. If the New Orleans mosquitoes could be set down here, what a picnic they would have! Let us hope nobody lives among these morasses. That young lady sitting forward has a straw hat rolled up on the left—there is one feather. Whenever I straighten my neck I catch her eye, and she is severely accusing. But why does she sit before the mirror? I can't help it.

No, I have just been examining my map, and that couldn't have been the Arkansas river. But I know these sticks all over these fields like a nursery of switches, growing to be used in human nurseries; I am weak on flora, but I know pea and bean-sticks.

The train auditor comes in calling, "All out for Winthrop!" Then the brakeman, "All out for Winthrop!" Then the porter, "All out for Winthrop!" The train stops, but nobody gets out. I don't blame them, for nothing is here save freight-cars. There is a dirty dilapidated old fellow, evidently on its last wheels, standing on a sidetrack rank with weeds. Across its side is painted, "Big Four." It was a majestic sovereign of the road once, but now it reminds me of a fine old gentleman turned tramp. Here are a few hills. Surely these are not the "mountains" that rumor says are to be found in Arkansas. More hills, but each stands all by itself and appears as a swelling of the ground. In comparison with the Sierra Madre, they are mere molehills—and the Sierra Madre are remembered as sure enough mountains. The lady riding in the chair in front of me has just said, "Seek-yo." She means secure. The young lady sitting forward has left the train. Her place is occupied by a young man eating his lunch. Every time he takes a bite, his eyes in the mirror looks me squarely in the eye as if to say, "Well, what of it? What are you watching me for?" I turn hastily away. But whenever I straighten my neck, he has just taken bread or meat between his big strong teeth, and is tugging at it with his hand, and eyeing me as if he thinks I want to stop his meal. We have stopped at a station and the news spread throughout the car that "the judge" died yesterday, and the body is to be placed in the baggage-car. Looking from the window, always glad of an excuse to avoid the aggressive eye of the feaster, I see a little bare-legged girl standing on the platform, very dirty and ragged; a man just behind me calls to her gruffly, "Be a good girl while I am gone." He is a roughly dressed fellow, with enough whiskers for two, but there is a tender light in his eye. And the way the little girl smiles at him shows that she is glad she belongs to him. And standing back from the crowd is a middle-aged woman in black, with her eyes riveted on the baggage-car. Her face is convulsed in an agony of grief so overpowering and so real, that the thought of concealing it never enters her mind. Another woman stands watching her with eyes of sympathetic friendship, but the woman in black gazes only at the baggage-car. She has been weeping, but there are no tears now—only the convulsion of sorrow. The train starts. The gruff voice calls again, "Now, you be a good little girl while I'm gone." And the little girl dances up and down on her bare feet and cries, "I will! I will!" And then the woman in black puts her hand to her heart, and the tears stream down her face; and at least one face from the car answers back with a stranger's tears.

We stop at a crossroads where stands a lonely lady with her trunk. We are not expecting to stop at every crossroad, so we had gone on too far. We obligingly back the train up to the trunk. We back too far. The train auditor stands at one point and the brakeman farther along. They pantomime till the car door is stopped opposite the trunk. The trunk is put on board. Then the train auditor and brakeman put their heads together over the matter to determine what else to be done. Noth ing else can be thought of. The lady is already seated in her chair. So we start up again. Really, here are some respectable hills. They are each independent of the others, of course; to a man who has seen mountain ranges, they are small affairs. Gilham; and we wait for a freight train to go on past us; but it crawls along with such exasperating slowness that we change our minds and go on ahead of it. Wickes; and these hills are pretty big. You don't see one rising up behind another as you do in the case of mountains. Still they are so green and pretty with the Arkansas sun flooding their dwarf pines, they are a pleasure to look at, if they are only hills.

Well, hurrah for Arkansas! It is getting prettier and prettier, the closer we get to Missouri. This land may not be good to raise anything else but hills, but it is successful in that upward direction. We have stopped beside the sawmill of a lumber camp. It sounds like a gigantic jewsharp, with more music than jewsharps produce. An Indian lady, very black, gets on the car. The train crew are in doubts about putting her in the coach labeled "For Whites," or in the one for colored people. The lady asserts her kinship to the chief tains of buffalo days and rides with us, very grim, very determined and always blacker than anything else. She gets off at Cove, and in the distance are blue shapes that might be mountains if one could get close enough to determine. Another lumber camp, and a man leaning over me and my chair to look out of the window, says: "Look at those logs!" I look at them. He repeats, fiercely: "Look at those logs!" I say meekly, "Yes, sir." He says: "What do you think of them?" I don't know whether he means for me to condemn or praise them, and to me one log is the same as another. Hoping to stand on safe ground and to conciliate him I say: "There are a good many of them." "Well!" he snorts, "I'll go on the other side of the car where I can see something!" From that I decided that the logs were not all they should have been.

Mena. A large town and full of interest to us, because the coach gets full of smoke from the engine, and the train auditor tries opening all the transoms and the porter tries shutting them, and the brakeman experiments with the door and windows, and the conductor comes in and sneezes and retires somewhere till he comes to test it again. I never knew such an easy business as conductoring. All you have to do is to sit on the train and let it pull you about, while other men do your work.

We have come to real mountains with green trees running to their combs and clambering down on the other side; and there are mountains in the distance of a respectable blue, only the trees will show through here and there, which destroys the effect of remoteness. Eagletown; we are at the foot of a high range. There may be eagles here, but no town. Rich mountain—station and mountain both of the same name. One old, neglected build ing with the legend, "General Merchandise," apparently a veteran of war-time, left without pension. The train stops at the foot of a lonely mountain and two well-dressed ladies get off and go straggling up a trail carrying their valises. No house or sign of life—just the two ladies growing smaller and smaller as they climb. It must be romantic to live here. I can not think it would be anything else. Thomasville, and the chain of beautiful mountains come to an end.

Out of a desolate lumber camp emerges a lady, her mother and her little girl. They boad the train and sit behind me. The little girl is prone to do what she is forbidden, and the young mother punishes her by giving expression to such phrases as, "I'll whip you; I'll throw you out of the window; I'll cut your head off; I'll make the train run over you." Nor are these threats unwarranted. My objection to them is that one or more is not carried into effect. The lady has almost as hard a time trying to manage her mother. The old lady will not do a thing she is ordered to do. "You sit in this chair," says the child's mother. "I won't," says the child's grandmother. "Don't open that window ma," says the younger woman. "I will, too," says the old lady. The young woman must lead a busy life to have such arrant rebels on her hands.

We are in Indian Territory now. The Indians one sees at the stations are dressed like the white men, but they are not so carefully dressed as the upper class of the Mexicans. However, it must be remembered that the Aztecs got an earlier start in history. After level stretches, a mountain, the very climax of the Arkansas exhibition rises before me. It is shaped like a castellated fort. The sides rise abruptly from the ground like a perpendicular green wall. It is oval, with swells here and there. Beyond the edge of the wall seems to rise a convex roof, as of some enormous globular temple. All is a vivid green, freshened and glorified by the declining sun. Beyond the temple roof a giant's ermine robe seems to lie shimmering, its folds undulating away to a vast hem. Beyond the robe, a level lawn, apparently set in the finest blue grass, reaches out to the circular walls, and the walls drop sheer to the level plain. It was the prettiest thing we saw in all our travels. Somebody told us it is called Sugar Loaf Mountain. I think it very likely, unless somebody has been forehanded enough to call it Hassock Mountain or Lady's Hat Mountain, Paper Balloon Mountain, or something like that. I hear the lady in the rear saying, "What kind of a kid air ye, nohow?" Panama, and the ground shows a vast number of little swells or mounds, all very green and pretty, like saucers turned upside down to dry. Spiro for supper and the car lamps are lighted. That will cause us to remember Spiro. It is a flourishing city. We cross Red River and stop at a station named Red Land. The river is really red from the washings of this land, and the ground is red, as it should be; and the natives on the station platform were redmen; and a hog—it seems a curious coincidence, but it is a fact—a hog rooting about the station is a red hog.

From Indian Territory back into Arkansas and Decatur, which means that we leave the train at the next station. Then Gravette, and Jebly is given his tricycle, and we go to a hotel at 11 p. m. Home (Bentonville) is only eighteen miles away, but we must wait at Gravette fifteen hours before we are allowed to start over those eighteen miles. So all night at the hotel and all next day till 2:30 p. m. in Gravette, then home again, with one's father and mother standing at the door. And this picture, after all, and not Sugar Loaf Mountain, is the sight best worth seeing since one started around the Gulf to Mexico.

An Old and Well-tried Remedy

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

San Antonio.—Well, it seems that what I said about that that historic city displeased one of our readers, who says I misrepresented San Antonio, and the Alamo in particular, and that the article was full of historical inaccuracies. I am very sorry to have hurt any one's feelings for saying anything about the place where he lived; but it does seem to me that, from the nature of that article, all criticism should have been disarmed. I threw myself entirely upon the mercy of the reader—said that I had forgotten the Alamo was in San Antonio, thus admitting myself to be entirely beyond the pale of historic consideration. I stated that my coming to San Antonio was an accident, my delay there was an accident, and I was but a few hours there. It occurred to me that it ought to be interesting to give the actual impressions of such a wanderer, in such a scene. Accordingly I simply wrote what I saw, heard, and afterwards looked up in the Cyclopedia of Universal Knowledge, pointing out some discrepancies between the book and what I had heard. As to pretending to know anything myself, why, how could I? I was writing a series of travel, dealing with the travelers and their experiences, and the places through which we passed formed the setting to the story. When I said Morton was threatened with arrest for lying on the grass, it was with no thought of casting a slur at Milam place; and when I said Morton looked for pretty women (the typographer skipped a line of my copy at that place, and blurred the sense) it was purely for the sake of giving another touch to Morton's character. San Antonio and the Alamo are too securely embedded in our history to need any encomiums at my hands; and also, they are too secure in their position, to take offense at the stray impressions of one accidently passing along Houston street. The fact is, I had hoped my story, "Around the Gulf to Mexico," would prove a different thing from the ordinary book of travel which takes such pains to present facts that they are usually skipped by the rest-seeking reader; and I wanted to tell how everything looked to me, without measuring dimensions or dates.

I stuck my hand in my pocket (my new coat) last Sunday night, and there was little Margaret's letter: "I am sending you five cents for Charlie. How is Felix? You send this 11 cents to Drusie. We have five cats. Goodby, my loving one." That's the kind of letter I like to receive!

Olive Leavitt, Bethany, Neb.: "We are rather late, but will be greatly disappointed if we do not get some of that highpriced ice cream. My father, mother, sister, brother and I would each like a dish; so we bring 75 cents.

Mrs. Chas. L. Scearce, Gower, Mo.: "I will take $1 worth of ice cream, for it is so warm here I think I will need that much to reduce my temperature."

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dysart, Solomonville, Ariz.: "We inclose $5 for Drusie Malott, the Advance Society missionary; she and the society have our prayers in the good work being done."

Miss C. T. Lemley, Salt Lake City, Utah: "I am too late for your orphan's ice cream social, but it's never too late to do good. Please add this $1 to Charlie's education fund. Though not a member of the Av. S., I am always interested in its work."

M. F. Little, Mount Hope, Kan.: "I am very fond of ice cream and will take $1 worth for the benefit of Charlie's education. My wife won't eat ice cream, so she sends $1 for missionary Drusie. We are glad to see so many sending for the benefit of the needy."

Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Moshier, Jewell City, Kan.: One dollar for Charlie, $1 for Drusie. God bless them both and the Av. S. in its splendid work."

Mrs. J. H. Byram, Pasadena, Cal.; "Our class of X. L. Girls send $1 for Charlie's cream social. Wish it could have been more. We raised $100 on our church debt; had our Easter and Children's Day collections, and expect a big rally September 22, when we go into the Sunday-school room of our new church building. Best wishes for Charlie and the Av. S."

Mrs. F. M. Scott, Paris, Mo.: "I am too late for the social, but send a mite in the name of my Master for Orphan Charlie. May the Lord bless him in his efforts."

Mrs. H. Howard, Clinton, Iowa: "My daughter sends 25 cents for a dish for herself and another for her four-year-old boy of that 'pure food ice cream.' I had a dish last year and want another one this year. Long live Charlie and the Advance Society!"

Clara L. Reynolds, Letah, Wash.: "We enjoyed Charlie's ice cream so much last year that we want 50 cents' worth this year. Success to the Av. S."

Nellie Northcutt, Knox City, Mo.: "My Sunday-school class of five little girls gave an ice cream social for Charlie. The class is small, and we were not able to get very much—$1.65." (Tell the girls they have the honor of giving the only local social for Orphan Charlie this year, and the $1.65 is appreciated down to the very last penny of it).

Harriet McCausland, Acampo, Cal.: "Here I am late, but what can you expect when I have come all the way from California? If all the ice cream isn't sold, I'll take a dish. If it is, I'll clean out the freezer. The last time you heard from me I was living in Kansas. We came out here in February and are living in Christian colony. This is a lovely place; lots of fruit, beautiful flowers, fine climate and good people. It is only fifteen miles to Stockton, which is a large city. We have a beautiful little church. I am sending you a post card of it. Bro. J. V. Coombs dedicated it last year. Brother Dargitz, papa and two or three others donate their services as preacher, which makes it possible for the church to give a great deal to missions. Brother Dargitz opened the colony, and we are grateful to him for making it possible to have such a beautiful home. I am sending you my fourth and fifth Av. S. reports, and would have another to send, but I forgot my quotations and have to begin over. We liked 'Agnes of the Bad Lands' fine, and we are enjoying your trip to Mexico very much. We think Felix a very smart cat. We never knew but one his equal—our old gold cat Fudge that we had to leave back in Kansas. Don't you want to come to see the Golden State?" (I'd like to see the golden girl, that's you! But how could you leave the golden cat in Kansas when you could have taken him down there to feed on golden oranges?) "We would like to see you. Bring Morton and Jebly and his tricycle and Felix, and come out. I hope every member of the Av. S. will attend Charlie's social. Perhaps Morton can find his particular kind of suspender in California. I hope soon to hear from the social." (A family just rolled into Bentonville in a covered wagon, looking picturesque and tired, with a horse straggling along after the wagon. Moore is the name, and I knew them. They came from up in Kansas, and just as soon as they told me that they camped one night at the edge of Coffeyville, I thought of Harriet McCausland. That's where I got acquainted with her; but though she's moved to California, I'm glad it costs no more for her to visit me from there than from Kansas—just a 2-cent stamp. But, speaking of this Moore family, they told me that a lady 'way up in Kansas—and that seems a mighty far away off—asked them if Felix was a sure enough cat. When she heard that they knew me she asked if Felix was just made up to interest the Av. S., or a sure enough mouser. I guess the person that feeds Felix is never in doubt as to his having a sure enough stomach. I must tell you about Felix at the wedding, but haven't room this week).

Mrs. Power, Platte City, Mo.: "I am a little late, but want three full dishes of ice cream for myself, husband and son Norman. Success to the Av. S."

Ruth Day, Sparta, Mo.: "Here I am at Charlie's ice cream supper at last! I am so dreadfully late I'm afraid all the ice cream is melted. I will take two dishes at wholesale rate. I hope we will be able to give Charlie an education, and that he will do much good in the world. I am sorry he couldn't take a vacation this summer, but am sure he was happier when he thought he was doing somebody else good. At the end of our last 'Honor List' you asked if you had left out anybody. Yes, you did. It was my sixth quarterly report that you had forgotten. I have done a lot of studying this summer—history, because I like it, and grammar and pedagogy. I attended the teachers' examination in June and made my averages all right. Will 'Agnes of the Bad Lands' ever be published in book form?" (I think so.) "I enjoy reading the trip to Mexico. Best wishes for Charlie, Drusie, the Av. S. and Felix. We have twenty-two cats, and four of them are maltese. They are all pretty." (You had better keep all those cats out of sight if you are ever visited by the writer of the next letter).

George L. Gordon, El Oro, Mexico: "How you can be so blind about Felix I can't imagine. Cats are surely underhanded rascals. Take our family cat. There he sits now at the bowl from which we usually water him, hollering, but too sneaking to look anybody in the eye. Contrast that with the open nature of a dog. If a dog wants you to do anything for him, he looks you squarely in the eye—no skulking about—and if you abuse him he is ready to take a piece out of your leg. A cat is quite different. Do the least trifle to him, and he flies out the moment your back is turned. Then beware that cat! He will sneak into your house, draw the last breath out of your sleeping infant, catch your pet canary, or do anything." (Dogs have another property besides open-minded sincerity, and that's what I don't like to get on me, for I never had any success at catching one).

The social is almost ended. We have reported thus far $49.50.

—"The ——— is doing our missionary interests incalculable harm" is the burden of many letters. Many discouraged ministers see the work of years ruthlessly torn down. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST tries to raise every mortal to the skies. Its cruelist critic can never point to an effort to drag any good cause down.

"I have carefully examined 'Union Gospel Songs' and find it to be a gem illumined with many selections from our very best song writers. It contains numerous songs particularly appropriate to many special occasions. The splendid collection of old favorite songs is an attractive feature of this new book.
"Oscar Marks, Singing Evangelist."

—A count reveals that we are now supplying 506 more Bible schools with literature than we were through September, 1906. This remarkable increase can not be attributed to sensational advertising or to a commercial enterprise superior to that of our competitors for popular favor, but to the fact that the churches are fast learning that the subject-matter of our helps is far richer and more valuable than others and that our literature is delivered accurately and promptly.

—Abundant harvests and the universal scale of high wages make it possible for practically every Christian home in America to have the best Christian newspaper on its reading table. Now is the time for those pastors who realize the value of such a ministerial assistant as this paper in all the family circles of their congregation to press this matter upon the attention, yea and upon the conscience, of the people and have its pages read by multiplied thousands. Nearly every preacher, or other Disciple, who will earnestly try can secure us a welcome into at least ten new homes in a single day.

—How blighting would be the effect on a revival meeting if certain church papers were distributed among the people. It is in itself a reward for publishing one week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, to receive a testimonial like this from one of our best Illinois preachers:

"The 200 copies of the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have been of invaluable service to our meeting." It has been impossible for me to canvass for new subscriptions, but to date have received 10 that were unsolicited. If preachers would realize and appreciate the results from having a strong paper in the homes of their people they would certainly spend more time in securing subscriptions. Will send you a list of new subscribers to-morrow.—Lewis P. Fisher, Cantrall, Ill.

—Faces Toward the Light. Sylvanus Stall. This is for the devotional hour. Every phase of the Christian life—its joys and sorrows, its temptations and triumphs—is treated in reverent and deeply spiritual manner that is sure to prove helpful and inspiring to every reader. $1.00.

—Lectures on Preaching. By Phillips Brooks. These are stenographic reports of lectures delivered by this prince of preachers before the divinity school of Yale College. It is a beautifully bound volume. Considering the wealth of learning it contains, together with the beauty of expression and inspiration to become a useful preacher, it is cheap at $1.30.

—Huck's Synopsis of the First Three Gospels. By Ross Z. Finney. This contains an analytical outline of the parallel passages of the synoptics that has received the commendation of many able Bible scholars. The appendices are valuable. In them are listed Old Testament quotations in the synoptics, Johannine parallels to the synoptics, parallels and duplicates, etc. $1.00.

—Christianity's Storm Center. By Charles Stelzli. To the author the storm center is the city, and the problem of the city is an industrial one. He believes that if the church can be aroused to face the problem, investigate conditions and alter its own methods it will win the fight for uniting the church and the laboring masses. Through it all there prevails a contagious optimism. $1.00.

—Object Lessons for Children. By C. H. Tyndall. The eye is the first avenue to the soul. It is the shortest. It is the easiest and quickest. The author believes in using the eye as a medium for the communication of instruction in the Scriptures and in the ways of life. The book contains a great many brief but strikingly illustrated talks to children. It will be helpful to every preacher and Bible or secular school-teacher. $1.00.

—The Cyclopedia Handbook to the Bible. Agnes Green. This is one of the profoundest and most helpful introductions to the Scriptures ever offered the reading public. It treats of the language, canon, versions, transmissions, etc.; of the credentials and claims; of the inspiration and revelation; of the interpretation of the Scriptures and their practical application. The introductions of the various divisions of the work are also of deep interest. $1.50, prepaid.

—The Evangelistic Note. By W. J. Dawson. The address on "Self-Reservation" was delivered to the students of Yale University. The remaining thirteen were given during a revival held by this truly great preacher for Newell Dwight Hillis in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. These are all on lofty spiritual plan and will be most helpful. $1.25.

CHRIST'S REVELATION OF GOD

By W. C. Morro
Ph. D., of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.

Perhaps every serious-minded man has sometimes paused in wonder at the thought that there was once a man on earth whose life was without a fault; in whose heart was no guile; and who knew God as we know the changing phases of our everyday experience. The possibilities of such a being are so infinite that at the very thought of him we pause in holy awe; the ground on which we stand becomes sacred and the very atmosphere around us luminous with the divine presence. As we study the influence of Jesus through the centuries, we are led to ask, "Who was he?" The sacred writers have applied to him notable titles, such as The Author and the Finisher, The First and the Last, the Son of God. From the many titles applied to him, and the many passages which describe him, I select a few that unite in ascribing to him the great task of revealing God to men. These passages will at least serve to point the way to the answer to the question, What think you of Christ? "He that beholdeth me, beholdeth him that sent me" (John 12:45). "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14:9), for "I am in the Father and the Father in me" (John 14:11). He is the image of the invisible God (Col. 1:15); in him dwelleth the fulness of the Godhead bodily (Col. 2:9): the glory of God was in the face of Jesus Christ (2 Cor. 4:6), manifesting itself not merely by reflected light, for God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself (2 Cor. 5:19).

These passages set forth one of the great works of Christ—he revealed God to men (John 1:14). Around this humanity of ours sin had dropped a veil of darkness so that "no man hath seen God at any time"; the divine person, character and nature were alike unknown to us. Within this circle of darkness Christ entered and in his face shone the glory of the Father so that through him God became known to earth. "By him we look up to the heights of heaven. By him we behold, as in a glass, his immaculate and most excellent visage" (Clement of Rome).

It is not here necessary to enter into the discussion of how this revealing of the Father was effected, whether by the imparting of knowledge which he had himself in a perfectly natural way acquired, or by the possession of a nature that in all its varied actions showed itself to be divine. It can not be questioned which side the sacred writers are to be found upon. They and all the early church saw, at the center of Christianity, Christ as its luminary, and this dayspring rising upon a darkened world was not a satellite, but the originator of light. His nature is a real divinity; apart from this fact there can be no proper revelation of God by him. As has been convincingly shown, the human mind has never been able to rest fixed in any theory about his nature which credits to him less than perfect divinity (Orr's Christian View of God and the World). The "equality with God" which the apostle predicates of him (Phil. 2), is a sine qua non of his unveiling of the Father to the sinful world.

What was the substance of this revelation of the Father? What are some of the facts about God which Christ made known? I mention first one truth about God which Jesus did not affirm in mere words, but which lies at the foundation of every statement he makes about him, and which is an inseparable element of his thinking about the deity. In opposition to all the Pantheists, the Agnostics, the speculative metaphysicians who hesitate or refuse to speak of God in terms of thinking, volition and individuality. Jesus believed in the personality of God. He never speaks of God as a mere force, a power or a cause. The deity was not in the thought of Jesus merely an energizing force with an immutable tendency towards righteousness and truth. Such attenuated substitutes for personality as Matthew Arnold's stream of tendency that makes for righteousness is far removed from the conception which Jesus held of a personal God with warm gracious attributes who created man for a moral end, who loves him and takes thought for his welfare. This conception of the deity was the foundation of that sense of love and trust which Jesus ever felt towards God. In the hour of temptation (Luke 4:4), of joy (Luke 10:21), of sorrow (John 11:41), of agony (Luke 22:42), and of death (Luke 23:46), Jesus found the conception of God as one who could and did enter into most appreciative and sympathetic relationship with him, a stay and support to his soul. Such feelings could never have been his had he not entertained the thought of a Father-God who sorrows over the errors of men, rejoices at their repentance, pities the downtrodden and oppressed and loves the world after the analogy of the same feelings as they are manifested by the noblest of his earthly sons. That such feelings are possible to those only who believe in the personality of God is attested by the fact that no one except those who have shared in this belief of Jesus has ever rested in perfect and serene contentment upon the character and nature of God. Belief in the greatness of God's power, his omnipotence, in his long duration, his eternity; in his wisdom, his omniscience, can not singly nor all combined give to the believer the sense that God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. Not even the assurance that God makes for righteousness can give to man this calm trust. It is only the belief that he can and does enter into personal relationship with man, sympathizes with him in his struggles, contributes to his welfare and loves his soul. There has been little incentive to worship, small promise of help and no comfort to the laboring and heavy-laden of earth in such deities—born of the intellect only—as the Immensities and Eternities of Carlyle, the Over-Soul of Emerson, the Universum of Strauss and the Humanity of Comte.

But the Father-God of Jesus became real and living to men; they looked into the face of Jesus and there saw God shining in his face so that like Thomas they exclaimed, "My Lord and my God." His revealing of the Father wins from men their love, their fealty and their praise.

> "If Jesus Christ is a God,
> And the only God, I swear
> I will follow him through heaven and hell.
> The earth, the sea and the air."

This conception of God as a loving sympathetic person clears up the perspective of things. The fact of the earth's existence can then scarcely be said to be a riddle; man's place and work in creation becomes evident; the pains and sorrows of life call for patience, not despair.

To the world, in an age when men were blindly groping and reaching out after God, Jesus unveiled the deity and made known that he possesses such personal characteristics as have been described above. It stood in need of such a God. The Greeks spoke of the deity, but when this term, as used by them, is analyzed, it is not found to connote the conception that there is one God who cares for man and seeks his welfare. No pure Hellenic writer had up to this time held so exalted a view of God. Among the Romans only the Stoics held a view that was to any degree akin to that of Jesus. To find a belief in God that approximated his, we must go to the land of his own race, but, even among the Jews there were certain tendencies of thought which were robbing God of the very attributes that Jesus came to exalt. The general result of the mission of Jesus to earth was to unveil God to all mankind, but subordinate to this was the special one of purifying and ennobling the conception of the deity held by his own nation.

The Conversion of Mr. Hearst.

Mr. Hearst, who was erstwhile considered the chief spokesman of the unsafe and insane element and the leader of every dangerous radical movement, has become a conservative. He made a good and sober speech the other day at Jamestown, and his papers, though still blatant, noisy and polychromatic, are more tolerable than they used to be. The following brief editorial, which recently appeared in one of them, embodies Mr. Hearst's call for a conservative reaction against the radicalism of Roosevelt:

One of the very old fables credited to Lafontaine, borrowed by him probably from some older writer, tells the following story:

"A very good man had a very good tame bear. The bear was a vigorous creature, deeply attached to his owner.

"The owner lay down to sleep, and the bear was much annoyed by the conduct of the flies. One fly especially was quite dead to all feelings of decency. As often as the bear shooed the fly away, the fly came back to the face of the sleeping man.

"Finally the bear said to himself, 'I know what I'll do. I'll be strenuous. I'll show that fly something.'

"He did so.

"He picked up a large rock weighing fifty or a hundred ponds. And as soon as the fly appeared on the nose of the sleeping man, he smashed the fly with the rock—he also smashed the head of his boss, although he hadn't intended to do so."

Subsequently the bear was heard to remark that he had perhaps been a little impetuous in his fly-killing, but that nobody could deny his earnestness or his good intentions.

This blessed and prosperous country is in a fair way to finding out for itself the exact meaning of that ancient fable.

The sleeping gentleman just now is Uncle Sam. The flies that insist on wandering over his countenance are the Trust flies—the fattest being the Standard Oil fly. And the bear, with delightful confidence in his own fly-killing methods, is the bear whom you all know and admire—first name THEODORE.

Flies are a nuisance, they should be brushed away. They should also be killed—but properly and cautiously.

The people of the United States, we judge, are going to find out that a bear with a rock, and with considerable more self-confidence than judgment, doesn't make the very best kind of a fly-killer.

Bureau of American Republics.

Work will soon be begun on the handsome building which is to be the home of the Bureau of American Republics. Mr. Carnegie contributed three-quarters of the million dollars which it will cost. The remainder of the cost will be paid by the twenty-one American republics which are represented in the Bureau. This unique organization was established in 1890 and was first presided over by James G. Blaine. Its purpose is to promote friendly relations among the republics of North and South America, and especially to encourage commercial intercourse. The headquarters or home office of the Bureau is at Washington, and will serve as a sort of universal consulate where the commercial interests of all the American nations will receive consideration. Such an enterprise naturally diminishes the chances of war among the nations concerned, and it is upon this ground that Mr. Carnegie, as a promoter of peace, has contributed to the building.

The Franklin Union.

A great trade and technical school is to be established in Boston as the result of a bequest made by Benjamin Franklin one hundred and twenty-seven years ago. By his will, dated June 23, 1780, Franklin left the city of Boston the sum of one thousand pounds, the income of which was to be allowed to accumulate for a hundred years. He estimated that the total amount at the end of the century would be £131,000. One hundred thousand pounds was then to be used for some public purpose, at the discretion of the trustees, and the remainder allowed to accumulate. With diminishing interest rates, the sum has not increased quite as rapidly as the testator anticipated, but it amounts now to over $400,000. With this money, and some more which has been added to it, the trustees have decided to found a great trades school for the training of artisans, mechanics, draughtsmen and mechanical engineers. The wisdom of the benefactor is evident in the fact that he gave the trustees a free hand to decide how the money should be used. No man can anticipate the needs of an American city a century ahead. The plan decided upon is one which even the far-seeing Franklin would scarcely have hit upon at that time, but it is one which would meet his heartiest approbation if he were here to-day.

Arkansas Diamonds.

The discovery of diamonds in Arkansas has aroused high hopes in the breasts of many of the people of that state. They are not "Hot Springs diamonds, but real diamonds. Genuine diamonds have been found at many places in the United States, but never "in place"; that is, they have not been found in the geological formation where they were made, but only as isolated pebbles which had been carried by glacial action from the unknown place of their origin and scattered here and there by ones and twos. The significance of the newly found diamonds of Arkansas is that they are "in place." The following statement about the Arkansas diamond field has been published in a government report issued by the Geological Survey:

Although diamonds have been found in at least thirty places in the United States, the only locality where they occur in place has recently been discovered and has been investigated by George F. Kunz, the gem expert, and Dr. H. S. Washington, petrographer. They occur in an igneous rock, similar to that in the South African mines, which forms a small stock near Murfreesboro, Pike county, Arkansas. The first two stones were found August 1, 1906 and since then many of them have been picked up, the total number found at last report being 130. Many are white and of good water, others are yellow and some are of brown bort. The two largest stones weigh six and one-half carats, one being exceedingly fine white and the other brown. They are found on the surface as well as within the greenish, friable, decomposed peridotite, a rock somewhat like the famous "blue ground" of Kimberley. The property is being actively prospected and developed.

Oklahoma.

The election in Oklahoma resulted in the ratification of the constitution, including the prohibition feature, and a general Democratic victory. The strong Democratic element in Indian Territory was effectively organized at the time of the effort to secure admission for that territory as the state of Sequoyah. When that effort failed and the joint-statehood bill was passed by Congress the Indian Territory element dominated the new constitutional convention and the Sequoyah constitution became the nucleus of the constitution framed for the state of Oklahoma. It remains only for the President to approve the constitution for the enabling act to become effective and Oklahoma to enter upon the enjoyment of the rights of statehood. It may be surmised that the President does not like the new constitution, but his approval of it is supposed to have to do solely with its agreement with the federal constitution and not to depend upon his personal opinion of the wisdom of its provisions.

The Young Prodigy.

We are not a believer in prodigies. The young expert or specialist usually fails to make any great advance in subsequent years, and is frequently an absolute failure in mature life. But a greater danger is usually to the character of the individual. There is a great risk of spoiling the natural simplicity and sweetness of the child by the methods of the platform. We note that a twelve year old English girl is now conducting meetings, as a juvenile evangelist. Nothing but curiosity will draw people to such a service and while the child may have something to say, we think she had better wait until she can speak out of an experience that people will respect and heed.

Speaking of the Norfolk convention, leads us to remind the brethren again of the important matters to come before us in that convention. They are questions that demand the highest practical wisdom, the largest degree of the spirit of Christ and of the wisdom which cometh from above. Let us be seeking such wisdom in earnest prayer and meditation upon the subjects to come before us, so that our action on all these questions will be such as to commend us not only to those without, but to our own consciences and clear judgments in the days to come. When Jesus, in company with his disciples, was going up to the last of the great annual feasts of the Jews which he attended, some of his disciples, on their way thither, were quarreling about who should be the greatest! God forbid that any such spirit as this should animate any of us as we go up to our great annual convocation, under the leadership of Christ, to take counsel together as to how we may best promote the triumph of that Kingdom for which he laid down his life.

Editorial

Some First Principles.

VII. Baptism—A Pledge to Holiness of Life.

We have become so accustomed to regard baptism from the controversial point of view that there is great danger of our losing sight of its spiritual significance. It is a noteworthy fact that Paul's references to baptism, which are so often quoted, had for their purpose the reinforcement of his argument in favor of a whole-souled, consecrated, Christian life, and when we come to Paul's point of view no theme could be used with greater propriety and force in holding up the highest Christian ideals than that of baptism. Let us study it in this article from this Pauline point of view.

There were those in Paul's time who opposed his doctrine of justification by faith through Christ, on the ground that such teaching would encourage people to live in sin. They said, if it be true that "where sin abounds, grace doth much more abound," why should not the believer continue in sin that grace may abound? The apostle meets this objection to the doctrine in the sixth chapter of the Roman letter in the following passage:

"What shall we say, then? Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid. We who die to sin, how shall we any longer live therein? Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? We were buried, therefore, with him through baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life. For if we have become united with him in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection; knowing this, that our old man was crucified with him, that the body of sin might be done away, that so we should no longer be in bondage to sin: for he that hath died is justified from sin."—Rom. 6:1-7.

The reason why believers can not continue in sin that grace may abound is that they have died to sin; that is, have become separated from it. Through faith in Christ they have learned to love holiness and to hate sin, and they have likewise received strength through their faith in Christ to break away from their old master, sin, and to count themselves as dead to him. This death to sin, the apostle proceeds to say, was set forth in symbolism, very impressively, by their baptism. "Or are ye ignorant," he asks with characteristic candor, "that all who were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" This question goes to the heart of the matter. It is worth asking again to-day. Are those who speak of baptism contemptuously as of little value, and as unworthy of their serious and prayerful study ignorant of the fact that "all we who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death"? Is it not possible that even some of us who contend zealously for the original form of baptism may yet be "ignorant" of its deep spiritual significance? Do we always remember that our baptism presupposes our crucifixion with Christ, or death to sin, and that our burial with him in baptism is our solemn pledge to walk with him in newness of life? Have not many of us discounted and cheapened the meaning of being "crucified with Christ," and thereby becoming dead to sin? This is figurative language, it is true, but it is not without deep spiritual meaning. Surely the man who loves sin and continues to walk in the paths of sin, living the same old life, and spending his time and means and energies in the same old ways, is not "dead to sin."

In proof of the reality of the believer's death to sin, the apostle states, "We were buried therefore with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." This, the apostle says, was the meaning of our baptism. It was the symbolic grave in which "our old man" and our old life were buried, and from which, as in the resurrection from the dead, the believer rises to "walk in newness of life." Now, the apostle argues, this being the meaning of your baptism,—a symbolic declaration of your death to sin, and your everlasting separation from it,—how absurd is the idea of our continuing in sin that grace may abound!

And so throughout the chapter the great apostle exhorts the brethren to reckon themselves as "dead unto sin, but alive unto God in Christ Jesus." Sin is no longer to reign in their mortal bodies as masters. As they had formerly yielded their members unto sin as instruments of unrighteousness, they were now, by their baptism, committed to a new life in which they were to yield their members as instruments of righteousness unto God. Furthermore, he argues, every man is a servant to the master to which he yields himself. If you yield yourselves to sin, then you are the servants of sin, but if you yield yourselves unto righteousness, ye are the servants of righteousness. "But thanks be to God, that, whereas ye were servants to sin, ye became obedient from the heart to that form of teaching whereunto you were delivered; and being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." That "form of teaching" to which they had become obedient, includes their death to sin, through the crucifixion of the old man, their burial with Christ through baptism into his death, and their resurrection to walk in newness of life. There can be no legitimate burial without a preceding death; nor can there be any Christian baptism that is not preceded by death to sin—the desire and purpose of the heart to turn away from the sinful life and henceforth to walk with Christ.

This is the use Paul makes of baptism in this notable passage and in the one like it in the second chapter of Colossians. Incidentally, it shows beyond reasonable doubt what was the original form of baptism, and the teaching on that point is none the less clear and convincing because it is incidental. But we are not to forget that Paul regarded baptism as so full of spiritual significance, that it was impossible to think of those who had submitted to it as continuing in sin. It is transitional. It marks the boundary line between the old life and the new life. It marks a change of masters, for it means nothing less than the solemn dedication, not only of our spirits, but of all the members of our bodies, as the instruments of righteousness to be henceforth used in the service of Christ. If this aspect and meaning of baptism were duly emphasized, and the controversial spirit should be put away when we come to the treatment of this solemn and impressive ordinance, it would do much to harmonize our practice on this subject and to heal divisions which ages of controversy have only served to perpetuate.

On to Norfolk.

The time for our great, annual, national convention is close at hand. We are printing the programs of the various societies, together with other matters of interest relating to the convention, in this number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We should not feel that we had done our duty fully, however, to the cause in the interest of which the convention is held, without urging attendance upon this convention, as a duty, as well as a high privilege, for all who can find it in their power to attend. We have noticed, with regret, a tendency on the part of ministers and other prominent brethren to absent themselves from these conventions on very slight excuses. We believe that those who neglect such attendance, habitually, or for slight reasons, do themselves and the great interests which the convention represents, serious injury. Here are a few reasons why everyone who can do so, should attend these conventions:

1. Our national conventions are the only representative meetings of the religious movement we represent, in which all the interests relating to its general welfare are considered. It is the one meeting, therefore, to which the religious world and all others interested, have a right to look for information concerning the spirit, scope, and achievements of our movement. Everyone should feel an interest, therefore, in making these conventions what they ought to be in numbers, enthusiasm, spirit, and outlook. Whether we like it or not, we will be judged by the public by what we say and do in these conventions.

2. As we have pointed out before, these conventions serve to promote mutual acquaintanceship, to cement bonds of friendship, give opportunity for interchange of thought and, therefore, tend mightily to promote that unity among ourselves which is so essential to the success of the prime object we have in view. It is, perhaps, the greatest unifying agency at work among us, and does more to overcome the divisive influences exerted by a reactionary religious press, than anything else. Any one deprives himself of a great feast for his intellectual, social and religious nature, who absents himself from these conventions.

3. But the chief reason of all for attending these conventions is that they are held in the interest of missions at home and abroad, and have for their supreme purpose the carrying out of Christ's last command—the preaching of the gospel to the whole creation. As this is the supreme work of the Church, and as every religious movement is measured by what it is doing in carrying out Christ's Great Commission, it follows that these conventions where the Church meets, through its representatives, to attend to the business associated with the evangelization of the world, are great focal points in its history, where, on mountain-tops of religious exaltation and of opportunity, we catch new visions of the world's needs and of our duties and responsibilities.

While these reasons apply to all our national conventions, we have the conviction that they apply in a special manner to our convention in Norfolk in October. The Exposition celebrating the three hundredth anniversary of the first permanent English settlement in the United States is a matter of sufficient historical interest to justify a visit on that account alone. And then, as we have before pointed out, there are questions of great interest to come before the Norfolk convention. These questions will tax the wisdom and broad Christian statesmanship of those who shall there assemble. It has come to us, indirectly, that there is likely to be sprung upon the convention some grave issues not provided for in any program. This, however, will probably depend upon the representation at the convention and the spirit which pervades it. We have no fears of what the representative men and women of this brotherhood will do, if they are present and have opportunity to speak and act. A word to the wise is sufficient. Our men of light and leading, whether in the pulpit or in the pew, will be needed at Norfolk for wise, conservative, unifying action, looking to the continued growth and prosperity of our mission work, both in the home land and in the foreign field.

The local congregations have a responsibility in this matter which they must not evade. If their ministers are unable, financially, to bear the expense of the journey, the churches should pay their expenses and send them. The local church can not do itself or its minister a greater benefit than to send him to one of our national conventions, that he may catch its great keynotes, become inspired with the zeal and optimism which prevail in these conventions, and to bring back home with him something of the vision and inspiration which he has seen and felt in the great convocation of his brethren. Sometimes individual members of congregations can do a gracious act of this kind, where the church treasury would not seem to justify it. We would like to see a larger number of our business and professional men in attendance at the Norfolk convention. It would give many of them a new insight into the greatness of the work we are doing and the needs of the cause, and would furnish them with new reasons for conducting their business in the interest of the kingdom of God.

Let us all remember that the Norfolk convention, which is destined to make history either to our credit or discredit, will depend upon the spirit we carry thither with us. If the brethren throughout the country should think it worth while to invoke the blessing and guidance of Almighty God upon the proceedings of the convention, and if they shall go to Norfolk seeking the glory of Jesus Christ, the unity of his Church, and the triumph of his Kingdom, and with no selfish aims and purposes in view, then shall the convention at Norfolk, in connection with the Exposition celebrating the tricentennial of the Jamestown settlement, go down in history as one in which the great brotherhood was enabled to rise sublimely to its great opportunity.

Notes and Comments.

In an article in "The Biblical World" for May, which was condensed and afterwards published in "The Pacific Christian Advocate," there is a great deal of wise advice given to college students who are preparing for the ministry. Take the following as a sample:

> Do not give up the ministry because you have been told that the churches are so conservative and hide-bound that a man who thinks for himself will find no congregation to preach to, and will after a brief and inglorious career in the ministry, have to seek some other occupation. People want their pastors to think; they want them to be familiar with the trend of present-day thought.

While we approve this advice, and believe it true, as a rule, that local churches expect their ministers to think for themselves and to keep in touch with the thought of the times, yet, as a matter of fact, we know that there are a number of our younger ministers who are seriously raising the question whether there is any room for them in the work of the ministry among the Disciples of Christ. They are young men who, for the most part, have given themselves the best educational equipment they can afford, and whose view of the world and of human life may be described as modern rather than ancient and venerable. The young men whom we have in mind hold unequivocally to the great fundamentals of Christian faith, including the divinity and Lordship of Jesus as the only Savior of men, and the inspiration and authority of the Holy Scriptures as the supreme guide in all matters of religious faith and duty. And yet, as we have said, their view of the world is that which the modern, educated mind ordinarily takes, which is different from the old view of things which prevailed before the birth of modern science. Does this fact debar them from usefulness in the ministry among the Disciples of Christ?

In the above statement, we believe we have raised one of the most important and vital questions which confront the Disciples of Christ to-day. The question is not whether young men who have lost their faith in Christ and in the Scriptures, and have no well-grounded religious convictions, ought to remain in our ministry, for on that question there is, so far as we know, absolute unanimity. Any preacher, to be useful among us, must have a positive message for the people of to-day, springing out of a personal faith in God as revealed in Christ, which he is willing to declare without hesitation or compromise. But if their view of the Bible and of much of the older theology has become such as modern scholarship and research necessitate in most minds, can they still have religious standing and hearing among us while they declare the positive message which they feel they can and ought to deliver? That is the question. On the answer which we give to it in our practical church life and administration of religious affairs, our future very largely depends. That an increasing number of our young men are to avail themselves of university training in the future is inevitable. That the result of this higher education will be to give them a different point of view from which to look at the world, at the Bible, and at our theological problems, is also quite certain. In some cases this education may result disastrously in making shipwreck of faith, but such cases, we believe, will be rare, and concerning them we are not writing. We are concerned about the future of our young men who, by accepting the assured results of modern scholarship, both in science and religion, hold steadfastly to the great facts and truths of revelation, and believe in the spiritual interpretation of the universe and in the supreme value of religion; who find in Christ a divine Savior who is able to meet the deepest and most enduring needs of the human soul. What about these?

Need we do more than to raise this question? Is it really needful for us to remind ourselves that nothing would be more contrary to the very spirit and object of our religious movement than to deny place and room among us for such men as we have described? While this is so manifestly true, there is no denying the fact that there appears to be a preconcerted movement to put under religious ban a number of our young ministers, against whose Christian faith and character nothing can be said, but some of whose views on current theological problems, right or wrong, differ from the older and more conservative view of things. The success of any such program as this would mean, inevitably, a division in our ranks and the retarding for many years, if not the defeat, of our mission. But it will not succeed. It is contrary to the nature of our plea. It is contrary to the spirit of our time. It is contrary to the law of religious development. It is contrary to Christ's spirit and practice. We shall hold on to faith in, and loyalty to Christ, nor will we surrender the liberty which we have in him; and in the union of these two principles—loyalty to Christ and liberty in Christ—we shall realize the fulfillment of our aim and purpose—the unity of all of Christ's followers.

Editor's Easy Chair.

It will be remembered that the Pentwater Musings closed in the teeth of an autumn gale which made it easy to think of changing our residence from lakeside to city. But these Musings were written about thirty-six hours before the time of our leaving. The last day at Pentwater could not have been a more perfect day for breaking down one's resolution to depart, if the weather bureau had conspired to make it such. The heavens smiled, the lake laughed under the gentle southwest breeze, the trees shook their green robes as if in holiday attire, and the hilltops beckoned us to a last look at their charming views, on the day of our departure. Under these circumstances, it went a little hard to lift the faithful rowboat out of the water, put away the oars and sails, throw away some cans of crabs left over from the last fishing expedition, lock the boathouse, and thus close up a chapter of happy and healthful experiences which, under existing circumstances, it seemed so desirable to continue. This lightning change of the weather program made it not only the more difficult to leave, but made the journey homeward more uncomfortable. However, as we left there a little before 2 o'clock p. m. and breakfasted in St. Louis the next morning, about half the time being spent in sleep, it was not a long and tedious journey. On arriving in St. Louis we found that the beautiful, cool, autumn weather to which we had been invited to return, had vanished, its place having been usurped by the regular type of St. Louis summer weather! But, in spite of that fact, it seems good to be here, to look at the bright September stars through the branches of the old familiar trees at Rose Hill, and to sit at the old familiar desk at the office, feeling the pulsations once more of the great beating heart of the brotherhood, and the throbbing life of the great city.

The remark about feeling the pulse of the brotherhood recalls the figure of speech used by Paul, in which the church was conceived as an organism—the body of Christ—all of whose members are to cooperate, sympathetically and helpfully, in promoting the welfare of the body. Unhappily, the church as a whole is not sufficiently united to make Paul's figure very applicable to it. It will not be straining the figure too much to think of our own religious movement as an organism, at least not so far as its members are working together to accomplish the ends for which we exist. Looking at it in that light, and speaking of it under that figure, there is a very real sense in which we can feel its pulse and diagnose its condition. As we feel the pulse of this movement, it is beating strong and healthful, indicating a high degree of spiritual vitality. But just as the human body, as a whole, may be very sound, organically, while certain members may be more or less out of normal condition, so a religious body as a whole may be in a healthful condition while some of its members are sick or in feeble health spiritually. There are not wanting symptoms among us of certain diseased and inflamed members which may and do affect, sympathetically, to a certain extent, the whole body. But let no one suppose for a moment that the whole movement is in the throes of dissolution because of the groans of certain members that may be in an abnormal condition. These acute symptoms, though painful for a time, will ultimately subside if there is a good constitution and general soundness of body.

It is a good thing, when the tempers of the brethren get ruffled up by some newspaper controversy—by the way, did we ever have any trouble among us, on any question, that wasn't worked up by our newspapers?—to get together, face to face, in some great convention where we can sing and pray away all our bad feelings and acerbities of temper and speech. There is nothing like getting on a mountain-top when you wish to see how little are the objects down in the valley. When we climb to the summit of religious enthusiasm and spiritual vision in one of our great missionary conventions, and stand face to face with the great problem of the world's evangelization, and hear the Master's voice again ringing down across the centuries from yonder mountain-top in Palestine, bidding us disciple all the nations, and pledging his presence with us all the way, how insignificant appear the little squabbles in which we have been indulging, and how unworthy of us and of our high calling seem those bitter personalities and animosities which have marred the beauty and success of our work. If any of us have been too much engaged in getting the motes out of our brother's eyes, if we have allowed unworthy motives to enter into our actions and utterances, if we have permitted ourselves to believe that nearly every one except ourselves has bowed the knee to Baal, while we alone and those who agree with us remain true and faithful to the plea, let us forsake our juniper tree, get out of the poisonous atmosphere we have been breathing, and go up to our great annual feast at Norfolk and take a fresh look into the Master's face, and then into the faces of our brethren and sisters, and mark how many there be that give evidence of having been with Jesus. Our eyes will then be opened to see God's chariots and horses filling all the mountains round about.

A trip to Norfolk will have another good effect. If the cause has not been getting on in your church, or neighborhood, or county, as well as you would like, and if you have begun to wonder whether or not Christianity is succeeding or failing, go up to our Jerusalem and hear the annual reports of all that has been accomplished during the past year, and all that God has wrought through us for the advancement of his kingdom, and you will come home with a song of triumph in your heart, and running over with optimism. And if you have allowed yourself to doubt whether the men marching in the lead of our missionary movement are the proper men for such places of responsibility, go to Norfolk and meet them face to face, and hear them as they portray to us the needs and mighty possibilities of the mission fields. Note the marks of hard and faithful service for the Master which they bear on their faces, and you will come back home thanking God for such able and consecrated leaders who are literally pouring out their lives as a rich libation on the altar of God's service. And, finally, if you want a real foretaste of the fellowship of the redeemed in heaven, go to the national convention and catch its spirit, join in its songs and prayers, and you will feel that heaven has its beginning here on earth and you will attach a new meaning to Paul's statement about "sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

Apropos to the word "optimism," in the foregoing, a letter just received from one of our evangelists holding a meeting in the South, relates the following story: An old colored man was asked if he were an optimist. His reply was, "No, sah!" "Then are you a pessimist?" was asked. "No, sah!" was the equally emphatic reply. "Then what are you, if you are neither an optimist nor a pessimist?" "Well, boss," said the venerable brother in black, "I specs I am a possumist!" The evangelist sending us the story makes no application of it, but we are wondering whether this new classification doesn't fit a good many people, after all, among the whites as well as among the blacks. The best known characteristic of the 'possum is its habit of dissembling. It feigns death to avoid being killed. By some sort of blind instinct it seems to understand that no one, not even a dog, would harm a dead 'possum; hence it "plays" being dead, when set upon by its human or canine foes. Are there not many professed Christians that are neither optimists nor pessimists, but just "possumists," and, therefore, too indifferent to be classified under either of the first two classes? We wouldn't wonder that some of these would "let on" like they are too sick, or too busy, or too tired, or too poor, to go to the Norfolk convention when, in reality, they do not care enough about going to make the necessary sacrifice. Let us have no 'possuming, please, in the presence of the great problems and tasks which confront us.

The Pioneers of Our Work in Virginia

By F. D. Power

In considering the pioneers among the Disciples of Christ in Virginia we must remember that it was in Virginia that Alexander Campbell and his father, Thomas Campbell, did their work. While the "Christian Association of Washington" was formed August 7, 1809, in Western Pennsylvania, and the first church, Brush Run, was organized in the Keystone state, Bethany, Va., became the center of the new movement. Many, too, of the conspicuous leaders were natives of the Old Dominion. Samuel Rogers, that faithful servant of the primitive gospel, was born in Charlotte county, Va., his father having served in the Revolution and having been present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. Jacob Creath was ordained to the ministry of the Baptist church in Louisa county, Va., and his nephew, Jacob Creath, jr., was born in that state, one of sixteen children, five of whom became preachers. He was educated in Washington City and began his ministry in Virginia, where he became a Disciple under the teaching of James Shelburne, father of Virginia's famous pioneer, Silas Shelburne. Aylette Raines was from Fredericksburg, Va. John O'Kane came from Culpepper, Va., was born there in 1802, and did not remove to Indiana until thirty years later. T. M. Allen, the great Missouri pioneer, was a Virginian, born there October 21, 1797, and W. H. Hopson was born of Virginia parents. Robert Richardson, while a native of Pittsburg, began his labors in

T. M. Allen.

Wellsburg, Va., and was one of the great Bethany circle. W. K. Pendleton was a son of the Old Dominion. Dr. J. T. Barclay and Henry T. Anderson were also among the fathers of the cause in Virginia. It will be seen that Virginia had a large place in the new declaration of independence in religion, as she had in the old, which claimed liberty for the nation. Certain ones, however, were peculiarly pioneers in our work in that state. The Dover decrees cut off from the Baptists a number of strong men who had taken sides with the Campbells. Peter Ainslie, John Duval, T. M. Henley, Dudley Atkinson and others, among them my grandfather, Dr. Frederick Bryan Power of Yorktown, went with the new restoration movement. Francis W. Emmons, of Vermont, a strong man, visiting Virginia about this time, accepted Mr. Campbell's position. James Bagby, James Henshall, John W. Goss, Jacob Creath.

A. B. Walthall, G. W. Abell, are among the names that suggest themselves.

Conspicuous among those who blazed the way in the Old Dominion were some who had never heard of Mr. Campbell and began their work independently. Dr. Chester Bullard, for example, in Southwest Virginia, without knowledge of the work in the "Panhandle," began to plead for the same great principles. His parents were Baptists, and his mother a very pious woman. At seventeen he professed conversion at a Methodist meeting, but unable to subscribe to their teaching, he remained disconnected from any party. Deeply anxious, however, on the subject of religion, devoted to the Bible, and possessed of an independent mind, he learned that true religion consisted in the knowledge and love of God and that after faith and repentance, baptism was required. His eldest brother, at this time traveling in Pennsylvania, picked up by accident at a hotel a copy of "The Christian Baptist." This he read before going to rest, and was so impressed he advised Chester to subscribe for it, saying the editor was half a century ahead of the age. It was done. During the same year, 1831, Dr. Bullard completed a medical course and began the practice of medicine in Giles county. Earnestly desiring baptism, he was unable to obtain it at the hands of the Baptists unless he united with them, which he was not prepared to do. He made known his views to Landon Duncan, a minister of the Christian Connection, who baptized him, and he at once began to preach, delivering his first sermon the same evening.

Dr. Bullard presented a simple gospel, declared salvation to be freely offered to every creature, and showed that faith came by hearing, and he that believed and was baptized should be saved. He organized his first church in 1833. By degrees most of those in connection with Duncan gave in their adhesion, and a number of churches were organized called by the people, "Bullardites." The Doctor used to tell of an old German brother who in public prayer would petition the Lord to open the eyes of the Methodists "dot dey might all come over and jine Bullard!" In 1839 he chanced to read Campbell's "Extra on Remission" at the house of his brother-in-law. Up to this time he held strongest prejudices against Campbell. Surprised and delighted with the new views of the gospel he immediately embraced and began to circulate these writings and preaching the same reformatory principles. Dr. Bullard traveled all over Virginia preaching, baptizing and organizing churches; a man of great force, and earnestness, and endurance, powerful in exhortation, honored by all men, and dying at a ripe old age. He taught me my first public prayer.

Reuben Lindsay Coleman is most frequently mentioned by Mr. Campbell among these Virginia pioneers. He was born of Baptist parents, May 13, 1807, near Scottsville on the James. He was always a man of serious religious reflection and of great prayerfulness. He sought peace at the mourners' bench when a youth, but failed. He gave himself to prayer and Bible study until his health gave way. He asked: "Why am I not saved? Christ needs not to be made willing by the intercession of preachers, for 'He that is willing to come unto me I will in no wise cast out.' I love God and the people of God. I pray to God and desire to serve him, yet have no assurance that my sins are forgiven." He determined to offer himself for baptism, and arose from the burial of obedience with new views and feelings. His faith, perfected in obedience, had become effective, the darkness of his mind passed from him, he realized that his sins had been washed away by the blood of the cross and that of this he had received in baptism the assurance he had so long sought in vain. Mr. Coleman at this time knew nothing of Campbell, and regarded him as a semi-infidel. He began preaching and organized a church in Charlottesville of which he became pastor, and was very popular and successful.

During the Constitutional convention in 1830 he first heard Mr. Campbell in a three-hours' sermon on the covenants. Embracing these views he became at once one of the most zealous of Campbell's co-workers, accompanied him on his tours, and labored with great success. Mr. Campbell said:

"His eloquence is truly evangelical. It is the eloquence of good sense, refined sentiment, deep feeling and impassioned earnestness. He has been so much in communion with apostles and prophets, so long and so intimately conversant with their writings, as to have caught their spirit and acquired their solemn and impressive manner of presenting the will of God and its sovereign claims upon the affections and the acquiescence of his hearers."

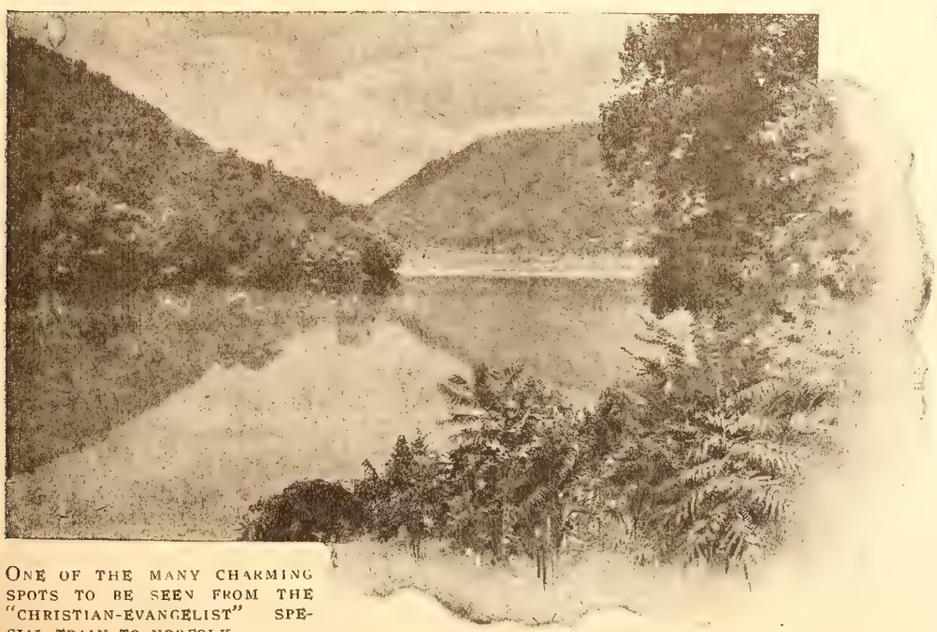
No better description of Mr. Coleman could be written. I knew him well. He reminded his hearers of Amos or Isaiah. An ungodly man said he would go farther to hear Lindsay Coleman say "O Lord!" than to listen to any other preacher that ever lived. On one of Mr. Campbell's visits to Philadelphia he announced that Mr. Coleman had arrived and would speak alternately with him during the evenings of the week. He spoke accordingly the next evening, but having a very modest estimate of himself, and feeling that the people would desire to hear Mr. Campbell, he took the train for home and left Mr. Campbell, as he said, "to alternate with himself." He edited, with J. W. Goss, the "Christian Publisher," at Charlottesville, and died in Florida April 21, 1880.

Silas Shelburne was the Raccoon John Smith of Virginia. A whole volume would not do justice to this incomparable man. Born June 4, 1790, the son of James Shelburne, a Baptist preacher, he was baptized June, 1816, and entered the ministry. Aiding his father in a protracted meeting, several persons professing conversion presented themselves for membership. "Let them be examined to see whether they can give a satisfactory Christian experience or not," said the elder. "Father," said Silas, "that is not in accord with the teaching of the apostles. How can these men, who have been sinners all their lives, and have never lived a Christian life, give a Christian experience? You might as well ask every young couple that comes to you to be married to give a married experience before you perform the ceremony." "Go on, Silas, and do right," said the father. They were received on simple confession of faith.



Reading the "Christian Baptist," he was impressed with its plea for "the ancient order of things" and became one of its foremost advocates. He was a member of the historic conference in Richmond to consider the matter of union between the Baptists and Disciples. Sixteen representatives from each body were gathered, Jeter Poindexter, Burrows and Broaddus among the Baptists and Pendleton, Goss, Henley, Ainslie, Walthall, Duval and Hopson among the Disciples. It was at this meeting Father Shelburne said to Jeter, when he wished to hear the Baptist articles read: "Trot out your calf, Jeremiah. When I goes to buy a calf I always wants to see him before I buys him. Trot him out." Numerous anecdotes of this character are told all over Virginia of this quaint, guileless, yet powerful and fearless preacher of the heroic age. At a preachers' meeting, where the brethren were under criticism, one gently suggested Brother Shelburne might be more useful as a preacher if he would avoid certain peculiarities of speech, as "agin" for against, and "gwine" for going, etc. The old man arose and said: "Brethren, if that is all you got agin me I'm gwine 'long."

A preacher noted for indefiniteness in his sermons preached before him on one occasion, and asked his opinion of his discourse. "Wall, brother," said the old man, "thar's a p'int down here on the bay they call 'P'int no P'int.' You war as near thar to-day as you'll ever be." Some one asked him at a meeting where he preached in the presence of Mr. Campbell if he were not afraid to preach before Alexander Campbell. "No," he replied, "I have preached before Almighty God many a time, and why should I fear to preach before Alexander Campbell?" One evening at Old Sycamore Church, Richmond, as the pastor, W. G. Pettigrew, withdrew to a dressing room, and a dead silence prevailed, he arose from a front seat where he had stretched himself, and turning his beaming face on the congregation, said: "Brethren, sing a song while Brother Pettigrew has gone to change his breeches." There was a sensation as they raised the hymn, "How happy are they who their Savior obey." He died September 7, 1871. Three of his children and three grandchildren have been preachers of the gospel.

Significance of the Jamestown Exposition.

It has been pointed out that the older nations have lost trace of their origin in a maze of antiquity. America points to a definite spot and date as the beginning of her existence, and if she is not a racial nation, she is one "in all that makes for close political connection, deep patriotism and intense pride of fatherland."

Before another English colony found a home in the western hemisphere, the Jamestown settlers had established many villages, with churches and schools, and courts in which the accused was tried by jury, and had convened a legislative assembly elected by a popular vote.

"Here," in the memorable words of Governor Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, "the old world first met the new. Here the white met the red for settlement and civilization. Here the white man wielded the axe to cut the tree for the first log cabin. Here the first log cabin was built for the first village. Here the first village rose to the first state capital. Here was the first capital of our empire of states. Here was the very foundation of freemen, which has stretched its millions and its dominions across the continent to the shores of another ocean. Go to the Pacific now to measure the progression and power of a great people."

With the scroll of three hundred years unrolled a record is shown of human progress for which the ages have no parallel. The Jamestown Exposition endeavors to illustrate the evolution that has marked that period in all phases of human endeavor. Just how great that evolution has been is more readily comprehended when it is remembered that in the days the colonists left England, mechanical invention was in embryo, physical science was in its infancy, English literature had but begun, and government was the exercise of force, often tyrannical.

No country in the world is so replete as America, and no part of America so much as this Tidewater Virginia, with associations and historic landmarks of human effort to emancipate itself from political thraldom and to know the blessings of individual liberty. To these shrines of patriotism and human freedom it required no Exposition to draw the pilgrim, but the Exposition in fulfillment of its purpose will bring to the font of wisdom under beneficent compulsion the throngs, who do not see the lesson, and so teach that he who runs may read.

The close relation between human institutions and human material achievement will be so instilled that none may escape the virtue of an Exposition that is preeminently educational.

And so the visitor is impressed from the start. His first lesson is in art and his sense of beauty and taste and proportion is appealed to, for here nature has tempered art, and art has drunk long and deep of nature.

The colonial architecture adapted in these great buildings lends itself admirably to the purpose and harmonizes well with the park effects and bits of wilderness cleverly preserved in the design of the landscape artist.

The simple dignity of the style and the use of brick as in the old Virginia mansions is a pleasant contrast to the effect of buildings veneered with staff, as at some of the other Expositions. The scheme has not only esthetic sanction, but is peculiarly appropriate historically, and indeed comports with the permanent character of many of the buildings, for here after the Exposition, Norfolk expects to boast one of its most beautiful suburbs.

The Education of the Children of Missionaries

I have noticed recently in one of our papers the following statement:

"The children of our missionaries must be educated in America."

I do not propose to in any way antagonize that most admirable and in every way worthy movement now being made for the establishment at Hiram of a home and school for the children of missionaries. I am very much in favor of it. There is now, and likely always will be, a place and a work for such an institution, no matter how many schools may be established elsewhere. I am only sorry that I am not able myself to do all that is required to put this enterprise on a good foundation. I would gladly do so if I could, and I assure the promoters of the plan that I shall do nothing to hinder it.

But as one of the missionaries I presume I may be allowed to make a few remarks. The great majority of the missionaries would naturally much prefer to keep their children with them on the field until they are prepared for college, if such a thing can be made possible. I have come to America at this time to attempt to secure aid for an enterprise which is proposed by the missionaries of all denominations in China as a solution of this most difficult problem. A place has been found where the children can be cared for just as well as in any other part of the world, so far as health is concerned, and with the proper support other conditions can be supplied. If this can be made a success, what it will mean to the missionary parents and to their children of joy in the home, of satisfaction in the work, and of hope for the future of China can not be overestimated. "There is no experience so terrible as the breaking up of the home just at the time when home life means most to both the parents and the children."

A tentative school has been established at Kuling, in Central China, and is now in its second year, having proved quite satisfactory, as it has demonstrated the demand for and the feasibility of such a school in China. So far it has been supported mostly by the missionaries themselves, but it will be impossible to continue it in this way, as the missionaries are not financially able to indefinitely render this support. They have believed all the time that their constituencies at home would be willing to share the burden if the matter could be properly presented to them. They want money for buildings, and a sufficient amount in endowment to secure an income of three or four thousand dollars per annum. I do not appeal to churches nor to any one who would reduce his contribution to regular mission work in other channels in order to contribute to this. We know there are brethren and sisters who can help us in this most important enterprise and then give as much more than ever to other mission work. If I could only make the brethren and sisters feel just what is coming to myself and my good wife in China just now, as we leave our precious little girl in this country and turn away again across the ocean, I know there would be no delay in getting the support needed for such a school in China as is proposed. I am prepared to give any information that any of the brethren require. This is to be an interdenominational institution. If I can secure $10,000 from my own brethren, I feel sure that the remainder will come from other sources; but it would be a source of the greatest satisfaction to us if the amount necessary for buildings should come from the same source. We need $30,000 for land and buildings.

All who have friends resident in Asia, whether in missionary work or in government or commercial service, know how real and painful at times is the problem of the education of their children. In India schools for the purpose have long been in existence, but in China, apart from the institution of the China Inland Mission in Chefoo, there has been practically no provision. The plan proposed by the missionaries, and represented by Mr. Meigs, appears to me to be admirable, and I think

PUTS THE "GINGER" IN
The Kind of Food Used by Athletes.

A former college athlete, one of the long distance runners, began to lose his power of endurance. His experience with a change in food is interesting.

"While I was in training on the track athletic team, my daily 'jogs' became a task, until after I was put on Grape-Nuts food for two meals a day. After using the Food for two weeks I felt like a new man. My digestion was perfect, nerves steady and I was full of energy.

"I trained for the mile and the half mile runs (those events which require so much endurance) and then the long daily 'jogs,' which before had been such a task, were clipped off with ease. I won both events.

"The Grape-Nuts food put me in perfect condition and gave me my 'ginger.' Not only was my physical condition made perfect, and my weight increased, but my mind was made clear and vigorous so that I could get out my studies in about half the time formerly required. Now most all of the University men use Grape-Nuts for they have learned its value, but I think my testimony will not be amiss and may perhaps help some one to learn how the best results can be obtained."

There's a reason for the effect of Grape Nuts food on the human body and brain The certain elements in wheat and barley are selected with special reference to their power for rebuilding the brain and nerve centres. The product is then carefully and scientifically prepared so as to make it easy of digestion. The physical and mental results are so apparent after two or three week's use as to produce a profound impression. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

that every friend of missions and of all American families in China must sympathize with it and wish it success.

Office of the President,
Baltimore, August 26, 1907.

My Dear President Meigs.—I desire to congratulate you and your friends upon your organized efforts to establish a well-equipped and moderately endowed school for the children of missionaries and other foreigners residing in China. Such an institution, located at Kuling, as you propose, with its salubrious climate and so easily accessible to the entire Yangtse Valley, would go far toward solving the most insistent and embarrassing problem which confronts the foreign missionaries in that empire, namely, their responsibility for raising and educating their children. Such a school would make possible the continuance of the missionaries' family relations and influence upon the field until their children are ready to enter college, and thus relieve the severe strain upon their parental affection, be a great blessing to the children, and largely augment the efficiency of the missionary work.

Hoping for this far-reaching, constructive and great Christian enterprise the success which it so richly deserves, I am, cordially yours, John F. Goucher.

Virginia as a Mission Field

By H. C. Combs

State Secretary.

Population (1900), 1,854,184. No doubt we now have 2,000,000 people. Virginia has been called conservative, but our people have successful meetings in all sections. These are days of development in the Old Dominion. We should take advantage of every opening. New towns are springing up in the western section of the state, while in the east the old towns are growing. But we have failed to enter because of a lack of funds.

Unoccupied Fields.—Alexandria, 20,000 population; Winchester, 8,000 population; Staunton, 7,000 population.

Besides these there are twenty-five towns of 1,000 or more population, forty-two county seats and thirty counties. None of the above have a church or mission of our people. Many know nothing about us. We have a message for them. How are we going to reach them?

CITIES PARTIALLY OCCUPIED.

Norfolk has 125,000 people and one church and one mission of our people. Portsmouth has 25,000 people, and we have only a small mission. Richmond, including Manchester, has 125,000 inhabitants. We have six churches. There is ample room for six others. Petersburg has 20,000 population and one church. Danville has 20,000 population, one church and one mission. Roanoke 20,000 population, one church and one mission. We are a country people in Virginia, but there are vast areas only slightly cultivated by our people and others not at all. In one group are eight counties without a single church.

HISTORICAL.

The Virginia Christian Missionary Society was organized in 1875. In that year $487.26 was secured for Virginia missions, and C. S. Lucas was the evangelist. In nine months, closing July 1, 1907, the total receipts for state missions was $8,741.85. We have no record of additions in 1875, but this year there were 818 added by the Virginia Christian Missionary Society in nine months.

Virginia has furnished the brotherhood with a number of men of national repute, all of whom have worked in Virginia. Among these are W. K. Pendleton, F. D. Power, C. S. Lucas, E. L. Powell, B. A. Abbott, Peter Ainslie and E. B. Bagby. In 1884 there were 12,000 members and 172 churches, with property worth $160,850. Now we have 25,000 members (not counting colored, of whom there are 2,000), and 282 churches, with property worth $415,850. Our membership has doubled in twenty-three years. In 1884 Virginia gave to all missions $3,317. In 1906 $16,785.55, an increase of 500 per cent.

PRESENT CONDITIONS.

We have 282 churches, or one to each 6,800 population. We have about 25,000 members, or one to each 74. The missionary spirit is growing and we are hopeful, but the magnitude of the work before us appalls us. Each church endeavors to hold a protracted meeting each year.

PREACHERS.

We have now fifty churches without preachers. We need trained men for pastors and trained men for evangelistic work. The need is imperative. Last year there were 2,300 additions in the whole state. Could we have had the ministers this number might have been doubled. Virginia is a great field. The East must be occupied. Given the men and the means, the victory is assured.

The Disciples of Christ and the Federation Conference

At a meeting of our late congress in Cincinnati, Ohio, held to consider the communication of the executive committee of the Interchurch Conference asking co-operation in the plan of federation adopted in the New York meeting, and the appointment of delegates to the first meeting of the federal council, a committee of ten brethren was appointed, authorized to call a meeting of our people at the annual convention in Norfolk in October to reply to the communication of the Federation executive committee. The men to whom this duty was assigned were named as follows: F. D. Power, A. B. Philputt, W. T. Moore, W. F. Richardson, J. L. Hill, I. J. Spencer, Clinton Lockhart, S. H. Bartlett, Hill M. Bell and J. G. Slayter.

After consultation, the committee have decided to ask such a meeting of all brethren in attendance upon our general convention on the afternoon of Tuesday, October 15, immediately following the afternoon session of the A. C. M. S., and at the same place, to consider and act upon the communication which we have received from the committee representing 18,000,000 of Protestant Christians in America. We trust such a reply may be decided upon at this meeting as shall be entirely satisfactory to our own brotherhood and to the brethren of the conference, and as shall best promote the great cause of Christian unity, to which we are pledged.

F. D. Power, for the Committee.

KNOWS HOW

Doctor Had Been Over the Road.

When a doctor, who had been the victim of the coffee habit, cures himself by leaving off coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee, he knows something about what he is advising in that line.

A good old doctor in Ohio, who had at one time been the victim of the coffee habit, advised a woman to leave off coffee and take on Postum.

She suffered from indigestion and a weak and irregular heart and general nervous condition. She thought that it would be difficult to stop coffee abruptly. She says: "I had considerable hesitancy about making the change, one reason being that a friend of mine tried Postum and did not like it. The doctor, however, gave explicit directions that Postum must be boiled long enough to bring out the flavour and food value.

"His suggestions were carried out and the delicious beverage fascinated me, so that I hastened to inform my friend who had rejected Postum. She is now using it regularly, after she found that it could be made to taste good.

"I observed, a short time after starting Postum, a decided change in my nervous system. I could sleep soundly, and my brain was more active. My complexion became clear and rosy, whereas, it had been muddy and spotted before; in fact, all of the abnormal symptoms disappeared and I am now feeling perfectly well.

"Another friend was troubled in much the same manner as I, and she has recovered from her heart and stomach trouble by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

"I know of several others who had had much the same experience. It is only necessary that Postum be well boiled and it wins its own way." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Historic Features of Norfolk and Vicinity

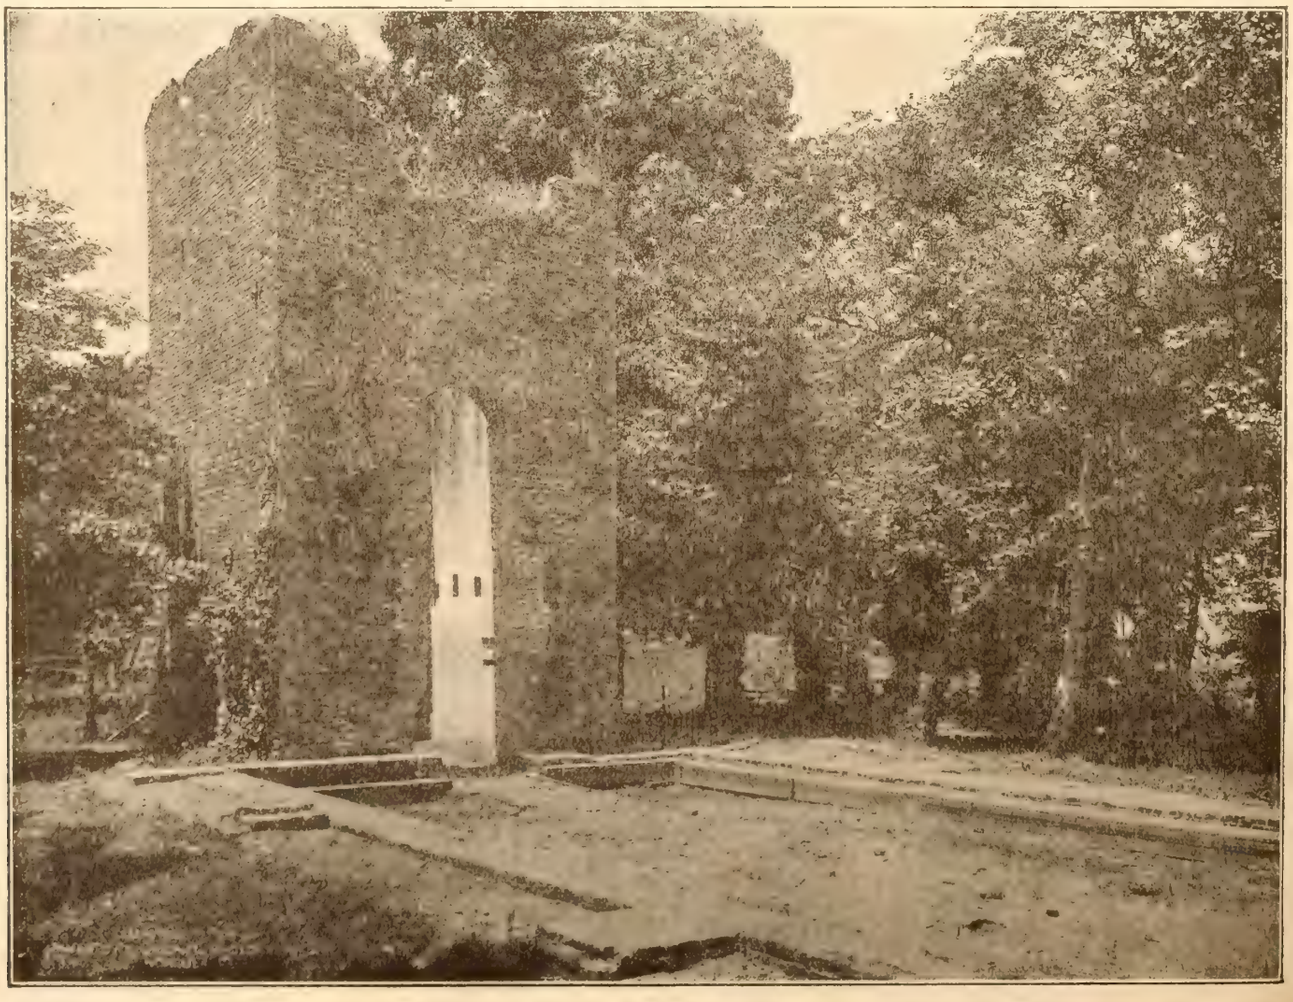
Some time between 1630 and 1649, upon the banks of the Elizabeth River and its branches, all being arms of the Chesapeake Bay, in the extreme southeastern part of the state, the earliest settlers of Tidewater Virginia made their homes. From these early settlements there came into being little towns, which have grown since that period into connected settlements, still bearing different names, but practically united by one community of interests.

The oldest charter granted was to Norfolk Borough, issued in 1736, and superseded by the city charter in 1845.

In 1752 Portsmouth was incorporated as a city, and in 1890 Berkley obtained its charter as a town, continuing as such until December, 1905, when it became a part of the city of Norfolk, known as the Eighth or Berkley Ward.

While these were the principal cities, others have grown up, such as West Norfolk, South Norfolk, Port Norfolk, Lamberts Point, Pinners Point, Sewells Point, Huntersville, Barboursville, Edgewater, Riverview, Tanners Creek and others, all component parts of one residential and business community. As we now hear of the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, of Brooklyn, Queens and Richmond as integral parts of "Greater New York," so in the near future we shall hear of the Boroughs of Norfolk and of Portsmouth, and have already Berkley as a component part of what we may for convenience call "Greater Norfolk."

Among the many attractions in Norfolk and the adjoining country, there are none which appeal to the visitor and tourist in a larger degree than historical points of interest.



Old "Norfolk Towne" was located in the very currents of colonial, revolutionary and secessional activity. Members of the expedition dispatched to America by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1585 visited the city. Historic and reminiscent features abound in the Norfolk of to-day; among them are the Norfolk Academy, one hundred years old, the finest specimen of Doric architecture now extant; old St. Paul's Church, 168 years old, twice fired on by the British, containing in its walls a shell fired by Lord Dunmore's fleet, January 1, 1776. Just across the Elizabeth River is the city of Portsmouth, founded in 1753, in which are to be found the Norfolk navy yard, burned and blown up by the Federals in 1862 and rebuilt by the Confederates, and Old Trinity Church, used as a hospital in the Civil war.

Beautiful Hampton Roads, the most magnificent roadstead now extant, presenting at all times to the spectator a kaleidoscopic view that stimulates patriotism and excites one round of interest and pleasure, washes the shores of Norfolk. It was on the waters that our sailors met the British in the Revolutionary and 1812 wars, and the Monitor and Merrimac had their great battles for supremacy, marking the epoch from which dates the revolution of the fighting ships of the nations of the world. Just across from Norfolk, where the James River empties into Hampton Roads, is Newport News, a city whose patriotic value can not be expressed in figures of material worth. It was here that the men from Jamestown sighted Lord Delaware's ships when he came to Virginia in 1610 and saved the colony. Just a little farther down the Roads is Hampton, originally the Indian village Keeoughtan, the oldest continuous English settlement in the New World, and the repository of many historic treasures. Among the many is St. John's church, the oldest public building in the city and the third oldest church in the state. At Old Point Comfort, the "Poynt Comfort" of John Smith's time, is Fortress Monroe, originally a palisaded fort of the first settlers, planned in 1614 and fortified a few years later. This is the largest and best-equipped fortress in America, and, with the exception of Gibraltar, is perhaps the greatest fortress in the world.

This fort is separated from Norfolk by twelve miles of water. Cape Henry, where Captain Newport's flotilla of three ships first anchored in America, and made their first landing April 26, 1607, is easily reached by trolley or rail. A stone tablet, supplanting the old wooden cross marking the spot where the adventurers landed, is here.

The old Cape Henry lighthouse, erected in 1691, still stands. Jamestown Island, nearly in the James River, is the geographical birthplace of the United States. Here can be seen the ruined tower, the old graveyard, with its historic tombs and inscriptions, the foundation of the governor's mansion and the House of Burgesses, the old powder magazine and the ruins of the old Ambler mansion.

Along this river are the finest examples of colonial architecture in America.

Arrangements for the Convention—Information for Visitors

The Entertainment Committee for the Norfolk Convention has spared no effort to secure for the delegates every comfort and convenience.

When the Exposition closes, this city will have entertained over one hundred conventions. There being so many, the hotels have had such a patronage that it is difficult to secure from them a reduction of their rates for our Convention.

Armory Building, where all the regular sessions of the International Convention will be held.

Nevertheless there have been reductions made for our delegates, and reservations are being made daily for those who desire to secure them in advance.

No delegates will be assigned to any hotel or residence which is not considered first class by the committee which has taken the pains to examine and list homes and hotels only in the best sections of our city. In this connection I may say that on account of an idea prevailing before the opening of the Exposition, that Norfolk could not entertain the crowds coming, hundreds of residences in all parts of the city were opened to the public and have their solicitors numbering over seven hundred. These solicitors are allowed on trains and steamers and on the streets of the city. They are very persistent. Some of their places are reliable and some very undesirable, and hence we urge all delegates to secure their accommodations in advance, or failing to make reservations in advance to look and listen for the members of the Reception Committee which will be at all stations and boat landings, wearing white caps and badges on which will be inscribed "Reception Committee of Disciples of Christ." They will save you from the embarrassment sometimes incident to a surrender to a solicitor, by guiding you to the registration rooms where you will register and be assigned to reliable homes in residences and hotels.

Convention Hall, where the sessions of the F. C. M. S., A. C. M. S. and affiliated interests are to be held, is in the business section of the city and therefore close to the best restaurants and hotels. It is just across the street from the Monticello Hotel—headquarters for national secretaries—and just opposite the Arcade, in which will be found the registration and baggage rooms.

It is one block from the city postoffice. Convention Hall, the Arcade (registration and baggage rooms) and Monticello Hotel are all right together on City Hall avenue, near Granby street.

Every car in the city passes City Hall avenue and therefore in front of Convention Hall, so that delegates can take any car in the city, going in the direction of City Hall avenue and get off on City Hall avenue, in immediate view of the Arcade, Convention Hall and Monticello Hotel.

Delegates coming by C. & O. R. R., N. Y. P. & N. R. R., M. D. V. R. R., Southern R. R., A. C. L. R. R. and Baltimore and Washington steamers will walk only three to four short blocks to Convention Hall and registration rooms. Delegates coming by S. A. L. will land in Portsmouth within a block of ferry which, for 3 cents, will land them on the Norfolk side within three blocks of Convention Hall. Delegates coming by Old Dominion steamers and N. & W. R. R. can get cars within a block of their stations and go direct to City Hall avenue, where they will find the three buildings referred to above.

The Epworth M. E. Church, where the sessions of the C. W. B. M. will be held, is on the corner of Boush and Freemason streets, and within a block of car lines and four short blocks from Convention Hall on City Hall avenue. First Church of the Disciples of Christ, where the conference of the A. C. M. S. and F. C. M. S. will be held on Friday and Saturday and where the C. W. B. M. reception will be held on Saturday at 5 p. m.-6 p. m., and where the conferences of the C. W. B. M. will be held on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, is on Freemason and Brewer streets, two blocks north of the Convention Hall and three blocks east from the Epworth M. E. Church.

Our arrangements are such, that were twenty thousand delegates to attend, we could locate them all within a mile radius of the Convention Hall, and those at the greatest distances from the hall would be in every case in easy access to cars.

We prefer delegates going to hotels and large boarding houses when they will. Rates at hotels are from 75 cents to $1.50, European plan.

Rates at homes from 50 cents to $1.00, European plan. Breakfasts can be secured in residences, restaurants and hotel cafes from 25 cents up.

Norfolk City with its surrounding vicinity is an ideal climate at almost any season, as is attested by the fact that her resorts are open summer and winter, tourists coming at almost any season. The month of October, however, is unsurpassed in its enjoyable climatic conditions and the peculiar fascination which fastens upon a visitor to this beautiful section of almost matchless water scenery.

The harbor here has always been beautiful, but its attractions are enhanced now by the additional scenes of wondrous beauty displayed in gorgeous illuminations which nightly spread their glory over Hampton Roads, and in the stately colonial buildings of the grounds, which make a most beautiful setting in that matchless blue of an October sky above them and that of the Hampton Roads at their feet.

The nights here are cool and refreshing.

The side trips to Yorktown, Williamsburg, Jamestown, Old Point Comfort, navy yard, Hampton Roads, Newport News, Cape Henry, Virginia Beach and the exposition grounds are all enjoyable and inexpensive. Large tourists' automobiles stand in front of Monticello Hotel, and for 50 cents will give a ten-mile tour of the city.

Virginia Building, Jamestown Exposition.

A card of information will be handed each delegate. On it will be every item of information desired at such a time.

As a final word, let me say all that can be done in advance to make the stay of the delegates pleasant and profitable will be done, and we, therefore, request that everyone who can possibly come, will arrange to be present and enjoy the good things that are in store for them.

Come, brethren! Come and see this

Our Budget

—"On to Norfolk" is the slogan.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special starts Tuesday afternoon, October 8.

—The date is October 11-18, and the route is that of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special.

—A hundred delegates entitle us to a special train. Send in your names and make your reservations of sleeping berths at once.

—No more historic ground can be found in all our wide national domain than in the places around and about Norfolk, in the Old Dominion. But let us make Armory Hall, in which our convention is to meet, a historic spot because of the spirit and achievements of the great convention of 1907.

—We stop the press to insert this statement of fact which Brother McLean wishes the brotherhood to know, viz.: that he has been shut out of the "Christian Standard," and is not permitted to make corrections of what he believes to be gross misrepresentations. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST regrets beyond measure the necessity for any such discussion, and believes these brethren should submit their case now to the brotherhood and let the controversy end.

—Saturday, September 29, is to be a festal day in all our Georgia churches in behalf of the Baldwin Orphanage. The Atlanta "Constitution" is lending itself to make this a success. Whatever is made or given should be sent to W. B. Shaw, 176 Rawson street, Atlanta, Ga.

—We note that Topeka, Kan., is in the field to take the next international convention west. No doubt Topeka has a claim, but we believe the understanding of the brotherhood is that next year, unless something unforeseen intervenes, the convention shall go to New Orleans.

—T. A. Abbott reports the little church at Lock Springs, Mo., progressing in a wonderful manner under C. W. Worden. The organization was affected only about a year ago. A house was purchased and all indebtedness has now been wiped out. The brethren are now preparing for a meeting.

—We have received cards announcing the marriage of Miss Mary Whitehead Pendleton, daughter of Bro. and Sister H. King Pendleton, of Atlanta, Ga., to Mr. Jasper Newton Bell, in the First Christian Church of that city on October 9. Our congratulations are hereby extended to the happy couple.

—The Vine Street Christian Church held home-coming services on Lord's day, September 8, which was also a formal re-opening of the church after the summer season. Bro. R. Lin Cave conducted the communion service, and Pastor W. J. Shelburne preached a strong sermon, with four additions, one by confession.

—Since the Editor will not see this till after we have gone to press, we ask it to be remembered that one of the notable features of the convention will be the "Disciple Day address" by J. H. Garrison, Thursday morning, October 17. Let none plan to leave Norfolk until after the presentation of this speech.

—A new church building at Paulding, O., has just been dedicated by Herbert L. Willett. There were large audiences, and $4,000 in cash and pledges was secured. The building is of brick and stone and cost $16,000. It seats about 700 people, and is a monument to our cause in this city where W. D. Trumbull is our minister.

—James Kerfoot has just been set apart to the ministry by E. E. Cowperthwaite and the officers of our congregation at Wilkesbarre, Pa. He is a native of England, but has taken American citizenship and is a young man of unsullied character. He will take a full Biblical course at the Christian College, Washington, D. C.

—Joseph Todd, of Brentwood, Long Island, N. Y., has just returned from the Pacific Coast, where he went on a search for his father and sister, or their bodies. He was unable to get any trace of them beyond the ill-fated steamer. Brother Todd will, we believe, be through his special university work next June, and some Missouri church should be on the lookout for him.

—We are in receipt of an outline of a sermon preached by J. E. Lynn to the Central Christian Church, Warren, Ohio, after his return from the Rocky Mountains. His subject was "The Glory of God Upon the Mountains," and had we space we would be glad to give to our readers Brother Lynn's thought. The sermon was reported by one of the local papers and sent to us by O. S. Deming.

—We are glad to note from the report by G. L. Bush, of Gainesville, Tex., that R. R. Hamlin is continuing to have great success in his evangelistic work. Associated with E. F. Daugherty, he is now in Texas, but the southern churches do not have so many meetings in the winter, and churches in the middle states wanting a first-class "team," before May, should correspond with Brother Hamlin.

—A yearly meeting of the church at Smithfield, Ohio, was attended by H. G. Connelly, who was pastor of this congregation during his senior year in Bethany College. He is now making larger preparations at Yale College. The present minister, B. R. Johnson, says his message was just what the church needed. We are glad to know that the work is in a fine condition and that the anticipations for the future mean progress.

—The first year's work of Frederick Wyatt for our church at Quanah, Tex., shows a net gain in membership of 25 per cent. During the year there was expended $771, the church edifice was improved, and three good lots on the main street of the city purchased, upon which it is hoped to erect a parsonage. Brother Wyatt will remain with the church, but desires to conduct a few revivals. "I have no terms," he writes. "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."

A Home Comfort.

The merits of Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk (unsweetened) are convenience, economy, purity. Use it in all recipes calling for milk or cream. In this product the natural milk flavor is retained. Suitable for fruits, cereals, tea and coffee.

—At his last service in Colorado Springs, seven new members were given the hand of fellowship by Crayton S. Brooks, making sixty since the Brooks Brothers' revival closed. A check for $100 was enclosed in a handsome engraved pocketbook that was handed to the minister at the farewell reception. His work at Newcastle, Pa., opens up well.

—C. V. Allison reports all departments at Mound City, Mo., out of debt. In spite of the hot weather the Bible school broke its year's record during the last three weeks of August with an average attendance of 160, and it is planning for greater growth. Improvements are now being made upon the building, and it is expected to be re-dedicated on September 22, with a meeting led by S. D. Dutcher, of Omaha.

—At Kinston, North Carolina, J. R. Rountree, of that city, has just been ordained to the ministry by Preston B. Hall, pastor of our church there. Brother Rountree is a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a young man of culture and talent. He is an alumnus of the University of North Carolina and has been in practice as a lawyer, but has more lately been in journalistic work, acting as city editor of the Kinston Free Press.

—The church at Erie, Ill., has been reorganized, and in spite of the fact that its members are paying 50 per cent more salary and, for the first time in their lives, paying it weekly, the entire amount has been provided for and there is money in the treasury. G. W. Morton took up this work in the summer when people are on their vacation. It speaks well for him. The congregations are large and everything points to a successful work.

—The old church house at Sweetwater, Tex., is being torn down, and our brethren are meeting in a tabernacle. Just at present a meeting is being held with the pastor, Percy G. Cross conducting and J. Ross Miller leading the singing. More than $6,000 has been raised for the new building. Brother Cross finds his new charge such a one as gives him great delight. He just been reading some of the new books we have sent him and is delighted with them.

—J. N. Murphy has accepted the work at Belpre, Kan. A lot has been purchased for a new building and work had been begun, but on his arrival he found this had been suspended, partly because of the lack of some one to lead and partly because some of the donors desired to withdraw their pledges because of discouragement. Brother Murphy has undertaken to create a fund to renew the work. The congregation is small, but many of them devoted. He was constrained to close his work at Orange, Texas, some time ago by reason of the illness of his wife, but she is now recovered.

ALL THAT THE FONDEST

Of Fond Mothers Desire for the Alleviation of her Skin-Tortured Baby is to be Found in Warm Baths with Cuticura Soap,

Assisted by Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure. This pure, sweet, and gentle treatment affords instant relief, permits rest and sleep, for mother and child, and points to a speedy cure in the most distressing of torturing and disfiguring humors, eczemas, rashes, itchings, and chafings of infants and children. Cures made in infancy and childhood are in most cases speedy, permanent, and economical. Guaranteed absolutely pure under United States Food and Drugs Act.

—J. E. Denton writes glowingly of Petaluma, Cal., "the chicken center of the world." But it also has climate and factories and opportunities out there. Brother Denton reports the largest Bible school they have ever had, and five recent additions to the church's membership, among them C. E. Daugherty, late pastor at Madison.

—Though there is no regular minister, the congregation at Gilman City, Mo., is doing what i can to build up the work at that place. There is no place to meet and the brethren are, under the leadership of Elder B. W. Hurst, meeting in their homes and pushing the matter as fast as possible towards the erection of a building. Recently there have been four additions—one by confession and baptism, two reclaimed and one by statement.

—Our church at Philipsburg, Pa., is only six months old, but its health is very good. The work goes along admirably under the leadership of D. F. Harris as pastor. There have been 29 additions, 24 of which were confessions. Among the many other financial obligations the little congregation has just responded liberally to the call for church extension. One of the members writes us: "We are reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with much interest."

—S. M. Gillidett, who was proprietor of a hotel at Plains, Kan., is also a preacher of the Christian Church. He reports that the church at Mineola have a good commodious house of worship and a working congregation, with Bible school and Endeavor society. Generally speaking, our churches are few and far between in that part of Kansas. There is not a Christian Church in all of Meade county. Brother Gillidett preaches for two congregations in Clark county.

—The son of James Mailly is, we learn, a fine barytone singer, who has been doing quartet work for the Redpath Bureau. It is his desire to take up evangelistic singing, in which he has had some experience. He is a deeply spiritual young man and a trained worker, having splendid success with young men and boys. We are sure there is a place for such a worker, and any evangelist needing an assistant of this kind might write to Brother Mailly at Greensburg, Ind.

—The brethren at Vallejo, Cal., after many years of struggle have just laid the corner stone of a new church home. Brother Palmer, of Napa, gave the address. Members of other churches took part in the impressive service. The building is to be a two-story one with parlors, Endeavor and class rooms below and auditorium and other features of a modern church home above. The seating accommodation is to be for 300, and the cost will be about $14,000. O. A. Hushaw has been called as minister a second year.

—O. P. Spiegel, of Birmingham, Ala., is to assist John L. Brandt, of the First Church, St. Louis, in a meeting this autumn, following his meeting with Willis S. Myers, in Los Angeles. Brother Spiegel has been doing evangelistic work for some time, but we understand that he is thinking seriously of again locating this winter for what he hopes may be his best work. More than half his life has been spent in important pastorates in Birmingham, Chicago and New Orleans, so that while he stands well as an evangelist, he has also proved himself a successful pastor.

—The improved and enlarged church at Ipava, Ill., where Jesse T. Craig is the pastor, was rededicated on September 9 by Harvey O. Breeden, who dedicated the original building in 1894. The total cost of additions and equipment was $2,100, half of which was subscribed at the beginning of the enterprise; the other half was raised on the day of dedication. The house as improved now has for church purposes additional floor space for the accommodation of 200 persons. The annex, 43x20 feet, has a basement room of the same size, giving that much additional room for the Sunday-school.

—W. Remfry Hunt, our minister for eighteen years in Chu Cheo, Auhivei Province, Central China, is busy in London writing and lecturing on China. Brother Hunt and his wife have both lived many years in London, if they were not born there. They sing in Chinese at meetings, and tell the facts about the work—its struggles, glad surprises and triumphant achievements. We are publishing some letters from Brother Hunt. In association with Prof. Charles T. Paul, it is his intention to do some special work in the preparation of some literature for mission class studies.

—An excellent report is that of the church at Kirksville, Mo., which completed the year's work under D. A. Wickizer, July 1. There was a net gain of 108, there being 86 additions by confession and baptism. The financial report showed $2,414 raised by the church, and the total for this fund $3,226. For missions there was raised $371. The church membership is now about 800 and the average attendance at Bible school 250. We are glad to note that Brother Wickizer takes an interest in the other churches in the county and hopes to make a great change in their membership during the coming year.

—A correspondent requests the Editor of this paper "to lead us in a new study of the Book of Acts." There is room and need for such restudy, by the proper person, not so much from the point of view of church history as of church life and the law of spiritual development. Many of us have yet to see the deep spiritual significance of the book of Acts, and to properly estimate the divine power at work within the Church in its beginning days. Whether we shall be able to lead such a study or not, we suggest that our ministers, especially, make a restudy of the book from the point of view we have suggested.

—J. F. Findley has returned from a very happy vacation. He spent a few days with the brethren of the Ashland Church, Chicago, visited friends in Indianapolis and vicinity, taking in Bethany encampment, where he met L. L. Carpenter, and afterwards visited Brother Welshimer's church at Canton, Ohio. He was on the program for the Colorado assembly, and spent some days at Pine Cliffe. Here he met Dean Haggard "in his shirt sleeves, an old straw hat and overalls, building his house on the high rocks that overlook the valley." He returned to Fort Collins the better prepared to push forward our work in this large and growing field of labor.

—The Southwest Christian Church, of Los Angeles, has been organized, the second church George Ringold has had the pleasure of organizing since he took up city evangelistic work under the Southern California Board, January 1. Budlong Avenue Church was the other one. State Secretary Grant K. Lewis assisted in a special meeting, and a church of 33 members was organized.

Later a Bible school was started on Jefferson street, and Brother Ringold devoted his whole time to the new work, leaving Budlong with a church of 60 members. C. A. Young assisted in a short meeting on Jefferson street, resulting in 12 additions. The Sunday-school numbers now 100 enrolled.

—John A. Stevens will return to the work of the A. C. M. S., and continue as the evangelist of Fred Doeller and family of Columbus, Ind. He will fill present engagements entered into during the lapse between his taking up independent work and his former engagement with Brother Doeller. Brother Stevens will now have no particular state as a field, but after the first of the year will hold meetings for unorganized groups, organize churches, buy lots, etc., as he has done in the past. He has just held a meeting at Sulphur, I. T., where there were a few additions, a church of 40 members organized and plans laid for a building enterprise. His present address is Sulphur Springs, Texas.

—We invite attention to the call of the committee of ten appointed at our last congress for a meeting of the brethren at Norfolk to consider and give a suitable response to the letter of the executive committee of the Interchurch Conference, asking our approval of the basis of federation adopted at that conference, and our selection of delegates to attend the next great conference in behalf of Christian union, to be held in 1908. This will be a meeting of great importance and its action will, perhaps, do more than any other one thing which will be done at Norfolk, to show to the world our attitude toward the realization of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples. It will be well worth going all the way to Norfolk to be present in that meeting alone, and to cast a vote that will help to promote the growing unity of Christendom.

—We have announced the death of Strother M. Cook, an independent missionary to Africa. We now have some further information. He died in that country on June 1, at Ibidan, about 123 miles north of Lagos in the Yoruba Province. He was seriously ill only one day and died at the hospital at Ibidan, where he had gone to look after some missionary work. The native brethren and friends are preparing to erect a missionary chapel at that point, not far from his burial place and have secured a plat of ground and laid the corner stone. They have written to obtain assistance from his friends and brethren in the homeland. Brother Cook's last text was, "Christ shall be magnified in my body whether it be by life or by death," so the Lagos papers state, so it seems his career there was a verification of the words of the text. Any contribution sent to Mrs. Lucy J. King will be applied to the Cook Memorial Chapel.

—By a severe accident caused by a fall last January, Bro. W. G. Surber, so long identified with our work in Missouri, as a faithful minister of the gospel, is now living with his sons in Oklahoma City, having been, for the time, disabled for the work of the ministry. In a recent letter to the Editor, he writes: "It was a great cross for me to leave Missouri. I was identified with the work of the ministry in that state for about thirty-five years, and watched with anxiety the growth of the cause, and did what I could to help it on. . . . . I am able now to get around a little on crutches. How I long to be able to preach as in the past! However, I am trying to learn the lesson of contentment, as the apostle learned it: 'I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content'." Brother Surber has many friends in Missouri who will sympathize with him in his misfortune, and pray for his early recovery. We commend him to the Christian love and fellowship of the brethren in Oklahoma.

—The following notice is of special interest to our Kansas readers: "Kansas is also to have a jubilee. The churches of the state are preparing to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society. The next state convention, held with the Central Church, Wichita, on September 30 October 3, will usher in the Kansas Jubilee. Nearly all of the leading national representatives of our missionary and benevolent work will be present, and reports are coming in from all over the state assuring us of a large gathering of the faithful. The convention is to take large proportions and to be a proper beginning for more successful labor during the new missionary year. Many of our pastors have already arranged for their jubilee revival meeting. They will circulate our religious papers, gospel tracts and will more thoroughly advertise their evangelistic campaign. We will expect great things after we have done great things. The religious life of Kansas must be kept to the front as well as her material prosperity.—Geo. E. Lyon, Superintendent Kansas Missions.

—E. A. Child has accepted a call to Albuquerque, N. M., and with his family is making preparation to move there this month. He left the people at Boise, Idaho, with plans for a new church building and, eventually, a university on the grounds which they have purchased. Brother Child would have been glad to have remained to carry out this enterprise but for the fact that his family seems to need a milder climate for the winter season. He feels that he can leave the plan for enlargement at Boise with the people there who are capable. The business men of the city have sanctioned the scheme and are ready to help in its success. Brother Child spent ten years or so in a similar scheme in Wisconsin while he was a member of the Congregational Church, and as a result there is one of the most successful churches and schools, as well as one of the best regulated towns in the state, now standing where the primeval forest stood when he began. A board has been corporated to take charge of the plan at Boise, Idaho. Those who wish to learn further particulars may address N. C. Hiatt at that place.

A Tent Meeting at Hazelton, Kan.

My own membership is still with the church at Linwood Boulevard, Kansas City, Mo., but I came to Hazelton, Kan., some four months ago, to be with my son. It is a town of some 300 inhabitants and both Methodists and Presbyterians have good church houses, though preaching is both irregular and to small congregations. We had no organization, but the few members, after conferring, decided it was a good time to have Brothers Ingle and Zimmerman, of Harper, Kan., hold a meeting. A tabernacle was erected adjoining the Methodist church in which we could go in case of rain and on Sundays. The meeting lasted 17 days and there were six confessions and two from other churches. Scattered in and around Hazelton, we have about 40 members who have rented a room in the school building and just met for the first time to break bread. We are to organize a Sunday-school. The success of the crop this fall will determine whether a church building is to be erected. Brother Ingle is to be back December 1 to hold another meeting, or rather finish this one.

Mrs. Luella Hargis.

A Recipe for High Days.

The church at Lawrenceville, Ill., has had a day of rejoicing and of spiritual uplift. Mrs. F. E. Hagin, our living link missionary, spoke in the forenoon, while F. M. Rains addressed the evening audience. Mrs. Hagin captured our people by her sweet womanliness, not less by her address. We are not behind the very chief of our churches in appreciation of and pride in our representative in the foreign field. Paris, Ill., is no exception, notwithstanding their selection of Brother Hagin as their living link.

We have had two seasons of rejoicing here in Lawrenceville, either of which has repaid us a hundredfold for the money invested in making this church a living link. One of these was the day we raised the money for the support of a missionary. That day we shall never forget. The second was when Mrs. Hagin and Brother Rains were with us. We recommend our recipe for high days to all our churches.

West Virginia Convention.

The best convention ever held by the churches of Christ in West Virginia was the one which was held last week at Berkeley. High upon the mountain tops of Raleigh county is this little town, and just to enjoy its pure air and gentle breezes is enough to make all want to return again. The convention was in session four days and many things were planned to carry on the Master's work in "the mountain state."

Professors Taylor, Johnson and McDiarmid delivered addresses which placed Bethany College high in the estimation of Beckley and the surrounding country.

George F. Crites, the living-link evangelist, in southern West Virginia, gave a report which shows that he is accomplishing much good in his section of the state. Not only is he organizing churches and building them homes, but he is also purifying the churches that are already organized. He is showing the people that we stand for clean preachers and working churches.

The past year is the first time the state board has ever employed a man to do the work of corresponding secretary. Heretofore the work has been done by the state evangelist. J. W. Yoho, who has been the corresponding secretary, was again elected to fill the same office another year. No man in West Virginia is so well fitted to do the work as Brother Yoho, and we feel sure that the state will be much enriched by his work. West Virginia expects to raise three thousand five hundred dollars this year for state missions. Two more evangelists were employed and will begin work in the state at once.

At this convention, W. J. Wright represented home missions, and his addresses stirred the hearts of the people as they never have been stirred before.

Professor Paul, of Hiram, represented the foreign society, and as he told of the things being done in China by Christian influence, all who were present listened with extreme delight.

The C. W. B. M. was fortunate in having Sister Mattie Pounds, of Indianapolis, at the convention. It is needless to say that we enjoyed her work with us, for all the churches know the good work she is doing.

The Mountain Mission school at Beckley bids fair to be a great success. The preparations for the opening of this school are being superintended by Sister Alma E. Moore, to whose ministry is largely due the fact that we are to have the school at Beckley.

The convention meets next year at Clarksburg. A. H. Jordan.

A Sunday-school Contest.

One of the most efficient, interesting and helpful methods of increasing the Sunday-school is a contest with a school in some nearby city. It is quite surprising to see how the whole city becomes interested in such a contest. The local papers take a civic pride and usually gladly give generous space each week. The results are telegraphed or telephoned just before the close of the session and gives a mighty impetus to personal work during the week. The pupils and teachers get the habit of regular and prompt attendance and this is of immense value when the contest closes. But the contest does not seem to grow old nor the interest in it pale, and as soon as it closes the people will be importuning for another with some other school. No bad effects seem to follow this kind of a contest. If good generalship is shown the growth can be almost entirely a real and permanent growth. Bruce Brown.

Lights and Shadows in Benevolent Association Work.

As a result of the general secretary's visit to the Pacific coast, the National Benevolent Association is receiving much encouragement. Every church visited in Washington, Oregon and California has pledged itself to take an annual offering for this worthy ministry. One person in Washington has offered a fine property, valued at $12,000. for orphanage work. In Eugene, Ore., a fine property costing $7,500, has been purchased and given to the association for an old people's home. To encourage the beginning of the work in Eugene, a brother offers $500 and a sister offers $3,000. A lady seventy years old in Oregon has offered to give the association a ten-room brick house, $5,000 in cash, and 400 acres of land, if it will open an orphanage in her city, and will care for her for the balance of her life. These and many other things show how deeply interested the brethren on the Pacific are in the Gospel of the Helping Hand. From present indications they will soon lead in this holy ministry.

Recently a sister in Iowa gave $500 on the annuity plan, with a promise of more. While these signs of sympathy and interest are encouraging and inspiring, there is an other feature of the work of the year that is depressing. Out of respect to the wishes of many brethren to have the clash over Easter removed, the Benevolent Association consented to a joint observance of Easter with the C. W. B. M. This peace offering has cost the association $4,000. This loss means a cut in the "bread and butter fund." Much of the money given is so designated that it cannot be used for missionary expenses. The money coming from Easter has been relied upon for years to provide for shortages in our running expenses. The association comes to the end of this year with several institutions in debt for bread and butter. The churches and ministers are sending more children and old people to the association for care than ever before. Surely the churches will not require the work to be done and at the same time cut off the main source of revenue without making some other provision. This $4,000 shortage should be supplied, that the Lord's hungry little ones may not call for bread in vain. We must not take the bread from the Master's mouth.

Just Resting.

"Why haven't you sent any telegrams lately?" This question from many friends prompts me to write the following notes. My meeting at Dallas, Ill., closed with 130 additions. Immediately following—about July 1—I went to Loveland, Colo., for a rest. In resting I found time to dig for sermon gold in the Rocky Mountains, and dress my old sermons in new clothes for the autumn and winter campaigns. They needed it, too, for they were badly worn from daily use throughout twelve months without rest. How helpful to go to the mountains and in the midst of sublime and silent grandeur, rest and read; Twain's "Christian Science," "Is Christianity True?" "Science and Christianity" and "The Life of John Paton" are helpful books which I read while resting.

About July 20 I went to Shelbyville, Tenn., and visited with homefolks in Dixie. They are building a new church at a cost of $15,000. It will be completed October 1. James Small begins a meeting there Oct. 6. W. L. Logan is the preacher in Shelbyville and he is doing a great work. Then I preached a few nights in Bell Buckle, Tenn. On August 11 I commenced a meeting with J. Clarence Read in Fulton, Ky. The brethren there erected a tabernacle seating 2,000 people and many nights during the meeting the tabernacle would not accommodate the audiences. Brother Read is a good yoke-fellow and a tireless worker. O. T. Marks led the singing. We continued four weeks with 45 additions. We hoped for larger results, but local conditions would not permit it. I have never found the sectarian spirit so great as in Fulton. "The Methodist," by R. H. Pigne, and the "Baptist Flag," are both published there. Here are samples from each sheet: "There is more religion in one advertisement than in the whole doctrine of the Campbellite church."—Methodist. "One wing of the Campbellite fraternity is in a meeting down on the creek, but few are trying salvation by water."—Flag. With their children trained since the war under such teaching and in such a spirit no wonder that our matchless plea could not reach many hearts. But we had a good sowing season and some day we shall have a great church in Fulton.

We commenced at Oelwein, Ia., September 8. Brother Charlton is leading the singing. Our next meeting will be in St. Louis.

The Oklahoma State Convention.

The convention held at Oklahoma City, September 5-9, was the greatest convention ever held in Oklahoma. It was a historic convention. It was a joint convention, held by Oklahoma and Indian Territory, with a view of merging the missionary societies of the two territories into one.

The basis of the merger was a constitution which was unanimously adopted by the joint convention. This consummated the merger. There is now one society, the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society. A new state board of fifteen was selected. They were divided equally between the two territories. For the present, there will be an eastern district and a western district, conforming to the boundaries of Oklahoma and Indian Territory.

Inasmuch as efficient work was done by the corresponding secretaries of both territories, J. M. Monroe is continued as corresponding secretary of the western district and S. R. Hawkins is continued as corresponding secretary of the eastern district. These two secretaries will work in perfect accord. W. A. Humphrey, of Guthrie, is president of the board and M. S. Dunning of Tulsa, is secretary. Quarterly meetings will be held at Guthrie.

Report of work done in Oklahoma during the year: Days service, 3,214; sermons, 1,774; baptisms, 437; other accessions, 643; total accessions, 1,080; churches organized, 16; meetings held, 63; churches assisted, 122; preachers located, 68; churches supplied with preaching, 92; church building erected, 32.

This does not include work done in Indian Territory. It includes only the work done by the field workers of the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society.

A statement of the average amount of work done by each living link missionary shows: Days service, 293; sermons, 161; baptisms, 40; total accessions, 98; churches organized, 15; church buildings erected, 3; meetings held, 6; churches helped, 11; preachers located, 6; churches supplied, 8.

A comparative statement of work done by the Oklahoma and the Illinois Missionary Societies during the last year shows:

	Ill.	Okla.
Men	58	11
Meetings	51	63
Additions	1,621	1,080
Churches organized	6	16
Churches aided	46	116
Buildings erected	0	32

Illinois had five times as many men in the field as Oklahoma, yet Oklahoma held twelve more meetings, organized two and two-thirds more churches, and aided two and one-half times as many churches as Illinois. Oklahoma held five meetings per man, Illinois one meeting per man. Illinois organized a church for every ten men in the field, Oklahoma organized one and a half per man. Illinois aided one church per man, Oklahoma aided ten churches per man. Illinois had thirty-two additions per man. Oklahoma had ninety-five additions per man. Oklahoma erected thirty-two churches; the records do not show that Illinois erected any. This comparative statement is presented to show that Oklahoma is a ripe field and to be an inspiration to all the boards such support. No doubt the Illinois evangelists worked as faithfully as those of Oklahoma, only their field had been gleaned long ago, while here we are in the midst of a harvest.

S. R. Hawkins, as corresponding secretary, presented a splendid report of work done in the Indian Territory. We have not the items of his report at hand.

A splendid body of preachers from the two territories was present at the convention, which augurs well for the cause in greater Oklahoma. Dick T. Morgan, president of the O. C. M. S., in opening the convention with his annual address, gave the key-note of optimism, which was characteristic of the entire convention. Not a note of pessimism was heard from start to finish. President E. V. Zollars was present with his inspiring personality. He has especially contributed to make 1907 a historic year for our cause in Oklahoma by installing the Oklahoma Christian University. W. A. Humphrey, president of the board of directors of the university, made the report for the educational committee. It was received with great enthusiasm, as he presented the present encouraging condition, and the splendid possibilities before the institution.

The most inspiring feature of the convention was the meeting of the Oklahoma and the Indian Territory workers, in view of the prospect of immediate statehood. It was felt that a merger of the work of the two territories was the "manifest destiny" of our cause in the new state. The committee on merger, with O. I. Smith as its chairman, did an inestimable work for the brotherhood in preparing the constitution which was the basis of the merger and which was unanimously adopted.

The "Oklahoma Christian" received many words of commendation as being the best paper ever published in Oklahoma. And H. S. Gilliam, the editor, had the gratitude of the convention for making the paper what it is.

H. H. Saunders, of Kingfisher, was the convention chorister. He is a splendid leader, and he is a leader that leads. And the congregation follow with the enthusiasm which he creates.

Frank L. Van Voorhis was the recipient of many congratulations on account of the $25,000 church that he is building at Shawnee. He easily captured the convention for 1908, the first convention of Greater Oklahoma, to meet in the splendid auditorium that will then be completed. H. J. Corwine, of Bartlesville, preached a great sermon Sunday afternoon. Not a few regarded it as the gem of the convention. J. H. O. Smith, pastor of the Oklahoma City Church, delivered a characteristic address to the convention, to the great delight of all.

W. A. Wright, of Shawnee, and his wife, are always present at our conventions, and are highly appreciated by the O. C. M. S. for having supported a living link missionary during the past year. When solicited to continue their living link another year their response was "Of course, we did not take up the work to lay it down after one year." This is highly gratifying to the brotherhood.

Our statehood campaign and our state-wide prohibition agitation were so overshadowing in their importance that it kept many workers from the convention. Every allusion to state-wide prohibition was cheered to the echo. H. S. Gilliam, state superintendent of Bible schools, gave an inspiring report, indicating the advance in organising our forces along Sunday-school lines. Mrs M. A. Lucy has done a like service for the C. W. B. M. She is in great favor in Oklahoma. Her work is now enlarged so as to cover the eastern district as well as the western. Oklahoma is in touch or wants to be, with all of our national missionary interests. The presence of the national secretaries is an inspiration to the local workers. Mrs. M. E. Harlan, of the C. W. B. M., was new to Oklahoma, but her cause was not. Oklahoma owes much to the National Christian Woman's Board of Missions. For this reason the convention was prepared to receive her lovingly. But her words of wisdom and of spirituality won all hearts to herself. S. J. Corey, of the foreign board, was a benediction to the convention. He is aflame with missionary zeal, and he inspires his hearers with a like spirit. The American Christian Missionary Society is the mother of the cause in Oklahoma. With what a sense of gratitude Oklahoma receives the secretary of the A. C. M. S. It so received W. J. Wright last year. It so received George B. Ranshaw this year. It was an inspiration to receive his message from the mother society, and we bid him bear back to her our message of loving appreciation. Brother Ranshaw preached two splendid sermons on Sunday. The one in the evening was at the M. E. Church. J. H. Hardin's presentation of Sunday-school interests was like a bugle call to our Bible school workers. J. H. Hardin, of Missouri, will always have a cordial welcome in Oklahoma. J. H. Mohorter is a favorite with the Oklahoma conventions, not only on account of his own gentle personality, but also on account of the message that he bears, that of "The Orphan's Cry." With those in love, substitutes are not usually appreciated. Oklahoma has been in love with George W. Muckley so long, and we know that George loves Oklahoma, that when he sent word that C. A. Finch, of Topeka, would represent him, we thought that we could not have it so. Well, Mr. Finch came, and made a strong appeal on church extension. But Brother Muckley, next time come yourself. However, if you have to send any substitute, send Mr. Finch again. As a woman looked upon her drunken husband, she said, "Thank the Lord he is no blood relation of mine." As Oklahoma looks upon the church extension board, we say, "Thank the Lord, it is a blood relation of ours."

Illinois State Convention.

The first session of the convention opened Monday evening, September 9, 1907, under the auspices of the C. W. B. M. The first Scripture read, which was the keynote of the convention, was "all authority in heaven and on earth." (You know the rest.)

Miss Annie E. Davidson, state president, and Mrs. E. N. Holmes, vice-president of the C. W. B. M., gave direction to the meeting in their usual earnest and wise way.

Mrs. M. E. Harlan, of Indianapolis, national secretary, just from under her great sorrow, gave the first address which was full of practical, helpful, tender lessons on the "Power of the Personal in the World's Uplift." The veteran worker in behalf of the colored race, C. C. Smith, gave a most delightful address on the condition and need of the negro.

The convention was fortunate in securing Brother DeLoss Smith, our splendid musician, to lead the songs, which form such a great element of good and pleasure.

Prof. B. J. Radford, dean of the Bible college at Eureka, who, as teacher and scholar, has been such an inspiration to so many hundreds of young men, gave three splendid Bible studies in the book of Romans.

The auxiliaries of Illinois number 195 with 4,627 members. Gain in members past nine months 501. "Tidings" are taken by 2,242 people. The little state paper, "Mission Leaves," has a circulation of 1,209. Miss Thompson, the efficient and untiring secretary and organizer, reported 43 auxiliaries on the roll of honor. The financial summary shows contributions on national dues to be $5,149. Special funds, $4,096; state work, $2,219; special state fund, $379. Some other funds, making a total of $13,001.

The children's work had an encouraging showing, with 125 societies, 158 conversions and raised $1,734.20. Miss Clara B. Griffin is superintendent.

T. W. Pinkerton, so long minister at Decatur, Ill., but now of Kenton, O., who labored nearly four years in Salt Lake, was called back to Illinois to give an address on Mormonism. It was a great address on one of the deplorable black spots of our American life and civilization.

Mrs. Cathrine Lindsey gave a stirring address on "United Mission Study." In the Centennial conference, conducted by Miss Thompson, Mrs. S. E. Smart gave a strong paper on points to be emphasized in our Restoration movement, in our Centennial plea. Miss A. E. Davidson spoke with earnestness on raising our thankoffering. The Harvest Home service, conducted by Mrs. W. E. Spicer, of Pittsfield, was impressive with spiritual power.

The motto of our sisters is, "Workers Together with God." This in part accounts for the deep devotional spirit that pervades all their work. Some of their aims for the future are, $15,000 for their national work; $5,000 for special and $3,000 for state development.

Mrs. J. C. Davidson, who for thirteen years has served as recording secretary, resigned her position and Mrs. M. L. Harper, Eureka, was elected to fill her place. Mrs. S. J. Crawford, who for twenty-three years has served so faithfully as state treasurer, also resigned, much to the regret of all, and Miss Clara L. Davidson was elected to fill her place. Resolutions of regret and appreciation were passed in regard to the retiring officers. The district secretaries in order are: Miss M. E. Very, Mrs. M. A. Agnew, Miss Clara B. Griffin, Miss Lucy Marshall, Mrs. C. S. Mahan, Mrs. Adda Risser, Mrs. M. M. Daily, Miss Della Osteen.

Miss Bertha Laycocke, just appointed a teacher in the Island of Porto Rico, a graduate of Eureka College, was introduced to the convention and spoke briefly.

STATE MISSIONS.

During the year the talented Finis Idleman, who was president of the state convention, moved to take the pastorate of the Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., which left the work in the hands of Vice-President O. W. Lawrence, of Decatur, and right royally did he fill his office. His address on "The Responsibility of the Church in a Prosperous Time," was one of the great addresses of the convention.

All the reports of the officers were encouraging. The corresponding secretary, J. F. Jones, in his annual statement, said the society had employed during the year 64 men, who visited 250 churches, labored 2,249 days, held 49 meetings, preached 1,980 sermons, took the confession of 917 souls, received 547 other additions to the churches, organized five churches, five Bible schools and made appropriations to 23 churches. Eight district missionary conventions were held in the state, 63 mission rallies and five churches dedicated by the secretary. The total receipts of the year were $12,081.78. There were 354 contributing churches, the largest number in our history, 47 Endeavor societies and 152 Bible schools. There is now in the permanent fund $25,294. This is truly a great summary of a great work. The secretary reported that there are 793 churches in the state known only as Churches of Christ, with a membership of 103,491. He reported the Christian Church as third in strength in Illinois.

J. M. Elam, of Carthage, wakened us all up with his well-illustrated address on "A Mountain-Top View."

H. H. Peters, of Dixon, gave the convention a masterly and well-studied address on "The Message for Illinois."

M. L. Pontius, of Taylorville, spoke with power and earnestness on "Work in Villages and Towns." He urged that the lay-members bear more responsibility; the minister must not be required to visit so much and allowed to study more; there must be more system, organization and spirituality.

E. D. Jones, of Bloomington, in a fine address, plunged straight into the harder problems in the "Work in the Cities." Andrew Scott, Danville, in a most instructive manner gave us many practical points on "Reaching Men." J. W. Reynolds, Clinton, filled us all with tenderness and love while he so earnestly talked of "Shepherding the Flock."

It was a rare treat, planned by the pastor of the church, to have present the architect of the great Jacksonville building, Mr. S. R. Badgley, of Cleveland, O., to give an address on "Twentieth Century Church Equipment." It was full of good sense and wisdom, as seen from the preacher's point of view.

The convention always enjoys the addresses of J. Fred Jones, who lost none of his just popularity in discussing "The State of the Work in Illinois," to which reference has already been made.

It was deeply regretted by all that W. W. Weeden was left off of the state missionary board, but C. G. Kindred, of Chicago, will be a good member of the board and Chicago ought to have a representative on the board. Otherwise the board remains about as before. The next convention goes to Chicago with H. L. Willett, president.

The Sunday-school section could not be dry with such great leaders as Marion Stevenson and H. H. Moninger in the lead. We seem to be in a new era of Bible school study. The old question was, as Stevenson said, "Will you teach?" Now it is, "Can you teach?" We must have a larger study of the Bible. It will demand time now devoted to other things. Pedagogical plans must be brought into Bible study.

Bro. Moninger urged thorough rapid study for both class and teachers, with the training of teachers as the present great problem. He described the formation of classes and courses of study.

Marion Stevenson spoke frequently of the work, always helpfully and was chairman of the Bible school session.

F. M. Rogers, of Springfield, gave a good address on the new motto, "All the Church in the Bible School." He is right. Let us make it so. It was given a place in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

J. F. Rosborough, of Centralia, spoke on the "Obligation of the Church to Furnish Trained Teachers." It was a fine address and will appear in these columns.

Eureka College and Illinois Christian Educational Association were considered. The address of our talented H. O. Breeden on "The Value of Christian Education, Through the Ministry of the Small College," was truly a masterly address. It ought to appear in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He said the great problem in Illinois is the endowment of Eureka College. The culture of the soul is still the greatest culture and education. The world is hungry for good men, far more than for great scholars. To prepare people for life, here and hereafter, is the greatest work on earth. The church must furnish the college. No one else can. To the small Christian college is the kingdom of God indebted for more than to the university.

Mrs. S. J. Crawford, president of the I. C. E. A., explained briefly the organization and work. The field secretary made a brief report of his work which he did for three and a half years. Miss Mary E. Monahan has been chosen field secretary to secure co-operation in this great work. We speak for her your hearty welcome and co-operation. Education day offerings were made by 78 churches with cash and pledges of $2,147.30. The treasurer's report showed that there passed through her hands during the year $4,799.52. The annual report of the college was also distributed. Professor Lyon, of Eureka, made a short address. The Centennial aims were considered, which are: 15,000 names in the association, 400 students in college, and $250,000 enrollment raised. F. W. Burnham conducted a stirring conference on college interests. This was entered into with great enthusiasm. It was decided to raise a fund to put a strong man in the field to raise the endowment. Eighty people are wanted to give $25 a year for five years to support him. Thirty were at once enrolled.

The Benevolent Association work was ably presented by J. H. Mohorter. The convention was tendered a reception at the Old People's Home, located in Jacksonville, and left $125 to help in its work. A. L. Orcutt represented, in a fine address, the great interest of ministerial relief. W. R. Warren presented our Centennial aims in a very captivating way.

The convention closed with the great address of the convention on the "Problem of Drunkenness," by the greatest temperance lecturer of America, O. W. Stewart, of Chicago.

Only one name appeared in the report of the obituary committee, that of M. R. Elder, Ashland. The Lord has been gracious and left us here to press the work of the kingdom.

Telegrams were ordered sent to Brother N. G. Brown, Galesburg, who is seriously sick; to President Hieronymus, of Eureka College, who was also, on account of sickness, hindered from meeting with the convention. A resolution of sympathy and love for Sister Emma Campbell Ewing, of Eureka, was passed, whose daughter recently died in her new mission in Bolenge, Africa.

Mottoes were hung about the church saying, "Not less than my income's tenth to God." "All the Church and as many more in the Bible school." "Each one win one."

F. W. Norton spoke on opening a home for our missionaries' children at Hiram, O. H. H. Peters spoke briefly of the Christian Endeavor work and further support of Savanna.

There were between 900 and 1,000 delegates present. Jacksonville's entertainment was royal and received enthusiastic resolutions. A general love-feast, farewell and benediction by R. F. Thrapp, closed the greatest state convention Illinois has ever had. Let the Lord be praised.

Thursday, October 17, at the Exposition Grounds.

Delegates will meet at the Convention Hall, Norfolk, at 9 o'clock, a. m., march with music to the steamer landing for a delightful trip down the harbor to Old Point and return to the Exposition Pier. This to be a special feature.

10:30 a. m.—Grand parade at the Exposition Grounds to the Auditorium.

11:00 a. m.—Services in the Auditorium. Addresses by the Governor of Virginia, His Excellency Claude A. Swanson; Hon. St. George Tucker, president of the Exposition Company, and J. H. Garrison, St. Louis. Special music and chorus.

To and From the Convention City.

He will be hard to please who does not find a perfect delight in traveling with "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special" party to and from Norfolk. Whether one loves historical associations or scenic attractions he will get not only the one, but both of these on this trip. Never has one of our conventions been so placed before as to lend so great variety to the journey to and from the convention city. And in addition to this there is an exposition to be seen that is really worth while when its purpose is understood.

The trip can be made entirely by rail to within a few miles of Norfolk, but the more desirable way to go is to have a combination boat and railroad journey. To those who can not join our "Special" we suggest they route their journey so that they may see Washington going one way and Richmond going the other; that they travel by boat between these points and Norfolk; and that they time their passage so that if possible they may see this best of the mountain scenery on one way and the battle field district and river scenery on the other way. It is important to observe that the boats leave Washington at 8 a. m. and Richmond at 7 a. m.

Crossing the Father of Waters "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special" will go over the lines of the Big Four through Indianapolis to Cincinnati. From here we pass over the Ohio River into Kentucky, and for many miles travel up the beautiful Ohio valley beside the river. In West Virginia we strike the mountains. It is impossible with our limited space to attempt to describe the scenery which here unfolds itself as the train whirls along over the Chesapeake and Ohio tracks. The finest scenery begins at about Gauley, W. Va., and continues on to nearing Charlottesville, Va. At Gordensville there is a division, those going out by Washington passing through a district full of civil war recollections. Here we pass Manassas and Bull Run. But almost every mile of this journey, as well as the country on the line going southeast through Richmond, witnessed the determined struggle between the blue and gray. Those traveling via Richmond and desiring to spend a day there, may have some difficulty, unless they have made their arrangements, in getting good hotel accommodations, as the Episcopal convention and the State Fair will both be in session then. But the Southern Capital should not be missed unless this be imperative. In the early history of America Virginia was the nation itself. "Mother of States and Presidents," she has well been called. And coming on many years after colonial days it was in and around her that some of the bloodiest dramas of the civil war were enacted. Here one sees St. John's Church, where Patrick Henry's appeal for "Liberty or Death" was made. Here is Hollywood Cemetery, where the President of the Confederacy, two Presidents of the United States and many others of renown are buried.

And then the James River trip! Going down the boat leaves Richmond at 7 a. m. Dutch Gap, Drewry's Bluff, City Point, Bermuda Hundred remind us of civil war days. Here one passes Varina, the home of Pocahontas, and the fine old colonial estates, some of which are still in the hands of descendants of the first families. At City Point stands the house used by General Grant as his headquarters; not far away is the home—very unpretentious it is—of the leader of the famous charge at Gettysburg. And up and down this stream went John Smith; there flows the river on which he was captured, afterwards to be saved—let no one dare take from us the story—by the fair Indian maiden. And lo, here is the Island, the scene of the earliest English settlement on the Continent. Now let imagination have full sway. A fair sail down and we pass the oyster and fishing boats and then great steamers and Uncle Sam's ships, on past where the "Monitor" and "Merrimac" fought their fight, seeing the great wharves of the C. & O. Co., and some of the largest dry-docks in the country. And then comes Old Point Comfort and you sigh that you have not time, while the boat stops, to take that dip in the briny. Fort Monroe is hard by, but 'tis dusk now, and the attention is focussed on the distant lights of the Exposition across Hampton Roads. Turning south the steamer passes on close by the Exposition and on to Norfolk.

Between Norfolk and Washington is another delightful steamer trip on the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay. Here, too the journey is past scenes closely identified with the birth, the growth and the struggles of our great nation, Mt. Vernon, the home of George Washington and his burial place and Arlington, where is the National Cemetery, being the most noted places. And Washington! Who that has not been there will miss this opportunity?

Such is a very brief outline of some of the things that may be enjoyed by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who go to this convention at Norfolk. And the brethren at Norfolk welcome you and they need your presence.

Convention Pointers

Make your plans.

Write for accommodations.

But don't say, "a party of five."

Specify: "Myself and wife and three lady friends; two rooms will do for my party." The local committee can the easier place you when you tell who is in the party, especially if you will say how much you are willing to pay.

Hotel prices vary from $1 each (European plan) for two people in a room, up to $3 or $5. Good hotel rooms can be had for $1.50 each for two in a room. The same class of hotels will accommodate parties of four or six in large rooms or cubicles at $1 each.

There are plenty of good homes open to us at cheaper rates. Address J. G. Holladay, 307 Law Building, Norfolk, at once.

The convention hall, known as the Armory, is central and not far from boat landings. All cars go to it. Registration bureaus will be opposite the Monticello Hotel, on City Hall avenue.

Young men of the Baraca Union will act as ushers.

The C. W. B. M. sessions will be in the Epworth M. E. church, about four squares from the Armory.

Register at once, get your program and get located.

The brethren at Norfolk are neither wealthy nor numerous. There is not a large local church membership—only about 400—to swell the attendance. They must depend on the brotherhood all over the country to help them make the impression on Norfolk, the whole state of Virginia and contiguous states that we do, as a people, amount to something. They have invited us to their fair city in this faith. What a fiasco it would be if on "Disciples of Christ Day" at the Exposition, for instance, we could not fill that auditorium with enthusiastic men and women looking in the very face of their religious movement's centennial! "Disciples of Christ Day!" This is on the Exposition calendar for October 17. The governor of the state and the president of the Exposition company will make brief speeches, and J. H. Garrison will make a special address at the request of the Norfolk committee.

It is planned on "Disciples of Christ Day" to form at convention hall and march with the band to the steamer, form and march through the Exposition grounds to the auditorium, where the meeting will begin at 11 a. m.

If you wish to join "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special" write us at once, stating how and when you will join us, whether you want us to engage sleeper in Pullman or tourist car, and room in hotel. We can not take chances on these things. We are trying to serve you, however. The railway fare is $25 (return), including the two steamer rides described in "To and From the Convention City." Sleepers between Washington or Richmond and St Louis are, per berth each way, $5 in standard Pullman, and $2.50 in tourist car. Meals on cars and boats extra, or can be provided by the traveler. For our party a 50-cent rate s given for a good breakfast or dinner on the James River boat, and a la carte on the Potomac River boat. There is practically no danger of seasickness. A wharfage fee of 25 cents is charged to land at Jamestown.

Those going via Richmond can go direct by train to Newport News and over to Norfolk by ferry, and not take the steamer down the James, which is one day's trip itself. To make this as a separate excursion from Norfolk and back there takes two days by steamer and one by rail.

Ira Boswell is the minister of the Walnut Street Church of Chattanooga, Tenn. He hails from Kentucky University and the College of the Bible. He has done a good work wherever he has been. He will be heard with interest at Norfolk.

L. E. Sellers is the minister of the Central Church of Terre Haute. He is a graduate of Butler University. He is one of the ablest of the young men in our fellowship. The church in Terre Haute has grown and prospered under his ministry. It is now one of the best churches in the state and in the nation.

Peter Ainslie is one of the useful men in Baltimore. He is building up a fine church in that city. He is at the head of a home for working girls and is the president of a college. Few men in that city live so busy and so fruitful a life. "Bishop" Ainslie is known and loved by a great host for his work's sake.

Herbert Moninger is a graduate of Bethany and of Yale Divinity School. He has preached with great acceptance in Tiffin and in Steubenville, O. He is now giving his time and strength to the Sunday-school work among us. He speaks on missions in the Sunday-school.

Miner Lee Bates speaks on the Heroic Dead. In the year G. L. Wharton, Miss Ella Ewing and T. J. Arnold have gone to their rewards. It is fitting that the convention should be reminded of their lives and service and sacrifice for the furtherance of the Gospel of the grace of God. Brother Bates is now the minister of the Fifty-sixth Street Church of New York. He is under appointment as president of Hiram College.

F. M. Rains will conduct a symposium on the forward movement and Stephen J. Corey will present the annual report. Brother Rains will at the close of the convention outline the work for the new year. That will be the closing number of the program.

The board of managers of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society will meet in Norfolk on Saturday, October 12, at 10 a. m. The life directors and the executive committee constitute this board. The life directors are urged to attend.

The Foreign Society expects the following to be present at Norfolk and to speak at some time in the progress of the convention: Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Hagin, of Japan. They have been on the field for seven years. They have been at work in the focal point of the world's history. They will have something to say about their field and their work and the conditions under which they work.

Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Weaver are from Osaka, Japan. Osaka is the great manufacturing city of that empire. Almost everything made in Japan is made in Osaka. They have been seven years in Japan. They will have much of interest to crowd into the time that will be placed at their disposal.

Miss Emma Lyon comes from Nanking, China. She has been in China twelve years. In all that time she has been head of the girls' school in Nanking. Miss Lyon will tell some things about her girls and the progress they have made while in school. She will tell something about the interest that is being taken in the education of women in China.

F. E. Meigs has been twenty years in China. He is the president of the United Christian College in Nanking. At the present time he is seeking to raise some funds for the establishment of a school for the children of missionaries. He represents all the missionaries in Central China.

Dr. and Mrs. Dye are just home from Africa. They came across the Atlantic on the Lusitania. They came from a Pentecostal field. Just before they left thirty-five more were baptized into Christ. They have a great story to tell.

Mr. and Mrs. Menges are from Havana, Cuba. They will tell about the difficulties encountered in a Catholic field. They will tell what has been done and the needs of Cuba.

The annual meeting of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is always a happy occasion. While the executive committee of the board meets very frequently, it is but once a year that the board has opportunity for united and personal conference. These meetings are happy and helpful occasions. Preceding the National Convention as they do, they give the members of the board an opportunity for a careful study of the work ere they come into convention.

W. P. Bentley, who makes the evening address for the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, served 11 years in China under the Foreign Christian Missionary Board, being compelled to return from that country on account of his health. It is most fortunate that a man of such adequate preparation could be found to superintend the Oriental work of the Pacific Coast. In his address Mr. Bentley will give us treasures of knowledge gained by long and prayerful search.

The hosts of admirers of Miss Adelaide Frost, beloved missionary to India, will enjoy the opportunity of hearing for the first time her beautiful new song, entitled "India Waiting." Both words and music were composed by Miss Frost. Miss Berry will give the song a thoroughly sympathetic rendering.

The address of Prof. C. T. Paul, of Hiram, Ohio, on "The Minor Prophets of Modern Missions," will not be pitched to a minor key, but will be full of the joy of successful endeavor. Professor Paul is a special apostle of missions and his message will have a ministry all its own.

The report of the C. W. B. M. board, the centennial secretary, and the superintendent of children's work will have in them much to enjoy. But little has been said of the accomplishments of the year. Those who are interested in the growth of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions should not miss these reports. It is said that figures can not lie. This may be true, but they can sing a song of victory, and will do so in the national convention Saturday morning, October 12.

The Netz Sisters will delight the people with their beautiful, unaffected singing.

Jamaica, India, Mexico and Porto Rico will be represented by those who know and love these fields. You should hear their messages.

The various lines of home work done by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will be represented and will have a heroic note ringing through them all.

Miss Annie Davidson, of Illinois, will sound the C. W. B. M. keynote for the new missionary year. Those who know her expect to hear a strain of triumphant faith and unfaltering hope.

The Hour of Prayer, ever the holiest service of the woman's convention, will be in charge of the executive officers of Tennessee. Let us all enjoy this hour together at five o'clock on Lord's day, October 13.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

A Good Field.

Clinton is a town of about 2,500 and Oklahoma is growing rapidly. We have no organization, but the near future promises much. Our people have a Bible school with an energetic young man, Bert Gardner, as superintendent. S. B. Russell, from Memphis, Texas, was to preach at Clinton last Lord's day. Brother Russell is a strong man and if he begins a work here we will expect "something doing" in Clinton. Of course there is a dark side to some things, but I am thankful for the bright. We must have a church here. It means much to begin at once. A little work and some money also could make this field a bright star in the "King's business." There are about fifty or sixty members of the Christian Church "in and around Clinton." Mart Gary Smith.,
C. W. B. M. Evangelist and O. C. C. Field Secretary, Box 320, Enid, Okla.

Hiram College.

The college year opens September 24, and indications point to a very successful year. An unprecedented demand for houses has almost exhausted the supply, and a large number of new families and new students seem to indicate an increase in attendance over last year.

All necessary repairs and other arrangements are being rapidly completed. The college organization for the new year is briefly as follows: The faculty and its committees will have charge of educational and disciplinary matters, while the local fiscal and office management will be in the hands of the secretary-treasurer.

There are few changes in the corps of teachers, and none in the regular professorships. Miss Anna Gould, '98, an active worker in the Bedford church and a teacher since her graduation, will be lady principal. The dining-room of Bowler Hall will be conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Updegraff, and that of Miller Hall will be conducted as a club with Mrs. Y. W. Warren in charge of the kitchen. J. O. Newcomb.

Cincinnati Letter.

Fortune, the new minister at Walnut Hills, is making a good start there. He is without a doubt the right man for the place, and will do a noble work. We are glad to welcome him to Cincinnati.——J. D. Armistead talks very highly of the idea of holding midsummer union meetings, which he had the pleasure of having a part in in Norwood this summer. He announces that Norwood church sends a young man to college this fall who is to prepare for the ministry.——Richmond Street Church also has a young man just starting into college at Lexington to prepare for the ministry. Stout, of Des Moines, is assisting R. E. Dedman is the minister there. The meeting began under very favorable circumstances and we look for this new church to be made much stronger by it.——H. Newton Miller and W. R. Warren were in the churches of our city on September 8. The preachers enjoyed a very pleasant visit by them at the meeting on Monday morning, September 9. Brother Miller is the new state secretary of Ohio. He has already gained the confidence and love of the brethren and we are sure of being led to larger things in Ohio by this consecrated man of God.—P. C. Macfarlane was also in the city on the same date and dropped in to tell us about the progress of the work in San Francisco.——Our Ministerial Association will be led this year by Earl P. Kempher, Mt. A Georgia Dedication.

The dedication of the Central Church, at Fitzgerald, Ga., which will take place October 6, with President T. E. Cramblett, of Bethany College, in charge, marks a climax after a hard struggle and a great victory. About three years ago there was a dissension in this congregation, and N. G. Buckley was called from Chicago to see if he could settle the difficulty. He remained, lectured for his salary and left his wife to preach in the old hall while he was doing this. Now we have one of the finest buildings in this part of the state. It is of artificial stone, 96x64 feet, and has all the accommodations belonging to an up-to-date church building. The seating capacity is about 800. Three thousand dollars was borrowed from the Church Extension Board and a good portion of that has been subscribed or donated ready to pay back when the time comes. Brother Buckley will leave with his family for the west, immediately after the dedication, as he finds the climate of Fitzgerald too damp. During the past three years two of the children have been buried. He has accepted no call as yet.

Hearsays and Guesses from the Empire State.

For several summers and winters J. A. Wharton has been zealously laboring in a prominent corner of Niagara county to advance the moral and Christian standing of the community in the home of "spravs" and electric power, with commendable success. News reaches us that Brother Wharton is to "leave the state" for "parts unknown." Brother Wharton is a genial, likeable man and we regretfully unclasp his hand as he goes from our midst. We thoroughly appreciate his generosity, however, in permitting the state to remain in its present location. New York state is an important factor in the business and religious world and might lose a portion of its usefulness and power were it transferred to some other part of the globe. It fits in pretty well where it now is. The real problem is, however, why should Brother Wharton go to "parts unknown"? Wherever that unknowable location may be, it is more than a reasonable assurance that but a brief section of time will elapse before it can be discovered upon the map without the application of a magnifying glass. He doesn't get lost.

Yours has been a pleasant fellowship, Brother Wharton, and our good wishes follow you into any new field you may enter.

We hear the church on River and Jay streets, in Troy, is congratulating herself over the installment of a new, large pipe organ, costing some $3,000. The Troy church is adorned with a reputation for good works that extends far beyond the boundaries of its own municipality. This entitles her membership to indulge in a little pardonable pride over this new accessory to their worship should they be so inclined. Under the leadership and administration of C. J. Armstrong the Troy church will continue to "do things." They do much, hence deserve much.

The Central Church at Syracuse is having a little gala day just now itself. It also has placed in commission a new pipe organ costing $2,250. A pipe organ commensurate to the requirements of a centrally-located church in a city of 120,000 population has been the subject of our dreams for the past four decades. We have just awakened to the fact that tuning forks and tin pans are insufficient accessory to meet the modern demands in this department of our worship. If instruments are expedient or necessary the best the church can afford is none too good and providing your neighbors are well equipped it becomes imperative. A cordial invitation is extended to any of our brethren arriving on some one of the hundred daily trains to enjoy fellowship with us at our services on Lord's day or Wednesday evenings. We are located on East Onondaga street near Fayette Park. Joseph A. Serena is minister of the Central Church.

Your correspondent assumes that wherever we have churches in the cities of the Empire State a cordial welcome will be given to any visiting brethren who by chance or choice are detained over Lord's day, to join them in their worship. Many pleasant and lasting friendships are formed through such visits, and much mutual helpfulness is frequently experienced.

Hearsay informs us that the State Missionary Board are engaged in preliminary work in the city of Lockport. Lockport, a city of about 25,000 inhabitants, is located in the western part of the state on a branch of the New Central railroad, and in direct connection with Rochester, Batavia, Niagara Falls, Tonawanda and Buffalo. The prospects are attractive and the work begins with reasonable assurance of a successful outcome. Some 15 or 20 Disciples are residents of Lockport and are expressing a desire to inaugurate a campaign with a view of completing an organization there and establishing a church. D. C. Tremaine, of Williamsville, is corresponding secretary and state evangelist.

Syracuse, N. Y. C. G. Van Wormer.

Western Canada.

The writer is well into his second year as minister of the church at Milestone, Saskatchewan, and while our membership has been almost doubled our attendance has been small. It is almost impossible to get a hearing among the denominations except by house-to-house visitation. One reason for this is that the people here look with suspicion upon all new religious movements. I have heard it remarked frequently that the United States is noted for "freak religions," and they have evidently placed the Christian Church in that class. Our work here is largely of an educational nature and the minister who hopes to succeed in this field must have patience, tact and an intense love for the souls of men. There are a number of places where men of this kind could eventually build up good congregations. One of these places is Yellow Grass, Sask. There are five or six families of Disciples at that place anxious to effect an organization. If there is a minister in our great brotherhood willing to launch out on the promise of the Master and labor and wait for his reward he may write Charles Buxton, Yellow Grass, Sask., Canada. An assistant minister is also needed for this field at once. Our superintendent of missions, J. A. L. Romig, is looking for a suitable man for this position and we hope to have him on the field by October 1. Macedonian calls are coming to us almost daily from all over this great West and we are praying that the Lord of the harvest will send forth more laborers into this field.

A. R. Adams.

New York City Notes.

Church life in New York city reaches a very low ebb during the three summer months. New Yorkers have gotten into a fixed habit of getting away to the country, mountains, lakes and sea during this period. The first of September taxes the railroads and baggage men getting the thousands back to their work and homes.

They resumed work at the First Church on Fifty-sixth street, September 8. Miner Lee Bates, the pastor, has spent the summer at Lake Willoughby, Vt., with his family. Mrs. Bates and the family will remain at the lake until the last of the month on account of little Gaylord, for whom the open air is at present a necessity. The church is planning greater things for the winter, of which we may hear more in the near future.——Brother Willis, of the One-hundred-and-Sixty-ninth Street Church, came back on August 24. He has spent the summer on Block Island and at Chautauqua, and although he is not entirely recovered from his recent breakdown, he feels much better and is hopeful for the winter's campaign.——J. P. Lichtenberger has remained at his post during the summer. He was abroad and in Palestine in the early spring and decided not to go away again during the year.——Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, has recently added a new pipe organ. Dr. Herbert L. Martin has taken up work with them as an associate pastor. The second member of the pastoral team has not been finally decided upon. They are coquetting with several representative men and we hope will be able to secure one in time to take up the fall work. The church has decided to have two men instead of one as they are planning a larger work.——Brother Keevil and Brother Waugh have conducted a very successful campaign of street preaching, aided by workers from the Greenpoint Church, and financially by the Home Missionary Society and a few personal friends. Brother Keevil visited his brother the first week in September in Trenton where an attempt is being made to organize a new church.——W. S. Rounds, of the Flatbush Church, is rejoicing in the advent of another son, Philip, who arrived August 27. Mrs. Rounds is a daughter of our Brother John Darsie, of Hiram, O. The church work is beginning with the promise of several additions to the membership. Brother Rounds and family spent vacation at Hiram and in Wisconsin.——Brother Wells, of East Orange, N. J., has been in Pittsburg in the interest of the new building which the Orangemen have begun. The foundation was laid the first of September. This young church gives promise of becoming one of the great churches of the brotherhood in the very near future.—— New York Disciples' Union is planning to have a rally of New England preachers on October 8 at Lenox Avenue, 119th Street Church. The plan is to intercept the migration toward Norfolk, have a good time here and then join the migration ourselves. Joseph C. Todd.

Fruitage in Oregon.

Medford is destined to be the metropolis of Southern Oregon. Many orchards will yield over $1,000 worth of fruit per acre this year. Land can be bought at a reasonable figure compared to the income it can be made to bring in every year. If our brethren in the Central and Middle West only knew of this land of fruit, sunshine and flowers, and its unrivaled climate and scenery they would be in Medford ere the present year closes. Medford and the Rogue river valley are the Italy of America. Medford has a church, simply Christian, numbering over 100 members. Twenty-six have been added since January 1, 1907. The church has been "looking up" for several years past. Lying flat on its back that was the only way it could look if it looked at all. Using a homely phrase, some churches get their "back up," while others haven't energy enough to do even that. The Medford church is developing into a working body of people. We have greatly improved the house. We have a "hustling" Ladies' Aid Society of 24 members, and an Endeavor Society that help much in a material way.

McConnell and Butler, our state evangelists, working in the southwest district, will be with us in a meeting in October and November. They are successful soul winners and we confidently expect a great meeting.
Marion F. Horn, Minister.

A Strategic Point.

The brotherhood of Texas have puzzled their minds over the situation at Brownwood, Texas, for many years. The outcome has been a problem of uncertainties. The peculiar situation is unknown to the brotherhood at large. In fact only those who have been connected with the work can understand the situation.

Brownwood, the county seat of Brown county, Texas, is located at the juncture of the great Santa Fe and Frisco railway systems. Brownswood has a population of about 8,000 people and is known as a town of schools, churches and colleges. The public school system is good. The church interests are well represented. Besides our people we have Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, Catholics and Episcopalians. Howard Payne is a Baptist college with quite a strong faculty. The attendance is excellent. Daniel Baker is a Presbyterian college, and all that was said about Howard Payne may be said of Daniel Baker. In the midst of this complex situation the Disciples of Christ have about 100 members in their congregation. Methodists on the right of them have about 700 members, the Baptists on the left with about 900 members, and the Presbyterians of all classes number about 600. Other religious bodies are smaller. Haddock and Stanley moved into our city on September 1. Interest is great, the people rational and the evangelist has shown a most admirable disposition. The results can not be predicted. I give the quotation from the "Daily Bulletin" of September 9, after the meeting had been in progress for eight days: "Perhaps the evangelist witnessed the largest gathering that ever came together in the city to hear a religious subject discussed. Sam Jones with all his world-wide reputation never met so many people when he was here as the evangelist met last night. A moderate estimate would place the number who had seats at 2,000 people. Several hundred were standing for a time and perhaps 500 to 700 people left for want of seats. The audience was wonderful, not only in respect to number but in attention during the entire discussion. It is more wonderful when one considers the fact that the elements of sensation, emotion and sympathy have not been used at any service." Pray for a victory, brethren, and watch for reports at close of meeting. John W. Smith.

A Work at Brookville, Kan.

There are a number of Christian brethren at this place who have been struggling and working earnestly for almost three years, endeavoring to build them a church, and at last, after many discouragements, they have secured a site and have a building fund started, and are working for immediate results. The field is a very promising one, and our people are anxious to become established. Brother Lyons, of Topeka, preached for us some time ago from the M. E. pulpit, but was not allowed to give the invitation. He baptized three, taking their confession at the waterside. Since then we have had no preaching, but are hoping to have a meeting when the weather is cooler. We would welcome a donation, no matter how small, from any one wishing to help us. Geo. W. Noland, Sec. Bldg. Fund.
W. F. Hinerman, Treasurer.

Hamlin and Daugherty's Good Work.

Hamlin and Daugherty have closed a twenty-five days' meeting with the Dixon Street Church at Gainesville, Texas. Services were held in a large tabernacle centrally located. Because of the intense heat no day services were held except on Sundays. From 400 to 1,200 people heard the Gospel nightly. The results of the first two weeks surpassed the great Scoville meeting several years ago. Just at this point the pastor of one of the prominent churches fell and was dismissed from the ministry. Then came a mass meeting to call a local option election. The last two nights we had to compete with the "county fair" and Cole Younger shows. The splendid loyalty of this congregation and the magnificent work of our evangelists enabled us to have seventy-seven additions in the face of such conditions. Of those added fifty were by confession of faith in Christ. This is a great meeting for a Southern field.

R. R. Hamlin is one of our foremost evangelists. His work is safe, sane and substantial; no fear of any reaction when he is gone. He is an able preacher, tireless and tactful personal worker and a most companionable man. Professor Daugherty is the peer of any singer among us. His new book, "Union Gospel Songs," is the best book for revivals I have examined. Only words of praise for these men are heard in our city. They are now at Winfield, Kan. G. L. Bush, Minister.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

Filling the Father's House.

Topic October 2. Luke 14:15-24.

Most of us will agree with the man who sat at meat with the Master, and who said: "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God." Ask people anywhere, who have ordinary intelligence, whether members of the church or not, what they think of the "kingdom of heaven" and of the "Gospel of the kingdom," the "Christianity of the Christ," and they will say it is all right. They will confess that they ought to be Christians. They wish they were. They are glad to see the Church prosper. They wouldn't live in a community where there is no church for anything. They are not happy out of the church, but they will not eat bread in the kingdom of God. It is one of the strangest things in the world.

What's the matter? Too busy! This will catch the majority of folks. Listen to the excuses offered by the people you talk with and see. Jesus understood the human heart. Read again the parable of the great supper: "And they all with one consent began to make excuses. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground and must needs go and see it; I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them! I pray thee have me excused. Too busy, don't you see! And these are the same excuses men are giving to-day. The farm, the factory, the store, the pressing professional duties, all these keep men out of the kingdom. Multitudes are actually starving to death, and know it, and yet are too busy to stop to eat bread in the kingdom of God. Many of them confess it, with sorrow, yet go right on starving their souls to death! It is one of the strange, pathetic facts in the tragic lives of multitudes of busy men and women. It is at once pathetic and provoking and puzzling and perplexing. It is a big part of the problem of the "unchurched masses."

There is another class Jesus mentions. "Another said, I have married a wife and therefore I can not come." That settled it so far as he and his wife were concerned. And the provoking thing about it is that young, and a good many old married folks, are just like they were in Christ's time. When they get married they are all too frequently lost to the Sunday-school and church. And a failure on the threshold of married life too often means a failure of their religious life for the family. This is one of the chief causes why the church languishes and family life is distinctly non-religious, frequently downright irreligious. Of all forms of selfishness this last is worst and most fatal to the religious life of the family and the progress and prosperity of the church.

The problem of filling the church is one for the whole church to solve and not something to be shoved off on the shoulders of the preacher. A drawing church is as important as a drawing preacher. A going church is a growing church. Some one has said, "The church that isn't a goer is a goner." And it's a fact. The first part of the Gospel is "Go." The first word of the great commission is "Go." Christ's invitation is "Come, for all things are ready." His command to his servants is: "Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor and the maimed and the halt and the blind." It is to the credit of the church that it has sought and received such in large numbers. "And yet there is room." The urgent command of the Lord is to "go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in that my house may be filled." Here is where we have failed. We have not sought in the highways and byways for those to sit at the Master's table. We all too frequently fail to use the divine compulsion of love to bring them in. And so our churches are not half filled and multitudes famish for the feast spread in the Father's house. The kingdom is slow in it's coming because we are slow in going!

They ought to come without urging? It seems that way to us also. But Jesus said, "Go" and "Compel." May the love of Christ constrain us.

—On the Rock. By D. R. Dungan. $1.00. No, this is not a new book. It is now in its thirty-third edition. It is one of the great classics of our literature. Every Disciple ought to read this story of souls whose pathway began in darkness but brightened to the perfect day.

Joshua, Israel's New Leader.—

Josh. 1:1-11.

Memory verse, 7.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I will not fail thee nor forsake thee.—Josh. 1:5.

The account of the transfer of authority to Joshua after the death of Moses is a very simple one. Evidently the people had been well prepared for the change. It was one of the great achievements of Moses that he was able to transmit to his successor his undivided authority. Great leaders like Alexander and Napoleon, who built up great empires based upon their own personal leadership, have nearly always been unable to transmit an unbroken empire to their successors. The personality of Moses had been the visible bond of unity among the tribes of Israel during the past generation. When that was taken away, it might have been anticipated that the tribes would fall apart. It was indeed true that their union was still far from perfect, and when the period of the first struggle for existence and breathing room in Palestine was passed they tended to separation because there was not the uniting bond of a common peril. But under Joshua the nation was almost as closely united as it had been under Moses.

The keynote of the lesson is courage. The voice that came to Joshua, and through him to the people of Israel, in this crisis of their history was a message of courage. "Be strong and very courageous." "Be strong and of good courage." "Be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed." There was good need for these exhortations to courage. Remember that, when last the tribes of Israel stood at the edge of the promised land, one day of wretched cowardice had cost them thirty-eight years of weary wandering. The nation would probably not have survived another such experience. It was now necessary, above all, that the former mistake should not be repeated.

Courage is always half the victory. The battle is to the bold rather than to the strong. To front the difficulties and dangers of life with stout heart and cheerful face and a calm expectancy of victory,—this goes a long way toward winning the success which one anticipates.

But it is as important to have courage well grounded as to have it at all. The basis of courage with Joshua and Israel in the conflict upon which they were about to enter was not pride in their own superior strength and military resources. The fact is that the Canaanites had a considerable advantage in those respects. They had walled cities, horsemen and chariots, probably better weapons, certainly a more advanced state of civilization and therefore, in general, probably greater military efficiency. The ground of Israel's courage was to be faith in the help and the strength of Jehovah.

"Jehovah thy God is with thee." This was the basis of the whole argument, the ground of the whole appeal.

Exodus 14:15 presents Israel to our view in a very painful situation. The Egyptians in pursuit had overtaken them encamping by the sea and the hosts of Pharaoh, soldiers and chariots, shut them in with no prospect before them except the wide expanse of rolling and restless sea. If we had been in that camp we too, doubtless, would have joined in the terrified cry to Moses that it had been better to have gone to peaceful graves in Egypt than to be slain of the sword or drowned in the sea. Life with servitude, bitter as it was, was to be preferred to their present state. Can we blame them for their bitter reproach to Moses? Hardly, for they had not gone far in the school of faith.

With what patient compassion Moses answers. They shall not have death but salvation as their portion. They shall not even need to fight for their salvation. They shall simply abide in peace while Jehovah their God fights for them. Moses himself may not have known just how Jehovah would save his people. At any event, he now cries to Jehovah, who tells him what to do that the people may be delivered from impending destruction.

The people are to go forward. That to them was a supreme test of faith. To advance upon the deep sea was seemingly to drown in its mighty waters,—how could such a procedure save them? The answer was in the instruction given to Moses as to the part he should play,—he was to lift up the "rod of God" over the sea. In obedience to this divine act the waters would divide, a path would be cleft through the deeps for the people. I wonder if Moses told the people what he was instructed to do? Why should he not tell them so that their faith would be more obedient and unquestioning.

We need not dwell on the sequel. The situation is an interesting one. The people stand between fear and hope, between the dead past and the living future. They are to pass from death into life, from a kingdom of darkness into a kingdom which Jehovah himself would give them, which also would be full of life to them and through them to all nations according to the great promise to their father Abraham.

In relation to the past and to the future there was only one thing for them to do, go forward. In their history, past and present, was Jehovah. Back of the sea lay his recognition of their sad state in Egypt and his mighty deliverance in the discomfiture of Egypt. His presence was with them in the visible cloud. His word came to them when needed through Moses. Beyond them lay Canaan and the new life which meant the fulfillment of the gracious purpose of Jehovah. And in the midst of all this their sole duty was to go forward.

Multitudes of Christian Endeavorers are home from vacations ready for the future of God's purposes in them. They stand on this beautiful October Lord's day between the past and the future. The past may have memories of fear, of servitude, perhaps of defeat. The present may seem hopeless. We are so weak, so shut in by circumstances which threaten and dismay, so overwhelming,—our own lives, the church to which we belong, the Endeavor society,—what a great cry of fear may be ringing its alarm in our hearts! What shall we do?

Go forward! Have we forgotten God's power for us and in us through days that are gone? Do we forget that he has not only saved us but also guided us into our present? Is he not still with us in his presence, evident in our own consciousness, evident in his word and evident in the great company who stand with us?

Is there not a future? Is it not filled with the promises of God which he must work out if he be true to his own truth and righteousness? Are we not to be the instruments through which he will accomplish all this? Can he therefore for his own sake refuse to deliver us that we may go forward?

Forward is the cry that rings out a new courage. The way may not be visible. He will open it. What glorious things the Christian Endeavor host may accomplish for God this coming winter if they will forget the past with its fear and failures and

"Act,—act, in the living present, Heart within and God o'erhead."

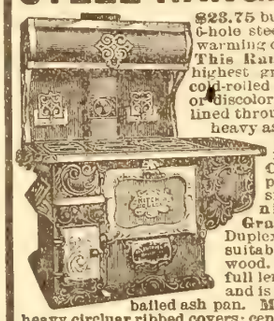
Baltimore Letter.

The Christian Tribune Home for Working Girls, which is now closing its eighth year of service, sold its property at 805 West Fayette street some weeks ago and has bought a handsome piece of property at 1524 West Fayette street and the home continues its service of helping the girls who care to be helped.

The building of the Christian Temple, which is the model of a Grecian temple of the Ionic period and is one of the handsomest churches in the city, is nearing completion and its formal opening will be September 29. Brother F. M. Rains will preach the opening sermon, followed by fraternal meetings on Monday and Tuesday evenings.

The Temple seminary will open its fourth session on September 27, and we look for a large enrollment. This is a three-years' course in the study of the Scriptures and training in Christian work. It may be also taken by correspondence. The Temple's annual Bible school institute was held last week, covering two days. There were twelve addresses, all by the teachers and officers of the Temple school, excepting one, and general discussion followed each address. We have found this home institute very profitable. The speakers each year are our own, excepting always some prominent speaker from another school. The preparation necessitated on the part of the teachers generates enthusiasm in the general work and the result throughout the school is good.

Both Twenty-fifth Street and Calhoun Street churches are without preachers at this time and both are good fields. Last week Brother Lookabill resigned at Fulton Avenue church, leaving three promising fields without ministers. Brother Abbott, at Harlem Avenue church; Brother King, at Lansdowne, and Brother Pickering at Kandall Street, are going forward to larger things in this field.



The annual convention of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia will be held at the Christian Temple, Fulton avenue, above Lexington street, Baltimore, October 2-4, and not only the churches of this district are cordially invited to attend, but the invitation is to our brethren generally. The program is unusually good.

The Last Call.

But one more Sunday remains in which to take an offering for home missions. The society is able to report its best year, and hopes to report at Norfolk $25,000 increase over last year. Many churches have not contributed. Take the offering Sunday, September 29, telegraph the amount received to W. J. Wright, corresponding secretary, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O., and remit the same early on Monday morning.

A Great Meeting in Springfield, Mo.

On account of the very great and very unnecessary expense attached to sending long, descriptive telegrams, I wish to inform our brotherhood of the grand,—yes, the great meeting, we are now in in Springfield, Mo. Although I have been in two of the largest simultaneous campaigns conducted in our brotherhood, yet I always believed that under the proper circumstances the greatest good could be accomplished by our churches uniting in some great central auditorium, and, like a Christian army, thus move upon the city. Since last year I began to plan for several such campaigns for this season, and am in the first one here. The three Christian churches of Springfield are united in this meeting, and we have secured a large tent, 170x120 feet, with a seating capacity of exactly 3,000 people, including the 136 chairs on the platform. The tent is located just north of the large federal building, which is on the dividing line between North and South Springfield. There has always been much strife between the two parts of this city commercially, and the one question of the meeting was (since the city was so long North and South), whether we could draw the people to the half-way point between each.

I came here several days ahead, and began the campaign by supplementing all the efforts made by the pastors prior to the meeting (as per instructions sent) and efforts put forth according to their own judgment. When everything was in readiness we went to the great tent, and the first crowd put my mind at rest. Suffice it to say that the invitation has only been given ten days; have spoken to 3,000 people every night, and Sunday night there were enough standing in and around the tent to almost have filled it the second time. There were 134 converts Sunday, and 416 in the first ten days of invitation. A large number of our pastors within a circle of 120 miles have been in attendance, and a few evangelists, including John L. Brandt and Brother Williamson, who is the county evangelist, have been here studying methods, etc.

As stated above, we have three churches in this city. The South Street Church is centrally located in the business portion of the city, and has Brother F. L. Moffett and his noble companion as leaders. Mrs. Moffett is stronger by far than any pastoral helper I have ever come in contact with. We held a meeting with Brother and Sister Moffett in their former pastorates at Centerville, Ia., which is the home of our lamented Governor Drake.

Bro. F. F. Walters, who was in our great Des Moines campaign several years ago just one night, ministers to the Central Christian Church, the only church in the whole north end of the city, and which, I am thankful to say, is also a very fine congregation. The great railroad shops of the Frisco system are also on that side of the city. There is also a large section of business blocks in North Springfield.

The First Church, which is the mother church, and, was for years inclined to be anti-missionary, has forged her way to the front, taking all the missionary offerings, and under the leadership of N. M. Ragland, who has been there for less than a year, coming from a pastorate in Arkansas of twenty-one years' duration, the church is becoming a great force in this meeting.

It is needless for me to say how much we owe to these pastors and churches. Everybody knows that a great meeting is impossible without co-operation. Every great campaign represents tired hands and weary feet. The success of any great meeting carries with it the fact that the pastor is in it heart and soul. We are workers together with God. When we received this call a year ago, we accepted it, and went into the campaign believing that God was able to stir the city. We asked the prayers of many before coming, and came into the city praying for the work. God is giving the increase. If the weather permits (for we are at the mercy of the weather in a tent) a great meeting is in store.

Asking the effectual, fervent prayers of our righteous brethren everywhere, and assuring you that I will write concerning my helpers in the next issue, I am, Charles Reign Scoville.

The Pacific and Lake Michigan.

[Dedicated to the members of "Pioneer Cottage," Pentwater, Mich.].

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

On arriving at Newport, Ore., for our vacation we had the good fortune to meet THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and while listening to the "innumerable laughing of the sea," or the "Harbor bar's sad moaning," as our moods dictated, we enjoyed a double outing—one on the broad Pacific's beach, the other on far-away lake Michigan's hospitable shores.

We have watched both here and there the splendor and majesty of the rising sun over the shimmering expanse of waters and the glorious sunsets. Our heart has been swelled with patriotism as "old glory" unfurled its folds to Lake Michigan's health-giving breezes. We have gazed, fascinated by the rolling billows when the storm king reigned, and again, as in childhood's days when in the "East," listened to the artillery of heaven.

How we enjoyed it!

The fishing excursions were fine and we voted on the fish-cleaning question (how?) The pond lilies lent us their cheeriness and we rejoiced when the lost watch was found and were glad that the dear brother who found it could be present in the sad emergency, for more troubled vision might have overlooked it. Every scene, every moment's fullness of enjoyment is a reminder to us of God's wisdom and all-pervading presence.

But why multiply words? We worship most reverently in silence when we commune with God through nature.

My dear brother, if God permits us to spend another season's outing, we hope to again exchange greetings in the twofold tie of friendship and Christian fellowship.

A Presbyterian lady who enjoyed reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, expressed a desire to have the paper. On our return home we will send our subscription for one year to her address.

In the spirit of our happy vacation we are fraternally yours,

Jennie Elder Watson.

LONG.

Samuel D. Long was born in Indiana, in 1828, died at Blandensburg, Iowa, August 23, 1907, aged seventy-nine years. He was a faithful Christian, and served both as a deacon and an elder. The funeral service was conducted by E. A. Hastings, at the Blandensburg church.

WHITE.

Departed this life, at his residence in Kansas City, Mo., the 9th day of August, in the 78th year of his age, Prof. Edwin Clay White, A. B., A. M., LL. D. He was born near Richmond, Va., and came with his parents, when a lad, to Lafayette County, Mo. He grew up on a farm, and attended the common school in the neighborhood of Dover, until he was prepared for college. He entered the University of Missouri in 1852 or 1853, from which he was graduated in 1855 or 1856. He was the valedictorian of his class, which at that time meant the "First Honor" man. Subsequently he was given the A. M. degree, and a few years ago he received the degree of LL. D. from his beloved Alma Mater. After his graduation, he entered into a partnership with J. W. McGarvey, now of the Bible College of Kentucky, and established the Dover Academy at Dover, Mo., where he taught successfully until the breaking out of the Civil War. He then taught in St. Louis and in Illinois. At the close of the war he returned to Missouri, and in a short time settled in Kansas City, Mo., and became a teacher in the Central School, which became the High School of this school. He soon became the principal and for about thirty years, with one short interval, he continued the successful and honored head of this large and successful school.

Prof. White was not only a distinguished teacher, but always a kindly helper of every pupil that sought his inspiration. Of the multitude of young men and women who came under his influence all are his attached friends.

He was always and everywhere a Christian gentleman. Having embraced Christianity in his early youth, he was ever steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. As husband, father, brother and friend he was ideal. He was for many years an office-bearer in the Christian Church, and was faithful in all these relations, "even unto death."

He was four times married, each wife bearing him one child. He leaves a wife and three children, two daughters and one son. With the first three wives he lived an aggregate of only five years; with the last wife, Grace D. Matthews, the mother of his son, he lived about twenty-two years. He had no fear of death, and passed away in the good hope of immortality. A good man and true is gone, and multitudes mourn his departure. His funeral sermon was preached in his own house, to a large audience of his fellow citizens. J. V. C. Karnes, a distinguished lawyer and for many years member of the board of trustees of the public schools of Kansas City, after the sermon, pronounced a tender and eloquent tribute to this great teacher and good man. The world is made better by the life of such a man, and heaven is made richer since he has entered there. He was my college mate and life-long friend and I loved him.

Chapter XIV.—A Modern Merger.

Christian works are no more than animate love and faith, as flowers are the animate springtime.—Longfellow.

Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!—Psalm.

A little while and all his saints shall dwell
In hallowed union indivisible.
—Sarah Doudney.

That they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.—Jesus.

Brother Brown was equal to the occasion. Calling all the contending parties to his house, he held a prayer-meeting, and when all had prayed he began to see that there was no possibility of all being fully satisfied as to denominational preference, nor even a chance of satisfying a reasonable majority with one church, and as it stood there was no possibility of building a house of worship under any one name. It was impracticable for them to build more than one, since there would spring up divisions, and they that had worshiped so harmoniously in the revival would be divided and out of harmony. Furthermore, he did not see what there was to hinder all seven of the strongest factions, each leading off and building a small house of worship under their own name and denomination. That would necessitate seven different administrations and seven different preachers, at either seven times the cost of one or the support of none, which latter course would likely ensue. All had equal rights to claim such a course if the right to a strong, vigorous and efficient administration, such as was possible if all held together, should be ignored.

For his own part he was willing to give up his own preference, and to even give up the idea of a church in the modern sense as had been handed down to us through a misapprehension of the Master's teachings and purpose. He would have them consider the question in the light of the mind of him who was the great head over all true believers. Suppose he were present, his promise to be with all true believers to the end of the world and at all times when they are come together in his name. "Let us install him as our pastor to-day," said he, "and ask ourselves if we want to belong to any other body than this over which he is the head. Do we want to build any other house of worship than the one he would designate? Christ certainly did not pray that they might be divided into factions and separate themselves into as many congregations as it is possible to have, until there is no harmony nor union among the redeemed, did he? Let us go back to the word of God and start a congregation or assembly according to the teachings of our Lord and Master, not even allowing the modern or mediæval term church to be applied either to the organization, building or activities at all."

This startled them at first, lest some strange teaching should be implied, but the president proceeded to explain that the word ekklesia is found one hundred and sixteen times in the New Testament, and it is translated assembly, congregation and church arbitrarily, without either term being followed exclusively, but all being used for the very same Greek word; while the Hebrew word Aedah is found about the same number of times in the Old Testament, and is translated congregation or assembly, which Stephen called the ekklesia of the wilderness. Acts 7:38.

"Another word is found in the Old Testament in juxtaposition with this, which means 'called together ones,' and is used in connections that signify a worshiping congregation, and that is what the word ekklesia means in general: the congregation that is assembled for worship. Let us call this the Christian Congregation of Middleton, and the edifice which we build The House of Worship, and leave the word church out of our vocabulary, as it is an invented term since the time of Christ, anyhow, and liable to much abuse and misuse."

The evangelist came forward at this moment, saying: "I have been listening to Mr. Brown's talk and it agrees with my views exactly. The world is looking at the divided and scattering policy of Christianity with suspicion, and Satan delights to have it so. There is scarcely a small town or community in this fair land where Christians are not divided and subdivided by denominational devices, to the defeat of our Master's purpose in convincing the world of the unity and power of his kingdom. And the effect is disastrous to the progress that would otherwise be possible in mighty missionary efforts for the salvation of the races that are going down in sin continually.

"With just a little foresight and forbearance, on the part of leaders and influential Christians, this could all be obviated; but in this free world, with the liberty which the gospel has made possible to every creature, man rushes on, not stopping to consider what his Lord and Master would like to do and what is possible to gain by the doing. Worldly models and glories are ever before him with the glittering successes of others for incentives. He rushes in to get position and glory with the rest. Thus the world is organized and Christianity disorganized, and the kingdom of God has suffered violence through the supposition that it was after the fashion and model of the world. The word 'Church' has come to mean anything and nothing, and is not in good repute, generally speaking, with the rank and file of a large class of people that love the good and want to know God. A large class of people are longing to see the Kingdom of God coming with power in some other form than the present divided and disorganized Church permits. While there are many splendid and godly people in these divisions of Christendom, yet they are lifting a mighty load of impedimenta that is hindering their excellent labor of love. In trying the organizations that they are maintaining, in their honest effort to express the Kingdom of God, they do little else than keep worthless machinery running, from which small returns are derived, if any. You have an opportunity to merge a half dozen of these, that otherwise would be worthless, into one organized effort that can become a power for God in the world, if you only will lay aside your notions of division and come together under the proposition which your neighbor has suggested. Otherwise I can foresee several little toy wheels turning only for the amusement of the world and the delight of the devil." So saying, Mr. Pratt went out and President Brown appointed another meeting for the same purpose the next day.

The more they thought upon the proposition, the more they favored it, since it seemed, and indeed was, the only way that would give them a united body of worshipers; and in fact the only way they could maintain worship and the administration of the Gospel in that place. To split the congregation up into integral parts would absolutely defeat their purpose, and who could be asked to give way and allow the other to say that his preference should prevail? One had as much right as another to stand out and maintain his peculiar choice.

But this plan of union would give them a common denominator on the Scriptural basis, and a primitive name.

The next day the question as to the government of the congregation was settled, upon the suggestion of Mr. Brown, which was that they elect from their body representative men and women, who should hold their term of office in rotation, as elected. To these should be given control and direction of the affairs of the whole body in a similar way that our country is conducted with a president at the head; let him be the pastor or one of their body as they should choose, allowing the government always to reside with the people through representatives, which should be called the Assembly.

The next day they turned their attention to the matter of a doctrinal basis for their organization. It was concluded that inasmuch as the church had in all ages found its great source of trouble and division in doctrinal statements, that they would evade such trouble that they would encounter if they followed the track of the past in formulating a creed.

President Brown suggested that the Bible be taken as the rule of faith and practice, allowing each one to interpret it as he should be led, maintaining unity in essentials, liberty in non-essentials, and charity in all things, so long as the essentials and non-essentials should be determined by an appeal to the one question: Did Jesus require this for salvation? If so, it should be essential; and if not, non-essential. Should doubt or disagreement arise, let charity always come in to dispel schism and factional strife, until time and practice should make perfect their judgment of spiritual things. "'Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus,' shall be our motto, if you do not object," said Mr. Smith. And none objected, for it found a hearty response in every soul present.

It was also decided that inasmuch as all discipline had as its object, not punishment, but reform and restoration of the offender, that no better procedure could be instituted than that found in our Lord's teachings. With such procedure, there would be no necessity of any being turned out of their congregation, unless they themselves chose to be excluded. "If he neglect to hear the Ekklesia, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican," was wisely taken to mean not exclusion and ostracism, as practiced by the ordinary church of to-day, but as an object of pity and prayerful solicitation, that he might be recovered from the snare of the wicked one and saved from his error.

The question of finances was settled upon the basis of the tithing system, not an arbitrary law, for they had none such, but as Brother Pratt explained: "The law of the tithe was instituted long before the Mosaic dispensation. We are now freed from the latter in Christ, but the higher laws of Faith, Hope and Love include much of that law transformed and spiritualized and made possible to keep only as Christ dwells in us by faith. The keeping of any law does not procure merit, but faith in Christ does. Now faith in Christ, is obedience to him and him alone. 'Whatsoever he saith unto you do it,' is the watchword of his true follower, who lives by faith. We have no direct command of Christ to pay the tithe, but it is the teaching of the Scripture, which he said testified of him. Now the tithe had its beginning in Melchisedek who was the type of Christ. Melchisedek commanded it and Abraham paid it. Christ is a priest forever after the order of Melchisedek and we are the spiritual children of Abraham. The inference is strong that we are not less obligated to Christ the antitype, than was our father Abraham to Melchisedek the type. If in that dark age, when men had just begun to emerge from superstition to serve the true God, the tithe was paid to him who was the foreshadow of him who has now been manifest to the world as Lord and Savior, should we do less to show our obedient faith in Christ than they did? And if the type required it as an act of loyalty, I am unable to see how we can demonstrate our loyalty to the antitype, Christ, by a less offering."

These suggestions were gladly received and adopted, and not many days later the sound of hammers and saws and the busy hum of a score of workmen were heard about the house of worship, which was duly finished and the happy congregation was housed before the winter season closed in upon them.

President Brown found a trusty man of the assembly, to whom he gave the care of his farm and he began anew the work of preaching and teaching as pastor of the Middleton Christian congregation. And like Philip, Brother Pratt was caught away to another place to tell the story that had caused such rejoicing and order at Middleton; but not without a well-filled purse, a token of the liberal spirit of the community whose hearts had been touched by his faithful presentation of the word of God.

ECHOES FROM THE CRADLE

The Mother of States and Statesmen.—The Infancy of the Nation —Brilliant Marine and Patriotic Pageant at the Jamestown Exposition.—The Wandering Jews.—The Poor Debtors' Prison.—The Plebeian Nut.—On the War-Path.—Unrolling Scroll of Three Hundred Years.—Historic Days in the Old Dominion

By JAMES L. HILL

The government has stationed seven or eight men at Jamestown Island to act as guides, so that visitors can be shown about and not give tips. The government is paying all bills, thank you.

You have heard of the Philippines, but you ought to see Prince Sansaluna, seventeen years old, absolute ruler of two hundred thousand fierce fighting Moros, who for four hundred years were undefeated by the Spaniards. He is attended by a retinue of slaves. He is said to have four or five wives at home, but this I did not believe, considering his youth. His father killed seven United States soldiers, and the son exhibits the weapon that did the wicked work.

It is no wonder that the attendants lock up in a huge safe each night their literary treasures. Here John Rolfe states that he married Pocahontas "for the good of the plantation, for the glory of God, and for the converting to the true knowledge of God and Jesus Christ an unbelieving creature, namely Pocahontas, with whom my heart and best thoughts are and a long time have been so entangled and enthralled in so intricate a labyrinth that I was even awearied to unwind myself thereout. But Almighty God, who never faileth his that truly invocate his name, hath opened the gate and led me by the hand, that I might safely see and discern the safe paths wherein to tread. Nor was I ignorant of the heavy displeasure which Almighty God conceived against the sons of Levi and Israel for marrying strange wives, nor of the inconveniences which may hereafter arise. Nor am I out of hope but one day to see my country, nor so void of friends, nor mean in birth, but there to obtain a match to my great content." If he waited until his return to England before a marriage, it would then be "with a Christian more pleasing to the eye." But "my settled and long-continued affection" carried the day, and Pocahontas became the second Mrs. Rolfe of course, and "they lived happy ever after."

The suggestive charts show that the number of teachers in thirty years has been increased out of all proportion to the number of scholars. And this in the face, too, of the fact that the other aids to students, like books, specimens, pictures, instruments, have been augmented from almost nothing to nearly everything, and the teachers, too, when fewer, had less preparation. The students in thirty years, in universities and colleges, had increased from 66,000 to 165,000, while the teachers of these students—note the proportionate increase—had gone from 4,000 to 21,000. In the schools of medicine, of law, and of theology, where books are everything, the students increased in thirty years from 16,000 to 48,000, while the teachers of these same students in round numbers had advanced from 1,000 to 8,000. I did not know that they had hitched on a team so out of proportion to the load. It helps explain the new cost of education.

At Williamsburg time turns back a couple of centuries. You see the fine old traits of Southern character, its pride of home, its leisure, its hospitality, its gentle art of idleness, its elaborate deference to ladies, its sharply drawn line of distinction between the races. To add to the uniqueness, here still stands the Powder Horn, now filled with relics and curiosities, and the Poor Debtors' prison. In the South, if a tenant does not pay his rent, a landlord can levy on his furniture, sell it, and eject the debtor, and this when the amount owed is even as small as fifty cents. In the North, if a man lets a house to a bad tenant, he is not called a good business man; and that is about as far as his collection goes.

"On the Warpath" is the playground at Jamestown. It takes the same relation to this exposition that the Trail did to Portland, the Pike to St. Louis, and the Midway to Chicago.

In the open air is an immense relief map or cast of the Panama Canal and its Zone. Being horizontal, it is flowed with just enough water to fill the depression and show the thing off. Posts are set along the course of the canal at intervals of a mile. At the high Continental Divide between the two oceans comes the great Culebra Cut. You see plainly the position of the dam, a mile and a quarter long, 135 feet high, and half a mile thick at the base.

While the Philippine delegation was on the way hither, a child was born, and was named Mary Pacific Pocahontas.

Before you are in the grounds you are pleased with what I will call the evolution of the fence. Earlier expositions had a high, tight-board barricade that gave things the appearance of a stockade such as you see about a country jail or in the grounds of an old-fashioned insane asylum. Here is a floral wire fence two miles long. At each post is planted a trumpet vine. Between the posts is a crimson rambler rose. Honeysuckle vines were planted in May, 1905; and they, being natural to the South, have attained full growth, and the air is filled with fragrance.

Bank-bills are exhibited for twelve and a half cents and for a dollar and a half, bearing the legend, "To counterfeit is death."

The living pictures showed the young Cavaliers of the earliest settlement, indisposed to work, bowling on the green. The English custom of bowling in the open air gives us the name Bowling Green. Most of our games like tennis and football are imported from England, with the exception of the highest and noblest of games, baseball, which is as exclusively American as the literature of the baseball reporter. Shakespeare, Milton and Byron were writers of kindergarten stories compared with such frenzied English as the yellow papers now use in describing a home run with the bases full!

So there are actually fewer male teachers than there were thirty years ago, while the number of female teachers has more than doubled. Lady teachers are most numerous proportionately in the District of Columbia and New England, while male teachers are employed more largely in the South.

Grand Army men are here in unusual numbers. They are the remnant of the 2,778,304 soldiers of the Union army who fought the 700,000 Confederates to a finish at Appomattox, when Lee surrendered 28,805 men. It is noticeable that these visitors are largely from New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois, as these four states furnished about one-half of the total number of volunteers.

The shrines, too, of Confederates, Sons of the Revolution and Colonial Dames are literally four deep. In Williamsburg, for instance, the church which is the official substitute for the deserted church at Jamestown, and which is called the Westminster Abbey of the New World, had its pews removed three times, and was used as an army hospital by Washington in 1781, by the Confederates in 1862, and a few days later by the Union forces under McClellan.

The first church organ was heard here, and the oldest newspaper of continuous publication was issued here.

For the first time in the history of the United States armed troops have been permitted to land on our soil. A vast army of infantry and cavalry is encamped here with uncounted tents in sight. A big demonstration is developed on the thirty-acre plaza called Lee's Parade every night about five o'clock. A splendid band from Mexico that plays brilliantly was sent to the Exposition by the authorities of that country at their own expense as an expression of good feeling toward the United States.

That Eskimo girl, Miss Columbia, whom we saw as an infant with her mother at the Chicago Exposition, and again as a little girl at the fair at Buffalo, was there with the exhibit from the icy home of her parents. The furs that are about them in such profusion are not needed during the dog-days.

In the Philippine village, which covers five and one-half acres, you see heavy carts having solid wheels of mahogany. These wheels are closely jointed on to the axles so that as the wagon moves the axles turn round with the wheels. Here, too, is a harrow made of bamboo, and twenty different instruments for a band of music are made of the same material. Here is a harness, blinders and all, made of hemp.

If a visitor is seeking only a hoochekooche dance, he ought to be told plainly that this exposition is strong on its historical, educational, military and naval lines.

It is suggestive to notice that the church is central to everything, whether it be Jamestown, Williamsburg or Norfolk.

Naming the most characteristic thing is a toss-up between the old Virginia corncracker mill, with its overshot wheel, transferred here from the mountains and still running; the hoarse-voiced "spieler," who, with loud cries and much language, is "on the Warpath," calling out the merits of his particular sideshow; and the slim, pretty Virginia girls, using among themselves a modest badinage in low voice which is the sweetest English in all the world.

In the first eighteen years 7,389 persons arrived in Virginia, and 6,294 died within that time, and almost all of them within a few months after they landed. It seems incredible that anybody should languish in the land of Norfolk oysters, Virginia venison, Smithfield ham, roast 'possum, corn pone and cherry roll. It costs human life to found a settlement, as Plymouth attests. More space is given in history to the Boston Massacre, in which frightful slaughter five were killed.

Many Bible students and ethnologists believe that the Indians of America are descendants of the "lost tribes of Israel." These tribes wandered away from Palestine until they were met by ships coming the other way. "That dear and blessed Pocahontas," as the starving colonists loved to call her, that nonparella of Virginia, who always led the chorus, so to speak, was at least a credit to those wandering Jews. She was her father's "best-loved daughter," and it is noticed that she was always at the head of all bands of Indians bringing corn and venison. She had personal beauty and native grace of bearing, and developed a peculiar modesty, and won for herself in the most fastidious courts of Europe the admiration of all she met. Though a princess, she went over to her new alliance with all the self-abnegation of a Ruth. This bright picture had a sorrowful effacement. She died at Gravesend, a name sadly befitting the scene. The thirty tribes her father ruled have disappeared.

"Alas for them! their day is o'er;
Their fires are out from shore to shore;
No more for them the wild deer bounds;
The plough is on their hunting-grounds."

Here is a specimen sheaf. A small, dun-colored ox, wearing a bridle, without blinders, however, guided by the bits in his mouth by an ancient, picturesque Nazarite, who may have rashly taken a vow never to cut his hair or shave until Henry Clay was elected president. He suffers from no suffocating prosperity. We met him, his beard ripe for the harvest, headed toward Jamestown, where the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep, with only his faithful dog to bear him company.

The amount of each man's tax was here first determined by his apparel. The revenue to-day would be light for some negroes we see, whose garments only make borders for the holes. They may have been taught inexpensiveness in dress to evade taxes.

On the Warpath one of the things that a person can least afford to lose is the noisy scenic reproduction of the epoch-making fight between the Monitor and Merrimac. It is a marvel. Fifty-seven per cent of all who enter the gates attend this spectacular, realistic commemoration. The smoke of powder fills the room.

Intelligent Southerners will speak right out in meeting, and assert that the greatest blessing that ever befell them was their failure to establish a new nation, and the next greatest blessing was the getting rid of slavery at any price. Emancipation was not done as an act of justice, nor of willing, generous statesmanship. It was distinctly stated to be a war measure, a God-imposed necessity. Men introduced slaves first at Jamestown, but the credit of emancipation belongs to God.

This locality is famous for its "first" places. Here was made the first contribution to American literature, when John Smith wrote his "True Relations." Here the first representative political body convened; here in Virginia the first child of English parentage was born; the first recorded English marriage on the soil of the United States was performed; it was from here that Indian corn, tobacco and the potato were first popularized in England, and Norfolk and Smithfield stand first among the markets of the world in handling and shipping the plebeian peanut, of which the American consumption is valued at $14,000,000.

Many of the exhibit palaces and almost all of the State buildings are strongly built, not a few of them of brick, and are to be permanent structures. The mammoth pier, enclosing forty acres of water space, makes me guess that the government will maintain this place opposite her greatest fortress as a review-ground and national parade.

Ninety respectable young women were shipped here to Jamestown from England to become wives of the planters. A young

Dependable Books

—New Commentary on Acts. J. W. McGarvey. $1.00. President McGarvey is one of our ablest commentators, and in this role never appears to better advantage than in Acts. We would like to know that this book was in every Disciple library.

—Paths to the City of God. By Frank W. Gunsaulus. $1.25. Dr. Gunsaulus is pastor of one of our largest American churches. He is president of Armour Institute. He has many rare gifts and among them is an eloquence manifest in his writings as in his speech. Here are fifteen inspiring sermons by one of the great masters of sacred oratory.

—The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. Edited by J. H. Garrison. $2.00. This is an interesting historical resume of our great Restoration movement. Some of the ablest writers among us contribute to "The Introductory Periods:" "Period of Organization;" "The Turbulent Period;" "The Transition Period." The Editor's "Lessons from Our Past" is worth many times the cost of the book.

—The Practice of Prayer. By G. Campbell Morgan. 75 cents. The great evangelist confesses the aim of the book is purely practical. He contends that "Teach us to pray" relates to the cultivation of the habit rather than the manner of prayer. The work is a serious effort to make more universal the "morning watch," the "still hour" and the family prayer circle. It is a very pertinent message. It ought to be communicated to all our people.

—The Development of the Sunday-school—1780-1905. This is the official report of the Eleventh International Sunday-school Convention, held in Toronto. This book sold for $1.50. We overstocked and will sell the next one dozen copies at 75 cents each. It has 716 pages and contains some remarkable addresses in addition to a great deal of valuable statistics and historical data.

—A Typical Mission in China. By W. E. Soothill. $1.50. This is an exceptional book. Secretary Corey says this is the very best book on the actual work of the mission stations. It tells of evangelization, types of converts, native sermons, medical work, temples, and the various religions and their founders, including Christianity. The introduction alone is worth the price of the book.

—The Pedagogical Bible School. By Samuel B. Haslet. Introduction by G. Stanley Hall. $1.25. This book presents concisely a description of the mental characteristics and needs of the pupils at each stage of development. It indicates, too, the pedagogical order of the Bible books, suggesting sections adapted to the various grades of the Sunday-school scholars. It is not only adapted to all Bible school workers, but also for parents, teachers and all engaged in religious and mental training.

We recommend each of these to our patrons.

lady weighing one hundred and twenty pounds was exchanged for one hundred and twenty pounds of tobacco, a pound of girl for a pound of the Indian weed. They received a welcome like that of Grant returning from his tour around the world or that of Dewey returning from his Philippine wars. I was pained to hear the lecturer at the exposition say that on so short a courtship some of them found that they had not chosen appropriate companions, and so were permitted to exchange. This was not nice of them It ought to have been frowned upon.

In sight of the exposition is historic Hampton, the first continuous English settlement on this side of the Atlantic, the site of the National Soldiers' Home, the location of the biggest crab-canning factories in the world, and the place made chiefly famous by Hampton Institute. Where white men warred with Powhatan and his thirty confederated tribes, the government annually now pays this institute $167 each for the education of 120 young Indian braves, and near the spot where slaves were first imported and sold Booker T. Washington and his colored compatriots are educated. It is a rule established by their own custom that no Hampton colored man shall get married until he owns a house and lot.

At Jamestown you see the walls of the Ambler house, which in its history had been burned three times, and at Williamsburg you hear all about the Carys. When Washington at nineteen was taking a special course in engineering at William and Mary College at Williamsburg, he became infatuated, boy like, with one of the college belles, Miss Mary Cary. All matrimonial alliances were decided in those good old times by the paternal head of the family, and so Wilson Cary's reply to the suit of the coming "father of his country" was this: "If that is your business here, sir, I wish you to leave the house, for my daughter has been accustomed to ride in her own coach." Accordingly Mary married Ambler, who was rich. The house at Jamestown being liable to be shelled at the time of the siege of Yorktown, Mary went to Williamsburg and stopped with friends near the House of Burgesses. I continue the narrative as it was given me by the gracious hostess of the Powder Horn, herself typical of Southern ladies at their best, as she states it was told by the grandmothers. Hearing a bugle, Miss Cary rushed to the door just in time to see Washington, at the climax of his whole life, pass, Cornwallis having surrendered to him. General Washington recognized her, tipped his hat to her in the most polite manner, and his officers saluted her; and she fainted! Why, of course. That's the way. It seems that Miss Cary never referred to Washington except in the most complimentary terms, and her father called himself an old fool. All correct. Washington transferred his affections from Mary to Martha, and that, too, is a Williamsburg affair; but we have not time for it. Martha's earlier husband, Parke Custis, and her two Custis children are buried here near the wall of the church.

At the exposition I saw "Lot's wife" in solid rock salt. I had heard much about her, but never saw her.

Newport News, opposite the exposition, a superlative place to stay, with its mammoth dry dock and immense shipping, by the last census broke all records for growth, having gained in ten years 350 per cent.

Young children, like any other impedimenta, can be checked, to be called for later, for 25 cents apiece, at the Mothers' and Children's Home.

On the James River above Jamestown you see where the two pontoon bridges were laid, on which 130,000 Federal troops crossed over to invest Petersburg and Harrison's Landing, so much used in the exchange of prisoners, where not less than six hundred war vessels and transports were anchored at the time of McClellan's much-derided "change of base." The Confederates had assaulted a tremendous array of Union batteries, which tore the rebel brigades into shreds; and, despite the fact that the Union position remained untaken, yet a hurried retreat was ordered. Out of 2,261 engagements and skirmishes of the Civil war, four hundred of them occurred about the headwaters of the James River. They were mile-stones on the way to Richmond.

A "John Smith Bureau" and a John Smith day have been advised for the exposition. Amateur statisticians are computing the number of men named after the first great character developed in this land of promise. Skagway, in Alaska, has six, and Nome fifteen, while Norfolk and its environs have eighty John Smiths. The estimate places the number in the country at 119,000.

We saw the man rise in his airship and turn the thing around. We certainly thought that one event that happeneth unto all would happen unto him, and that it would be a case of "relatives and friends invited to attend without further notice." Airships are better developed at this exposition than the telephone and phonograph and other common things were when I made up my mind to studiously attend the world's fairs. The priceless, immeasureable profit that I have gained at the expositions at Paris, Charleston, Omaha, Buffalo, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, has come from seeing the ideas in things grow, like the typewriter, until it has given work to one million women.

If there lives a man who thinks he could not be taught much at an exposition, I should like to know who he is, and to look at him. He ought to be exhibited at the show. His conceit would make him more colossal than the Ferris wheel.

The government tried to get its brilliant superlative display into one building, but overflowed into another and then into another. Its present immense stores of material, which are beyond price, I thought to be in striking contrast with what the government had when, in October, 1800, it was removed from Philadelphia to Washington. Then the whole force of clerks was only fifty-four, and the records filled five large and seven small boxes.

(To be concluded next week.)

THE UNIVERSAL ELEMENTS OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION

Charles Cuthbert Hall

"Amid the flood of books on the subject of religion there appears every few years one book that dwarfs all others, one that crystalizes the thinking of the Christian world. Such is this book. This man separates himself from the bewildering crossed paths and standing free, grasps clearly the course that is being followed by the Christian age of which he is a part. His knowledge is cosmopolitan and accurate, his logic is clean cut and simple, and his conclusions convincing and optimistic, springing from a faith at once simple and profound in its certainty that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world of men who are his possession." $1.25 net.

Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all; and also because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100 not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.

The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the Doxology and The Lord Is In His Temple.

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

A CONVENTION PRAYER

From every action ministering to strife;
From cruel word that starts the tear;
From all that hurts the peace of life;
From speech we would not make beside the bier
Of brother; from hasty judgment and the wound
That inly bleeds; from wrench of love;
From questionings of another's faith; from sound
That grieves the hearts of saints above—
O save us, Lord, and grant that we
Be filled with thy sweet charity.

—Faces Toward the Light. Sylvanus Stall. This is for the devotional hour. Every phase of the Christian life—its joys and sorrows, its temptations and triumphs—is treated in reverent and deeply spiritual manner that is sure to prove helpful and inspiring to every reader. $1.00.

—Lectures on Preaching. By Phillips Brooks. These are stenographic reports of lectures delivered by this prince of preachers before the divinity school of Yale College. It is a beautifully bound volume. Considering the wealth of learning it contains, together with the beauty of expression and inspiration to become a useful preacher, it is cheap at $1.30.

—Huck's Synopsis of the First Three Gospels. By Ross Z. Finney. This contains an analytical outline of the parallel passages of the synoptics that has received the commendation of many able Bible scholars. The appendices are valuable. In them are listed Old Testament quotations in the synoptics, Johannine parallels to the synoptics, parallels and duplicates, etc. $1.00.

—Christianity's Storm Center. By Charles Stelzli. To the author the storm center is the city, and the problem of the city is an industrial one. He believes that if the church can be aroused to face the problem, investigate conditions and alter its own methods it will win the fight for uniting the church and the laboring masses. Through it all there prevails a contagious optimism. $1.00.

—The Evangelistic Note. By W. J. Dawson. The address on "Self-Reservation" was delivered to the students of Yale University. The remaining thirteen were given during a revival held by this truly great preacher for Newell Dwight Hillis in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. These are all on lofty spiritual plan and will be most helpful. $1.25.

—Object Lessons for Children. By C. H. Tyndall. The eye is the first avenue to the soul. It is the shortest. It is the easiest and quickest. The author believes in using the eye as a medium for the communication of instruction in the Scriptures and in the ways of life. The book contains a great many brief but strikingly illustrated talks to children. It will be helpful to every preacher and Bible or secular school-teacher. $1.00.

—The Cyclopedic Handbook to the Bible. Agnes Green. This is one of the profoundest and most helpful introductions to the Scriptures ever offered the reading public. It treats of the language, canon, versions, transmissions, etc.; of the credentials and claims; of the inspiration and revelation; of the interpretation of the Scriptures and their practical application. The introductions of the various divisions of the work are also of deep interest. $1.50, prepaid.

—Never before in our history as a people has there been such need of having the ever-progressive, yet sanely conservative spirit of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST widely disseminated among the churches. If our readers have never before felt justified in letting other things care for themselves for a while, if need be, that they might give themselves unreservedly to placing this paper in the homes of the people, they are now. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is giving to our great benevolent, educational and missionary interests practically all the support they are getting from our great national papers. It is not waging fratricidal strife nor crossfiring on the brethren, but is devoting itself to the great mission of extending the knowledge and practice of primitive Christianity throughout the earth. If our course is meeting with your approval send at once for samples and subscription blanks and give us some practical proofs of your endorsement.

Our Centennial and Christian Union

By F. W. Collins

The thoughts of our people are turned with high expectation toward our Centennial. Preparation for an enthusiastic observance was early begun and is steadily continued. The increase of membership, the development of a deeper spiritual life, the enlargement of our missionary enterprises, the improved material equipment of our churches and the more adequate endowment of our schools are all worthy and essential parts of a comprehensive Centennial plan. But it must be noted that these are such aims as any religious body might set for itself, and are, in fact, such aims as all religious bodies are constantly seeking to realize. Deeply as these activities should engross our energies, will any possible degree of success here constitute a sufficient ground for our rejoicing, or does our particular position call for something specific and distinctive?

Our historical characteristic is our plea for Christian union. This is our "reason for being." The "Declaration and Address" whose centennial we celebrate is a union document, the first reasoned, constructive statement and appeal to the Christian world for oneness in Christ. The one thing, therefore, that will give real significance to our Centennial, will be the century's achievement toward Christian union. Of special interest to us will be our own relation to that achievement.

The rapid progress toward union is one of the most conspicuous facts in recent religious history. As to our own contribution to this progress, a variety of opinions will be evident. But this much at least may be said: We have proposed as a definite method of union a return to the primitive gospel. With a good degree of success during a hundred years of history, we have sought to urge and to illustrate this method of union. It may also be said with truth that the method of union proposed by us harmonizes with the spirit of the time. "Back to Christ" is a commonplace of present religious thought. The difference between our plea and the larger movement is a difference of emphasis, of definition and of comprehensiveness, rather than of essential spirit. It ought to be expected that this general union spirit and Christward movement would result in definite effort to bring Christian people closer together in practical Christian work. Our loyalty to our plea will be in no wise compromised, but rather our sincerity will be vindicated, by willing co-operation with such union effort. No severer test of the genuineness of our interest in Christian union is possible than our attitude toward current union movements. How much of party spirit, consciously or unconsciously, underlies our zealous advocacy of Christian union? We can not complain if our words are judged by our actions.

The most conspicuous union movement now before the American churches is the appeal of the New York Interchurch Conference. Concerning this appeal, a few facts need to be held clearly and constantly in view:

1. The motive of the movement is in exact harmony with the purpose of Christ's prayer that they all may be one "that the world may believe." The avowed purpose of the appeal is a more thorough evangelization, that districts now neglected may be systematically given the privilege of the gospel.

2. The character of the movement is such as to give the best guarantee of permanent results. It is not a theory for discussion, but a plan for work. This appeals strongly to our practical age, and should win the approval of all who desire the progress of the kingdom of God.

3. Its form of presentation is such as to preserve the largest liberty to the religious bodies approving the plan. It is the general spirit and method of which endorsement is asked, while all details of application are matters for local determination, so that a general endorsement of the plan may be freely given without committing any congregation to a disadvantageous policy. Most of the adverse discussion of the subject would have been impossible had this fact been kept in mind.

4. While no one regards this plan as an attainment of the goal, it is a step, and a long step, in the right direction. No one who really knows the spirit and purpose of the Campbells can doubt with what exultant joy they would welcome a proposal of this kind. Nor, conversely, can it be doubted with what disappointment and mortification they would contemplate an assembly at the birthplace of their union movement, gathered to celebrate its beginning, after a practical repudiation of their essential aim and spirit. And actual repudiation would be hardly more culpable than a tardy and half-hearted acquiescence.

To celebrate growth in equipment and power without corresponding development of the spirit of union is to celebrate a party triumph in a party spirit, and this is denominationalism pure and simple. Our endorsement of the Interchurch Conference appeal should be first and most spontaneous. The leadership of every advance movement in Christian union is logically ours. Are we not in the Kingdom for such a time as this? But if we shall altogether hold our peace at this time, and refuse a place in the union councils of the churches of our country, then will deliverance from disunion arise to God's people from another place, and we and our fathers' plea will lose our position of influence and no longer command the serious attention of our brethren. Is there not serious significance in some of the present signs of the times among us? Let it not be said of us that we knew not the time of our visitation.

GUEST OF MY SOUL

Dwell evermore within me, Holy Guest,
Nor need I make beyond thee more of quest,
For in thy sweet companionship is rest.

Thy brooding presence over space was known
Before the universe from naught had grown,
Or erstwhile all the beauteous stars were strown.

In human hearts through ages thou hast dwelt;
And human spirits thy sweet influence felt
Wherever they in penitence have knelt.

On heads of chosen ones thy tongue of fire
Has dwelt in power to comfort and inspire,
To guard and help amid all dangers dire.

On mortal spirit thou hast made impact
So close that nothing more of joy it lacked
As onward o'er the heavenly way it tracked.

Thy words of fire upon the sacred page
Have lighted up the steps of youth and age,
And yet the learning of the world engage.

So, now dwell with me through the weary years;
Lead gently through all trials, toils and tears,
Till, spirit freed, celestial portal nears.

Current Events

Governor Folk, in a speech at Nashville, declared that the Democratic party should make the tariff the paramount issue in the coming presidential campaign. He connected tariff reform with the general reform movement by asserting that the present tariff is a form of graft differing in method, but not in spirit or effect, from the land steals, insurance frauds, capital conspiracies and other games of graft that have recently been uncovered. Mr. Folk did not presume to mention the candidate who, in his judgment, is best entitled to carry the banner of his party in the coming campaign. Perhaps modesty restrained him.

The Issue.

A Chicago minister is to perform a marriage ceremony at a roller skating rink while the entire party, minister included, glide gracefully over the floor on rollers. He says there is nothing in the Bible against marrying people while roller-skating. We're not so sure about that. How about, "Let all things be done decently and in order"?

Count Zeppelin, a 69-year-old aeronaut, has just made what is considered the most successful "flight" in the history of aerial navigation. In a dirigible baloon over 400 feet long he sailed around Lake Constance, in Switzerland, and returned to the starting point after keeping his machine at a speed of nearly forty miles an hour for four hours and performing all sorts of evolutions which showed complete control of the craft. He carried a crew of nine men. We failed to record the complete failure of the Walter Wellman expedition which undertook a few weeks ago to reach the North Pole by airship. His machine was most ingeniously devised and elaborately equipped. In fact there was nothing the matter with it except that it could not sail against the wind. It happened that there was a great deal of wind to sail against. Mr. Wellman was lucky enough to be wrecked before he got very far from his base of supplies.

Aerial Navigation.

Judge Walter Clark, chief justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, asserts, in an article in the "Independent," that the Supreme Court of the United States has no lawful or constitutional authority to nullify any act of Congress by declaring it contrary to the Federal Constitution. He argues from the history of the constitutional convention of 1787 and the events immediately preceding to show that it was not intended to permit such a vast centralization of power in the hands of a little group of men who are not elected by the people and who hold office for life. Madison's proposition to give the Supreme Court the right of vetoing a bill before its final passage was voted down by the convention, as was also the proposal to allow a veto after passage. Judge Clark urges that, with this debate and this adverse decision of the convention on record, it is a gross usurpation of power for the Supreme Court to assume that the Constitution implies the power which the framers of the Constitution definitely refused to grant. He argues also on grounds of public policy that it is unwise to place so much power in the hands of a group of "elderly lawyers" who are not responsible to the people. Speaking of the nullification of the income tax law a few years ago by the interpretation which "the court imputed to language used by a bare majority of the fifty-five men who met in Philadelphia in 1787"—a group of men who Judge Clark evidently thinks compare very unfavorably with a congress of to-day—he says: "Such methods of controlling the policy of government are no whit more tolerable than the conduct of the augurs of old, who gave the permission for peace or war, for battle or other public movements, by declaring from the flights of birds, the inspection of the entrails of fowls, or equally wise devices, that the omens were lucky or unlucky." This contempt for the Constitution and its interpreters is much more radical than any opinion that has ever been attributed to the President even in his most radical moments.

The Power of the Supreme Court.

The Constitution does not give a veto power to the Supreme Court. That right, which was denied by the Constitution of 1787, has never been assumed. But the Constitution does say (article III, section 2) that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this constitution." An individual who considers himself deprived of any right guaranteed by the Constitution may carry his appeal to the Supreme Court. If the court finds that he has really been deprived of a constitutional right, its decision naturally nullifies any act of Congress or legislature whose enforcement was the occasion of the injury. It is difficult to see how the court could exercise jurisdiction in cases arising under the Constitution without coming into collision with statutes which are not in harmony with the Constitution. On the whole, we guess the Constitution is safe, and that the Supreme Court will continue to do business. Even the exigencies of the railroad conflict in North Carolina will scarcely convince any great number of people that the nation can profitably dispense with the services of the "nine elderly lawyers" who interpret the document in which are recorded the sentiments of the "fifty-five dead men."

What the Constitution Says.

There is no denying that there is at present a marked increase of temperance sentiment in many parts of the country. Georgia has adopted prohibition. Oklahoma's new constitution includes a prohibition clause. A prohibition governor has been elected in Mississippi. The governor of North Carolina (heedless of the classic remark which one of his predecessors made to the governor of South Carolina) announces that he will fight for prohibition in his state. It is significant that this movement is strongest in the South. It has become evident to thinking men throughout the South that the negro problem can not be solved until the liquor problem is solved. A drunk negro, even a drinking negro, is always dangerous. So is a drunk white man, for that matter, but his dangerousness is not always so obvious. Prohibition in the South is a matter of self-protection. It is characteristic of the new temperance movement that it relies less on the sentimental and religious argument and more upon the economic and social. More is said about the folly, the waste, the social danger of drink than about its sinfulness. A good many thousand men who are not very religious and to whom the idea of "sin" seems somewhat formal, academic, and inconsequential, are coming to realize that liquor makes poor workmen, unreliable employes and dangerous members of society.

The New Temperance Movement.

The rapid strides which the temperance cause is making in many states in closing the saloons under local option through the agitation of prohibitionists and the anti-saloon league, is causing even the daily papers to sit up and take notice. In a recent leading editorial in the "Globe-Democrat" of this city the German-American Press Association is reproved for some unwise resolutions passed at their late meeting, and its members are reminded that

> "Thousands of intelligent German-Americans, who can see that in the present temper of the country the liquor traffic must either be mended or ended, are going to make themselves a part of a movement which will free the traffic of evils and dangers, and give it a better standing, as a means of putting an end to the eternal threat of prohibition, either by statute or the use of the taxing power."

We are sure that when the movement referred to shall "free the traffic of evils and dangers" there will not be enough left of it to quarrel about. Meanwhile let the good work of closing the saloons go bravely and merrily on.

Germans and Saloons.

While we are all rejoicing that Oklahoma has voted for prohibition, it might be well to ask how it was done. Not without systematic effort, organization and co-operation was the end accomplished. The churches made common cause against the saloon. Many pastors took the field, made speeches, held rallies and subordinated their theological differences to their common conviction that the saloons should go. They not only worked together but with the anti-saloon league. By united effort the day was won. It was a great victory. It speaks well for the character of the people. The president will approve their constitution, and Oklahoma will enter the sisterhood of states as the forty-sixth star on our flag, shining all the brighter because it represents a state which refuses to legalize the liquor traffic.

Editorial

Some First Principles.

VIII.—Prayer as a Spiritual Force.

In following the article on "Baptism a Pledge to Holiness" with one on prayer, we are not to be understood as teaching that no one shall pray until after baptism. These great spiritual experiences are not to be arranged in any such mechanical order. The truth is, the very moment the human soul becomes conscious of its need of God and begins to grope after Him, even though it be in the dark, it instinctively, either in spoken words or in unspoken desires and aspirations, makes its petition for divine help. This is natural and inevitable. Nor will God spurn the prayers of any soul that is turning to Him for light and strength. It is to be expected, however, that when a believing penitent has committed himself intelligently to God in the solemn covenant of baptism and receives in return, from God, the peace which comes only to the trusting, obedient soul, that prayer will have a new meaning and value to him, and that he will have a spiritual relish for communion with God which was impossible before that time.

It is a very low plane on which to place prayer, to think of it as a duty, merely, which is expected of Christians. This would be placing the intercourse of children with their parents and their requests for such things as they need from parents, as a duty which they are expected to observe in order to keep on good terms with them! We are to think of prayer, rather, as one of the highest privileges ever conferred upon mortals—the privilege of coming into the immediate presence of God without intervention of priest, or any other intermediary, and making known our requests unto Him, and holding loving communion with Him. To make this approach to God all the more sacred and yet easier for us, Christ has revealed Him to us as "our Father," and we have the blessed privilege of so addressing Him. In what other way could Jesus have so accentuated the value of prayer, and the sacredness of the privilege, as by himself praying to God as Father, and teaching us to do likewise? If God is our Father, we can approach Him with confidence, knowing that He loves us, and that He will withhold no good thing from us. Even if in our blindness we should make request of Him for that which would not be good for us, His very love for us will prompt Him to withhold it. When we ask and receive not, we may be sure that one of two things is true: either we have asked amiss, that is, without faith or from the wrong motive, or else the thing we have asked would not be good for us. To find fault with God as some professed Christians have done, because He does not grant every request we make of Him, is to manifest the temper of a spoiled child, showing a lack of true faith in God as our Father. The spirit of submission—"Not my will but thine be done"—is essential to all true prayer.

But we do not rise to the full and just appreciation of prayer until we come to recognize it as a mighty spiritual force. The mightiest forces in the universe are the unseen forces. Thought-power is a great energy which lies beyond all physical phenomena. Heart-power, which is only another name for love, has been called the greatest thing in the world. These two forces are united in true prayer and constitute a spiritual energy before which seemingly insuperable obstacles have been removed and mountains of difficulty cast into the sea. What a trinity of forces are faith, hope and love! And yet all these are blended in the sublime act of prayer. There is nothing that ought to be done that is too difficult to be accomplished through prayer and united effort.

But let us think of prayer as a spiritual exercise for strengthening and developing Christian character. A recent writer has said: "Prayer brings us into an even greater conscious harmony with the Infinite, the one pearl of great price; for it is this harmony which brings all other things. Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, and thus is its own answer, as the sincere desire made active and accomplished by faith sooner or later gives place to realization; for faith is an inevitable magnet, and attracts to itself whatever it fervently desires and calmly and persistently expects. This is absolute, and the results will be absolute in exact proportion as this operation of the thought-forces, as this faith is absolute, and relative in exact proportion as it is relative. The Master said, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them and ye shall have them. Can any law be more clearly enunciated, can anything be more definite and more absolute than this? According to thy faith be it unto thee. Regarded in its right and true light, than prayer there is nothing more scientific, nothing more valuable, nothing more effective."

If prayer helps us to realize our oneness with God, what other agency can exert a more transforming influence on our lives and characters? Companionship with the great and pure and good has always been regarded as one of the most helpful means of bringing out the very best there is in us. What must it be, then, to be brought into conscious fellowship with God through prayer, and to have our thoughts and our affections centered on Him! How instinctively the soul puts away sham and pretense, all hypocrisy and guile, all base and unworthy motives, when it comes into the presence of God to whisper its deepest desires! This unconscious stretching of the soul upward to meet the demands of effectual prayer, cannot but result in spiritual enlargement. To come into the spiritual atmosphere which makes prayer possible, is to receive a moral tonic and spiritual invigoration. Who does not feel that if he cherishes sin in his heart and practices iniquity without any purpose of relinquishing his sins, that prayer is an abomination in the sight of God; and that we can only pray effectively as we pray sincerely; and that we cannot pray sincerely, except as we are earnestly striving to put away all known evil from our lives?

Prayer is practicing reciprocity with God. We call unto Him and he answers us; we knock and He opens unto us; we trust Him and He trusts us, and commits His grace and truth unto us. Our hearts hunger for Him, and He feeds us; our souls thirst, and He gives us drink. He is more willing to give, than we are to receive. Prayer puts the infinite resources of God within our reach. Is it not passing strange that we do not use it more?

Our Federation Conference at Norfolk.

It is now six years since the form of co-operation with other religious bodies known as federation was first brought formally before one of our national conventions. Before that time the matter had been mentioned casually in addresses and editorials, but since the Omaha convention the subject has occupied large space in our religious papers, in our annual congresses and in other meetings of the brotherhood. It is true that much of the newspaper discussion was calculated to confuse the public mind rather than to clarify it on the question at issue. We speak calmly and advisedly when we say that there has been and is a determined effort on the part of some to misrepresent the real meaning and spirit of federation and to prejudice the brotherhood against it. In spite of this fact, however, we believe the brethren generally who are seeking for the truth on this, as on all other questions involving the welfare of the brotherhood, have reached a very clear understanding on this subject. They have come to grasp pretty clearly the following facts:

1. Federation is not Christian union as we understand it and plead for it, but it is a form of Christian co-operation wherein the different religious bodies may work together so far as is now practical without the sacrifice of their conscientious convictions, for the accomplishment of certain great ends which we all in common desire.

2. The basis of this co-operation which is submitted for our approval imposes no doctrinal creed or test on those who co-operate, but requires only that they hold to Jesus Christ, our divine Lord, as the head of the church, and it disclaims any desire or purpose to exercise any authority over the co-operating churches. In other words, it discards, for the purpose of this co-operation, all creeds, save that which we have always insisted upon as the essential creed—the acceptance of the divinity and lordship of Jesus, and under him it invites all to a free, voluntary co-operation for the accomplishment of those objects which can be better accomplished by united than by separate action.

3. The endorsement of this basis of federation, and our co-operation under it with other religious bodies, carries with it no endorsement whatever of the errors which may be held by any of the co-operating bodies, but it does involve recognition of the Christian faith and character of those who thus acknowledge a common faith in Christ and a willingness to co-operate, as far as possible, for the promotion of his kingdom.

4. Co-operation under this basis of federation puts no religious body and no local church in a position where it surrenders its freedom of action and is compelled to do what it conscientiously disapproves or else be untrue to the basis of co-operation. The idea which has been industriously circulated that we are to submit all our evangelistic operations to the approval of a committee which may, out of jealousy or for other reasons, prohibit such action, is absolutely without authority. No doubt cases will arise here and there in which fraternal consultation of the co-operating bodies as to the best method of proceeding in any given district, to avoid friction and a waste of resources, will be advisable, and it would be a strange sort of plea for Christian union that would not recognize the wisdom of such comity and courtesy in Christian work. Only those conscious of being prompted by partisan motives need object to such a course.

5. While federation is not Christian union in the New Testament sense, it is a step in that direction, and the co-operation which it secures is the best possible preparation for a more vital union, and the best method of hastening the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples. Above all things we need to understand each other better and to love each other more in order that we may be led by Christ into that vital union with him which is essential to our union with each other. It is easy to see how joining hands and hearts with other followers of Christ in closing the saloons, and in caring for the poor and the neglected classes of society, and in other works of righteousness and charity, would prepare the way for co-operation in other forms of service until we shall be able to work together in evangelistic meetings without friction or partisan jealousy.

6. It is now clearly understood by all who wish to know the truth, that no terms of federation which have been proposed in any state, as in Oregon or Maine or elsewhere, are under consideration, but only the basis proposed by the interchurch conference in New York City, in November, 1905, which is designed to supersede all others and itself is subject to such future amendment as time and experience may show to be necessary.

7. The approval of this basis of federation as a tentative working basis of co-operation carries with it the privilege of representation in the future great interchurch conferences, the next of which is to be held in 1908, for the further discussion and consideration of the great problem of Christian union. There is no doubt but what our brethren will be there in large numbers, but whether as mere onlookers along with Roman Catholics and High Church Episcopalians who, because they belong to "the church" will have no part with their "separated brethren," or whether as delegates with the right to a vote and voice in the deliberations of that body, will be determined by the action of this meeting. If we have no message for the religious world on the subject of Christian union, let us, by all means, exclude ourselves from any participation in this great council of Protestant Christians.

With these facts clearly grasped can there be any doubt in the minds of the brethren as to what should be the substance at least of our response to this great body of Christian people, among whom were a large number of our own representative men? A failure on our part to meet this overture to a closer union in a spirit of Christian fraternity, and to pledge our co-operation with it to the utmost limit of our ability while remaining loyal to our own providential mission, would be the greatest blunder in our history and would practically nullify our plea for Christian union, in the ears of those with whom we would thus refuse to co-operate in so far as we can now do in the interest of our common Christianity. Such a blunder we believe to be utterly impossible by the enlightened representative men and women among us who feel the pressure and responsibility of our special mission as the advocates and promoters of Christian unity.

Notes and Comments.

The convention prayer by George H. Combs, pastor of the Independence Boulevard Christian Church, of Kansas City, who will preside over the American Christian Missionary Convention at Norfolk, will, we are sure, touch a responsive chord in the hearts of all our readers. The prayer is the more timely and important because there are questions to be considered at the coming convention concerning which there is a difference of opinion, and this always makes a demand on our Christian charity. It is both unmanly and unchristian to avoid facing questions of vital importance to the welfare of the brotherhood because such questions are likely to provoke discussion. We must expect that brethren, taught to think for themselves and associated with a religious movement that guarantees freedom of opinion will differ on many questions, but we also have the right to expect that brethren who have caught the real spirit of such a movement, and have been taught of Christ, will know how to differ as brethren and conduct their discussions in a dignified and fraternal spirit. This is the meaning and spirit of Brother Combs' convention prayer.

But the prevalence of brotherly love and the desire for peace and unity, while not shunning the discussion of questions that must be met and decided, will avoid the introduction into any of our councils of questions which are unprofitable, and from a discussion of which no possible good can come. For instance, we have had a heated controversy for some time in one of our journals on the subject of "tainted money," arising from Mr. Rockefeller's gift to our Foreign Society. As we have before pointed out, there is no difference of opinion among us as to the unlawfulness and injustice of the methods pursued by the Standard Oil Company, and not a man among us would agree to accept a dollar from that corporation, or from anybody connected with it, or from anybody in sympathy with its methods, on the condition that such gift would purchase silence as to the unrighteousness practiced by that corporation. It is held by some of the brethren that the very acceptance of money from the president of that company carries with it an obligation on the part of those soliciting it and using it for religious purposes to condone its sins. Others—and these appear to be largely in the majority—deny that any such obligation or result follows from the acceptance of an unconditioned gift. Now surely this is a question about which brethren may differ and still be honest and Christian in their motives. Shall we then introduce a resolution into the convention with the view of enforcing unanimity of sentiment? Or shall we accord to each other the liberty to be "fully persuaded in his own opinion," without being put under a ban for the crime of differing from us?

Time helps to solve a good many problems. Let us not be in too great haste, but wait for the "sober second thought" which is always the wiser thought, and which comes when the evidence is all in and when there has been time for careful sifting and weighing of the reasons pro and con. One thing we do know and feel assured of, and that is the absolute honesty, integrity and incorruptibility of the man who is at the head of our Foreign Missionary work, and of those immediately associated with him in its administration. That they are men who would be influenced to endorse dishonest and corrupt business methods, because they have been made the custodians and administrators of funds from men associated with corporations whose business methods have been condemned, is absolutely unbelievable, and the brotherhood will repudiate any such charge or inference.

In view of these facts, which we believe are indisputable facts, we believe the peace and unity of the brotherhood will best be conserved by the cessation of the discussion on this question, while we turn our attention to matters of far graver importance that have to do with our freedom of thought and unity of action, and, therefore, with the success of the great work in which we are engaged. There is not a thoughtful man among us to-day, who knows the situation, who does not see that we are fronting a crisis which will require the same high courage, the same devotion to truth and righteousness, the same love of liberty and of unity, and the same personal devotion to Jesus Christ, which animated our fathers in the beginning of this movement. And may the God of our fathers guide us by his Spirit to such clearness of vision and wisdom of action as will send our movement forward with increased acceleration to its Centennial celebration!

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Editor, having an engagement to fill in Ohio, a few days ago, enjoyed a day trip through the great states of Illinois and Indiana and a small strip of the Buckeye State. One is always impressed with the fertility of the soil and the vast agricultural resources of these imperial commonwealths in passing through them at this season of the year. Just now the great American staple, King Corn, holds the center of the stage and waves his rustling scepter over the grain markets of the world. It was enough to reconcile even a hay-fever victim to the summer-like weather of September, to see the great fields of grain slowly ripening and filling out the long ears of corn before the advent of King Frost. A recent writer has said: "If I had my way, the plant named 'Indian Maize' should be the American flower. It is beautiful to the eye, with its coat of gold and its scarf of silk. In majestic stature and nobility it surpasses every other flower of the field. From the time when it saved the life of the colonists till to-day when it is the richest of all our products, its culture has been interwoven with the hopes and history of our American land. * * It is indigenous to the New World. Indian corn is an American plant. Moreover, it is the plant of democracy. * * It is with the plain people that the cornfield is associated in history and in memory. The city boys of to-day have a thousand good things of which the country-bred youth never dreamed; but, as if to make up in one precious heritage, the country boy knew the fields of growing corn. The old fields, once full of golden ears, are now filled with golden memories." Aye, the cornfield has produced what is more valuable than corn—some of the best brain and brawn of our American manhood.

The finest thing, however, that we remember ever to have seen in print about corn, is the report of a speech by Gov. Oglesby, of Illinois, who, at a Good Fellowship Club meeting, in Chicago, having been called on at the close for a speech, and having all his lifetime been a farmer, took the corn for his text, and referring to it as a symbol of immortality, which has to die in order to live its larger life, he went on to say: "Aye, the corn, the loyal corn, within whose yellow heart there is health and strength for all the nations. The corn triumphant, that, with the aid of man, hath made victorious procession across the tufted plain, and laid foundation for the social excellence that is, and is yet to be. This glorious plant, transmuted by the alchemy of God, sustains the warrior in battle, the poet in song, and strengthens everywhere the thousand arms that work the purposes of life. Oh that I had the voice of song, or skill to translate into tones the harmonies, the symphonies and oratorios that roll across my soul when, standing, sometimes by day and sometimes by night, upon the borders of this verdant sea, I note a world of promise, and then before one-half a year is gone I view its full fruition and see its heaped gold await the need of man! Majestic, fruitful, wondrous plant! Thou greatest among the manifestations of the wisdom and love of God, that may be seen in all the fields or upon the hillsides or in the valleys!" It is said that when the old governor sat down there was lacking the usual applause. The company was awed into silence, as this prophet of the cornfield had opened up to them a new wealth of meaning and value and beauty in what they had regarded as commonplace.

Many of the gray-headed boys and girls who read the Easy Chair, will be carried back by the mention of the cornfield to the old country home with its "orchard and meadow and deep-tangled wildwood," and to the cornfield with its long rows of rustling blades, and later its silken tassel, and then the full corn in the ear. They will recall dropping corn in the early springtime, and then replanting the missing hills, and especially will they remember thinning the corn on wet days when they had hoped for a holiday. They will recall the pleasure of "laying by" the crop, that is, closing the period of cultivation and letting nature do the rest; and later in the autumn, when the maples outside were wearing crimson and gold, they will remember cutting the corn with a long keen cornknife, and putting it into shocks, with the yellow pumpkins lying here and there through the field. Or, perhaps, they gathered the corn later in the season from the stalk and threw it in great piles down in front of the corn crib where later, at the "corn-shucking," when the neighbors were invited in, it was to be husked and thrown into the crib, accompanied often with cheery songs that rang out on the night air, or with shouts of victory in the number of red ears husked or when one party had triumphed over another in finishing up its part of the divided pile. Meantime, the matrons and maidens of the neighborhood were having a quilting bee, and after supper, and when all the festivities of the evening were ended, the girls, with cheeks as red as the fall apples, were to be taken home—the crowning joy of the day! Can any crop recall a longer train of golden memories than that of our Indian corn from the time its tiny blade pushes through the clod, in the early springtime, down to the last corn-shucking in the late autumn? And there was in it all so much of nature, so much of outdoor life, so much of healthful exercise, so much of good cheer, that it is no wonder that from the cornfields of the nation have gone forth some of the noblest characters in our history, whose strong and sinewy hands have helped to guide our ship of state through all the storms which have beset it.

But see how we have wandered! We had begun to tell about going over into the western part of Ohio, to the beautiful town of Hicksville, to attend one of those "yearly meetings" which have come down as a custom out of the remote past. Away back yonder in the days of Alexander Campbell and Walter Scott and the Haydens and other men of renown, whose names are written in our annals, the churches in Ohio and particularly, we think, in the Western Reserve, were accustomed to hold these yearly meetings which sometimes met in the grove when no meeting-house was large enough to hold the crowds. They are not business meetings, but occasions when the churches of a county, or a given district, meet together and have some well-known preacher come and preach to them the sweet old evangel of Paul and Simon Peter. It isn't a bad sort of meeting, by any means, but a little missionary business and enthusiasm injected into them might make them more profitable. F. C. Lake is the minister at Hicksville. He is one of those young Canadians of whom we have several among us, who in following their ministerial aims and ambitions, find themselves under the shelter of the Stars and Stripes instead of the Union Jack. He is a son of Hiram College, an institution that has helped to replenish our ministry with many of our brightest and best men. It was through Brother Lake's invitation that a man west of the Mississippi river, whose face the brethren there had never seen, was invited to be their speaker. There was a meeting on Saturday night and three on the Lord's day, at two of which the invited speaker addressed the people, while at the afternoon service the pastor himself preached a pointed and practical sermon. The church, which dates from 1875, has a handsome building which was well filled at all these services by a most intelligent and appreciative audience. Quite a number of brethren from the country round about were present, including two of our ministers. The people seemed pleased with the message we brought them, and we were pleased with their interest, with their spirit, with their preacher, with the cordial hospitality of our hosts, with the excellent music, and with the goodly fellowship which we had with these Buckeye saints.

A Noble Confession of Faith

[Editorial.]

We referred last week to the tendency in certain reactionary circles to call in question the faith and loyalty of certain brethren among us who are entitled to the fullest confidence and Christian esteem of the brotherhood, both for their faith in Christ and their Christian character. One of the men thus assailed is A. McLean, president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Replying to this charge he makes this noble confession of faith, which every one who knows him will recognize as a true rescript of his life.

"I have as little sympathy with any teaching or teacher that would discredit the Lord Jesus Christ, or that would undermine the authority of the Holy Book, as any man alive. I believe in the deity of Jesus Christ; that he was God manifested in the flesh; that on his head are many diadems; that in his hand there is the scepter of universal dominion; that on his vesture and on his thigh there is the inscription 'King of kings and Lord of lords"; that to him every knee shall bow, and that he shall fill and control all things. My constant desire is to know him and to be like him in heart, in thought and in character. My ambition is to serve him every day and to the fullest. Some day I trust I shall have a place among those who shall cast upon the jasper pavement their crowns of amaranth and gold and say: 'Thou art worthy to receive the power, the riches, and wisdom, and might, and glory, and blessing.' I accept the New Testament as an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice. I hold that it is worth more than all the books that have been written since the world began. It is inspired of God and is able to make us wise unto salvation. I believe in the Christianity of Christ and his apostles, in the evangelism of the Book of Acts, and in the theology of the New Testament. I leave questions relating to the text and the canon and to the date and authorship of the various books to those who have the scholarship and apparatus and leisure to discuss such questions profitably. I do not feel called upon before missionary conventions or elsewhere to pronounce upon questions about which I know as little as the editor of the ———— I exalt Jesus the Christ as the Savior and Lord of all; I magnify the Book and urge all to obey its precepts and exemplify its spirit."

Recently, such well-known brethren as W. J. Lhamon, C. M. Sharpe, G. D. Edwards and M. A. Hart were published in one of our journals as disloyal to the faith! Every one of these brethren, we feel sure, would subscribe most heartily to the foregoing statement as expressing their own deepest religious convictions. What a travesty on the liberty of the press, and especially the religious press, to thus misrepresent before the world brethren who would lay down their lives for Christ, and who are laying them down in humble, Christlike vice for Christ and the church!

"The Ministerial Career"

By Milo Atkinson

Under this title an editorial writer in a widely circulated daily paper recently said some very sensible things, and set forth a phase of the subject that is quite hopeful. He said:

"There has been manifested a disposition in some quarters of late years to depreciate the clerical profession, and to assume that in society, as largely reconstructed by scientific teaching and modern ideas, there was very little, if any, need for its continuance."

Our writer meets this assumption with the statement that "the right sort of a man who truly devotes himself to the interests and welfare of his people, and remains long enough with them to get hold of their affections and impress their understanding, may reach a position worthy of the ambition, and calling out the best powers of men of the highest order of ability and character." And he bases that statement on the fact that the man of the world, "immersed and absorbed as he must be in his daily occupations, will gladly turn to know what the right and the best things are and to help him to reach them, to a broad-minded, large-hearted guide and leader, such as ministers ought to be, such as many ministers are; one who, with an unselfish desire to help others, gives up his life not only to help in that sphere, but who can be turned to in all the emergencies and sore trials and sorrows of life, not for professional advice, or as agent for underwriters of celestial insurance, but as a wise, true counsellor and sympathetic friend."

To quote further: "It is a time in our history when everything material and temporal has become engrossing; the pursuit of wealth and pleasure absorb us far too much, and there never was a time when men of the first order were more needed to keep alive in us the consciousness of higher things, and to persuade us to the practice of those fundamental virtues which we are prone to forget. Such men are vital to the best life of the country, and there is reason to believe that their number will increase." For "the scope of the minister * * * may well attract and occupy the ablest men."

Surely when a secular writer, in a paper that makes no pretensions to being religious, can see so much in the ministerial career, preachers ought to see vast reason for encouragement. I am reminded of what Cuyler was wont to say: "No monarch's throne and no presidential chair is so exalted as a pulpit in which a living preacher presents a living Christ to dying souls."

Christian Union in Practice

By C. C. Redgrave

The recent communications to your valued paper on the subject of union between the Baptists and the people called Christians, have been read with deepening interest by every follower of Christ in the Dominion of Canada. I rejoice to have a part in the realization of this long-desired goal. I came to Saskatoon nearly a year ago, in search of an opening to do some independent missionary work in this great and growing northwest. Finding the Baptist Church in this city led by a union man I decided to cast in my lot with them and took fellowship as a member of the congregation. I found several members of churches of Christ statedly worshipping with this people. One later joined the church and was inducted into the office of deacon, "without change of doctrine," as the preacher took pains to state when extending the hand of fellowship.

For several months I have supplied the pulpit of this church, preaching the truth as it is in Jesus, just as I would in any of our own churches in the States. The sermon on the name "Christian" was received with public expressions of approval and published almost verbatim in the leading city paper. My church membership was consummated after this address. During last summer I was employed by the Baptist Missionary Society to do missionary work on the prairies, and I am now doing similar work under these auspices in the Eagle Lake district, where I am living on a homestead grant of 160 acres. The present incumbent of the Baptist church in Saskatoon, said very recently in a public meeting, that the "name" was the chief barrier between the union of the Baptists and Christians, and that that barrier would not long exist. He said, moreover, that the Baptist Church stood for "religious democracy and the utter worthlessness of human creeds." And a few days ago he stated in public his willingness to break bread every Lord's day, if the congregation would so vote. These are very hopeful signs and indicate that this union of baptized believers is nearer than we think.

It may be of interest to some of my preaching brethren for me to say that there are plenty of opportunities to preach the pure gospel on the prairies and at the same time prove up a homestead of 160 acres of as fine wheat land as is found anywhere, securing a good home for the future and at the same time laying a good foundation for the spiritual welfare of future generations. The best missionary sermon a man can preach is to go out himself and lead in the van of pioneer work.

Reign of the Faddist

By W. T. Moore

The American people claim a divine right to denounce despotism in all of its forms. Speaking broadly, they are never so happy as when they are contrasting their own political institutions with those of other countries. Doubtless they have good reason for this feeling. In many respects our great Republic is worthy of all the praise it receives from its citizens. Of course, it is possible to find faults in our system as well as its administration; but, in the main, it is not to be denied that our political institutions are to be preferred to those of other countries.

At the same time it is by no means certain that Americans are not great faddists, and are very generally under a despotism which is as imperious and unreasonable as any despotism to be found in other lands. I fear that in many respects we are the slaves of faddism. We are practically ruled by what is called fashion, or any particular habit or custom that finds enough support to give it considerable popularity.

Let me illustrate what I mean. Several years ago the fad of parlor skating literally took possession of the people of this country, and nearly everywhere money was invested in skating rinks, and the people generally went half crazy in following up the fad. Later the skating rink craze became disreputable for the reason that, like all insane excesses, it became a center of many evils. It was finally discontinued, having broken down of its own weight.

The next fad of this kind was the bicycle. Nearly everybody who could raise a few dollars, no matter at what sacrifice, had to possess a bicycle. The whole country became dominated by this unreasonable craze. The bicycle had its uses, and so for as these uses are concerned it has found a permanent place. But as a plaything it has ceased to be attractive.

We are now under the reign of the automobile craze. At present these toys are too expensive for them to become immensely popular, but already many people are sacrificing every penny that can be spared, and money that ought not to be spared, in order to secure one of these fashionable vehicles. No one takes into account how many lives are sacrificed by this despotic sway. If a battle was fought in the interests of some tyrant who is seeking to bring the people into slavery, and one hundred soldiers should be killed in this battle, who are defending the rights of the people, a monument would be erected to their memory and lamentations would be raised all over the land. But no one seems to care for the waste of life that follows the reign of the automobile tyrant.

Turning away from these striking illustrations, the point I am making could find support in almost any prominent characteristic of the fashionable world. It may not be known to the people generally that thousands of men and women are employed in the great central cities of fashion in order to make goods salable. Our hard-earned money is spent in the interests of manufacturers. We talk about our tariff system. If our people were as genuine as they ought to be, and as patriotic as they profess to be, we should have no trouble, whatever, about the tariff question. But while we follow the lead of these fashion makers, and willingly place ourselves under their absolute control, we shall find all sorts of panaceas necessary to cure our political evils and our social crazes.

Nor is religion free from the reign of the faddist. When our religious movement was started one of its aims was the overthrow of religious faddism. At the beginning of the nineteenth century the religious world was swayed by the reign of faddists. Habits and customs of the most extraordinary kind prevailed. Many of these were held to be as sacred as if they had the fullest sanction of the word of God, while they were in reality opposed to the plainest teaching of that word. The fight which our noble pioneers made, with respect to these habits and customs, rendered them extremely unpopular with the reigning classes. These pioneers were denounced as infidels, as iconoclasts, as Ishmaelites, etc., etc. But the good work went on, and our religious movement gained its first and greatest triumphs in overcoming the prevailing faddism of the day. Like Nehemiah, they found the walls of Jerusalem covered with rubbish, and they had to clear the way through this rubbish before they could do anything in the matter of building up the spiritual walls that had been marred and broken by those who had forsaken the law of the Lord for the traditions of the fathers. For a time our religious movement refused to give in its submission to any prevailing faddism, no matter how strong its influence was. But in these latter days it seems to me there is a strong tendency to put our necks under the yoke of the despotism of the religious faddists, no matter what becomes of the great principles for which we have so long contended. With some, the question is no longer, "What does the Lord say?" but "What does the faddist say?" I am not troubled about the higher criticism, although in some respects this is also purely a fad; I am not troubled about soundness with respect to the faith, for I believe that most of our brethren are sound in the faith; I am not troubled about how far we shall co-operate with what we call the "sects"; this, too, with most other matters of this kind, will come out all right in the long run, provided we have an eye single to the word of God, and honestly try to follow its teaching. But I am troubled about the reign of the faddist in our churches, for I see in this an evil which is not only an evil in itself, but will contribute largely, if it is allowed to prevail, in the fostering of every evil way. Nor is this a new thing among us. As far back as 1857, Brother Benjamin Franklin wrote of these faddists, or, as he called them, "hobbyists," as follows:

"There are several classes of these hobbyists, with their various hobbies, each man of them, however, only having one, which, with him, is the center around which everything revolves, and the touch-stone by which everything is to be tried. Even the Bible itself must come before each man's hobby, be tried by it, and compelled to testify in favor of it, or be rejected as not from God! Mention a state mission to one of these, and the first thing that enters his head is the question, 'Will it support my beau ideal, which I expect to support me?' If it will make that the center of its revolutions and attractions and make itself auxiliary and subservient to that end and thus declare itself, I am for it.' Present the claim of the missionary society, and another replies: 'Will it become auxiliary to my center of attraction, and thus strengthen the hobby that is carrying me into notice? If it will, it can have my gracious smiles, good will and application. If not, I am down unon it and down upon all that are in favor of it.' However good men may sympathize with these several classes of persons, pray for them, and wish them well, one thing is inevitable; and that is, that so far as the work of God is concerned, they are unavailable. Whatever talent, influence and means they possess can not be brought to bear upon anything that is simply the work of God; that has an eye single to the divine authority and the glory of God. If you will not allow them to make the cause of God and the work of God subservient to their ends, they will not touch a finger to it. On the other hand, they will throw themselves back in the harness, exert all the negative influence in their power, and, if possible, sink the cause. You may explain it as you please, excuse on the ground of honest mistakes or make it the deliberate design to retard and oppose; we shall have no controversy here, as it matters nothing to us about the intention. We do not have to try them, judge them, nor punish; all we are concerned with is the simple fact that they are not available, and we need not count anything upon them. Their entire power and influence, we must understand distinctly, are to be incessantly in the negative.

"They may object to state missions, the English, Australian or Jerusalem missions, or any others that may be suggested; but can not any man, with the least discrimination, see as clear as sunbeams, that on the part of all that class of men who build up nothing, do nothing in any way, have no success in any thing, but are simply, as far as they think prudent to risk it, ekeing out their inharmonious feelings, it is mere cant? Who are the men that encourage the people of God? Who are they that strengthen and inspire the churches with love, zeal and harmony? Who are they that restore peace, order and good will among the saved, and increase their numbers? Who are they now that are gathering men into the fold of Christ? Look over the land, brethren, and you can see who they are. They are the men who are doing the work in the churches at home, and all around on every side. They are the men who are pushing our state missions, the foreign missions, Bible revision, and every other good work. These are the men to whom we must look for the promotion of the cause. The other class may preach their hobbies till doomsday; but no success will follow; no love will be infused; no good will be inspired. All that class of preachers will die under their influence and their candlestick will very soon be removed out of its place. You might as well think of keeping the life, power and spirit of the Christian religion in active exercise by preachng the eternal decrees of Calvinism,-the empty ceremonies of Episcopalianism, or the superiority of the Methodist church policy, as by preaching any one of a half dozen hobbies that some brethren are now trying to ride into notice. The breath of life can not be breathed into them."

With these words I close the present article, but I shall have something to say in other articles which will point out very definitely some of the dangers to which we are exposed during the reign of the faddists.

Christ's Revelation of God

By W. C. Morro

Ph. D., of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.

The next great fact about God which Jesus impressed upon the world was the revelation of what was in the mind of God. This follows as a necessary sequel upon his revelation of God as a person. This latter conception could not have been complete if he had not made known the mental attitude and kindly disposition of this divine person. From the earliest times the human mind has wandered in recurring circles of speculation as to what may be the disposition of the mind of the deity towards man. From the Socratic conception of a beneficent and good-designing deity the Greek mind sank through the intermediate stage of the almost passive God of the Aristotelian philosophy, to the absolutely indifferent God of the Epicureans. Among the non-Christian thinkers of the Christian centuries these same views with some variations find adherents. The Pantheist, who refuses to believe in the personality of God, of course finds in the deity no kindly designs towards man. The Deists believed him to be wholly indifferent to the fate of either man or the universe. And thus have men who have been denied or have denied themselves the divine light of Jesus, speculated about the disposition of the divine mind towards his offspring. The striking and impressive fact is that human speculation rarely if ever attains to the thought of an ever-gracious, kindly-disposed and beneficent deity apart from the influence of the founder of the Christian religion. I do not say that his conception was entirely new, or, having been held in previous periods of human history, was in his age entirely forgotten, but his revelation of divine grace was higher than had ever been known before, and, since the close of his life, no mind has ever reached an equal height unless it has traveled the road of belief in the claims and revelation of Jesus.

On one occasion I had the duty of describing to a friend of mine the nature and disposition of an aged man well known to me, but unknown to my friend. Certain circumstances had brougnt him to the attention of my friend and the impression made by reports was not altogether favorable. It was a pleasing task for me to describe him as genial, tender-hearted and sympathetic. Similarly God was unknown or misunderstood by the world to whom Jesus came. "No man knoweth the Father save the Son." He knew the Father perfectly, but to the world God was unknown. Jesus everywhere assumes that God was righteous, for this was to his hearers a familiar truth. But He is more than merely righteous; that is, the good of God goes beyond mere passive goodness. He is actively beneficent. But the Jews had known this through the testimony of Psalmists and Prophets. One of the places in the Old Testament where the beneficence is most clearly presented is in the closing chapters of Isaiah. Here the righteousness of God is the vindicative activity of God in defending and vindicating his saints, his chosen people. But the revelation made by Jesus of the Father's goodness goes beyond that truth. He is kind and beneficent to his people not merely because they are His chosen, His elect nation; not merely because they are living righteously, but the very essence of the divine grace lies in the statement that God is "kind towards the unthankful and evil" (Luke 6:35). This truth is amplified in the sermon on the Mount thus: "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and unjust" (Matt. 5:45).

The same principle is to be seen in the use of the term Father as applied to God. When used in the Old Testament as a title for God, this term is restricted by two limitations. He is the Father by virtue of the fact that He is the creator (Is. 64:8) and his Fatherhood was not conceived of as extending beyond the bounds of Israel (Is. 63:16). I do not propose to venture very far into the discussion as to whether the term Father as used by Jesus was universal or particular, but it can be shown at once that neither of these limitations narrows the use of the term made by Jesus. To Jesus God is Father of men in a higher sense than by creation and others than Israel sustain a filial relation to Him. The essence of His Fatherly spirit is manifested by His universal grace, just as the true spirit of sonship comes to expression in a like unlimited kindness (Matt. 5:48; Luke 6:36). It seems that the true answer to the above mentioned query is to be found in the recognition of the fact that the term Father is used in two senses. Its correlative, "sons of God," is applicable in the New Testament to those only who show fealty and obedience. God is in a sense the Father of these and of these only. But in another sense the term Father is that one word of human speech and human relationship which best connotes the conception of God's universal and gracious attitude towards sinful man as a race. In this sense it is found upon the lips of Jesus and marks an elevation in the conception of God which is above anything expressed by man before or which, apart from the revelation of Jesus, has been attained by man since.

The apex of the world's knowledge of God is to be found in the revelation made by Jesus, and the medium of this revelation is the entire personal activity of Christ himself. His revelation of God was not the utterance of any one truth nor of many truths; it consists not merely in any statement of belief nor in the sum total of all the convictions of his heart; not merely in the contents of any gospel nor in all the gospels, but in all of these and in all else, recorded and unrecorded, which he said, taught and did. It is embodied most completely in his efforts and success in saving men. "No one knoweth the Father save the Son and he to whomsoever the Son willeth to reveal him." Close upon this affirmation of his power to make God known follows his most gracious and condescending invitation. The connection is not accidental. But Christ's effort to save men comes to its clearest expression in the death upon the cross and in this is the Father most clearly revealed. This pledge of God's only-begotten son becomes an earnest that God will with him give to us all else that is for our welfare. Through this becomes known the goodness and kindness of God (Rom. 8:3). In this rests the inseparable and eternal love of God (Rom. 8:39). It not only shows us God's love and relationship to us, but also makes clear our duty to Him (Rom. 8:29).

There are many other ways besides the making known the facts of His personality and the uncovering of thoughts and attitude manward of the deity, by which Jesus revealed God to us, but in none is his method and his great work more unmistakable than in these. The greatness of the revelation does not consist in the fact that thus was made known to the world something which it had never known before, or which having once been known it had forgotten. In fact, there are few abstract truths on this or any other topic which were uttered by Jesus for the first time in human history. The most of them at least had been either paralleled or approximated by prophets before the age of Jesus. But the utterance of such truths was sporadic. The men who had these insights appeared rarely, and so far as we know their lives, it seems that they did not live constantly upon these heights of vision, nor did they permit these truths to shape their life and conduct. With Jesus, however, these truths were not the utterances born of moments of devotion or of special inspiration. They were the calm, meditated utterances of one who is never represented as wavering or doubting. There never came to him dark hours when his soul despised and his faith forsook him. To him at every moment of his life God was the same to-day and forever. Further, they were not merely the statements of his belief. They were the moulds in which his life, character and daily conduct were cast and in which these remained till they were hardened into constant and immutable shape. Because God loves man and cares for him, Jesus could live without anxiety for the things of life. Because God bestows his blessings graciously and unstintingly, Jesus could likewise give up his life to ministration, asking not that he in turn should be ministered unto.

What About the Churches

By W. H. Newell

One aim that should be given a prominent place in our Centennial program is that we seek to make the Church, as an organization, a more adequate representative of Christ and thus increase its honor and efficiency among men. There are many and diverse views held concerning the legitimate form and function of the church organization. One extreme is represented by the Roman Catholic hierarchy with its strong, compact organization, which demands absolute obedience to its decrees and seeks to regulate even the minutest details of life. The other extreme, which has quite naturally been reached by the great pendulum of human thought, would make the church organization a very negligible quantity indeed, a voluntary aggregation of people drawn together by some common truths and sympathies, vague and poorly defined, and with absolutely no constituted authority to give direction and efficiency to the work. The conditions and purposes of membership are alike but little emphasized, and hence the organization (or, rather, the aggregation) languishes from want of definiteness in plan and vision.

Inefficient and cumbrous forms of church government have rendered the very thought of church distasteful to many persons. Men say: "I admire your Christ but care nothing for your church." They "balk" at the suggestion of anything that seems "churchy." They will attend religious services in a tent or at a public hall, when you can not induce them to attend the regular services in a church building. The sight of such a structure seems repellant to many persons.

But the presence of a visible, corporate Church is absolutely necessary. Every truth seeks an incarnation; it lays hold of some agency by which to disseminate itself. Truth germs do not inoculate the atmosphere. The Church was not an afterthought in the purpose of Christ, but was and is fundamental. Given the Christ life and the Christ purpose, and the Christ church becomes inevitable. God's people are his representatives; their testimony, his voice; their character, his mirror; their suffering, his wick.

Stokes well says: "The foundation of the church, as a society, was absolutely necessary if the doctrine and teaching of Christ were to be preserved. . . . And yet here again the supreme wisdom of the Divine plan has been amply vindicated, and the experience of the New Testament has shown that if there had not been a church instituted by Christ, and established with himself as its foundation rock and chief corner stone, the wholesome doctrine and supernatural teachings of Christ would soon have vanished."

We see then that the Church is to serve a great purpose in the Divine economy. It is unfortunate that this divinely chosen exponent of Christ has forfeited in such a large measure her holy birthright, and has become such an inefficient representative. How may the Church regain the confidence and the sympathy of the mass of the people? is a question worthy of all consideration.

The answer is, by becoming such a vigorous, earnest, efficient evangel of the Christ that her works will be her all-sufficient credential.

Two-Mile Religion

By Louis S. Cupp

"Whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile go with him two." Jesus refers to the custom of enforced service practiced by Roman couriers and soldiers in subject provinces. It was a form of service particularly distasteful to the Jews. It is little wonder that they considered this a "hard saying."

Christianity always gives more than is expected. It is full of surprises. It is the only religion of "the other cheek also." It is the only religion that inculcated the forgiving spirit, that would give the overcoat to the man who took your coat. One can not travel in this Christian land without being the constant recipient of unexpected courtesies. Christianity is pre-eminently the religion of the kind heart. It is unique in being a two-mile religion.

Jesus teaches the importance of cheerful submission to unpleasant tasks. If an unpleasant task drives you one mile, prove your fitness for a better task by going with it two miles.

He points out the sure road to promotion. Do a little better than any one has a right to expect of you. The man who only fills his place will prove a fixture in that place, or lose it to a larger man. Anybody can go a mile under compulsion, but it is the second mile that wins. It reveals more interest in the task than in the wages, and this is the man the employer is seeking to fill a higher place. Sometimes a man will say, "I earn all I get." If you earn only your wages where will your employer's profit come in?

There is no virtue in the first mile of compulsion. The virtue comes in the second mile, where the matter of voluntary choice begins. It is this margin of voluntary service beyond the rim of compulsory service which proves a man's fitness for promotion. If you would be promoted, do some things you are not required to do. Go the second mile. The first mile is crowded. But on the second mile you can have what you wish.

The text teaches the value of persistence. Many a man loses in the struggle of life because he gives up too soon. He goes a long mile and quits within sight of the goal. The best prizes are toward the end of the second mile. Another blow of the hammer would have broken the rock. A few more strokes of the pick and the pocket of nuggets would have been discovered. A few feet deeper and the thirsty well-digger would have found an abundant flow of water. If the position had been held another three months promotion would have come. If the discouraged pastor had remained another year with his flock all the threatening clouds might have dispersed, and he would have entered upon a long and useful pastorate. Do not be a quitter. Stick to your task a little longer. Try the second mile.

The principle of the second mile is the test of our religion. Anybody can keep sweet when nothing goes wrong. But the real test of amiability is with those second mile provocations. Any one can be hospitable to an agreeable guest. But the test of real hospitality comes when you have a disagreeable guest. Custom and self-respect compel a conventional return of courtesies and kindnesses. But all the grace and charm of real courtesy and kindness begin when you cross the limit of conventionality —after you pass the end of the first mile. The touch of personal interest, the air of genial sympathy, these are not prescribed in the manuals of etiquette. "For if ye love them that love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others?" Anybody can do that. The Pharisees were adepts in keeping within "the irreducible minimum of propriety." But the religion of the second mile was beyond them. Christianity begins at the exact point where conventionality is satisfied. Except our righteousness shall have in it something of the second mile—except our righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees—we shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Our religion is tested by the amount of love we put into it. Love is not compelled. Love is free. Love does not count miles.

Public opinion compels a man to be a respectable citizen. Self-respect compels him to be a moral man. There is no virtue in a man being merely as good as he is compelled to be. But no man is compelled to be a Christian. Rather, he is impelled to be one. Christianity is a voluntary service, a sacred privilege, which lies wholly out on the second mile of moral progress. It is inward responsiveness to the call of God toward a higher life, a passionate yearning to be more than one is required to be. It is a soul-hunger that will not be satisfied with one mile of companionship with God, but must go with him to the end of the road. It is the gentle wooing of the life of faith, a sweet submissiveness to service that is love-constrained.

Our Budget

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Cincinnati, O., Sept. 30.—Receipts to date, $302,000. Another mail yet.

Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

—See particulars about "The Christian-Evangelist" Special on page 1270.

—Secretaries of organized work please note the announcement of their meeting at Norfolk, to be found on another page.

—The Sunday-school supplies of the Dominion of Canada are placed under the charge of R. W. Stevenson, of Toronto, Can. It is hoped the users of the Sunday-school literature of this House will order through him. Brother Stevenson will also handle books and receive orders for anything advertised by The Christian Publishing Company. As he is provincial evangelist for Ontario and editor of the "Christian Messenger," it is expected that Christian Publishing Company literature will become more popular than ever among our Canadian brethren.

—The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist, on his return from his trip to Ohio had the pleasure of a pleasant visit between trains at Fort Wayne with Brothers Shamhart and Miller, two of our pastors there, whom we found at the Monday ministerial alliance. The ministers were grappling that morning with the problem of whether they would invite Dr. Chapman to lead them in a series of simultaneous services. The timid, fearful, half-hearted utterances of the ministers painfully impressed us with the weakness of our Protestant denominationalism in grappling with city evangelization. Some were afraid to throw themselves into the campaign lest other churches should receive the chief benefit of the meetings in the way of new converts! Is there any truer test of the genuineness of our Christianity, which is essentially unselfish, than our willingness and ability to co-operate with other followers of Christ in trying to advance his kingdom? After the alliance we had a delightful hour of fellowship with Brothers Miller and Shamhart, who lunched with us at the hotel, while we talked over the things of the Kingdom. The work in their respective congregations is prospering. Brother Miller has taken unto himself a wife recently, and will hereafter work in double harness. Naturally we shall expect corresponding results.

—"Surely if one could see us here fighting for our faith they would help us," such is a sentence in a letter from Mrs. Louise Lentz, of Englewood, a rapidly growing town in Western Kansas. —Members of the Christian Church in Missouri who attend the state fair at Sedalia, October 5-11, are invited to the pavilion where the Ladies' Aid Society of the First Christian Church will serve meals. —The last report from the office of the Foreign Society stated that the receipts were only about $16,000 short of the $300,000. There was still some hope of reaching the $300,000. This, however, was not possible without the returns from two bequests which had been promised by those who had the management of the estates in hand.

—A. R. Teachout, of Cleveland, has given $500 to the San Francisco Reconstruction Fund. A friend in Chicago gives $100, and a friend in Atlanta, Ill., has given $100. The church there, of which R. V. SOFT WHITE HANDS

In One Night by the Use of Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment.

Soak the hands on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry, and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, and purest and sweetest of emollients. Wear old gloves, or bandage lightly in old, soft cotton or linen. For preserving, purifying and beautifying the hands, for removing redness, roughness, and irritations, for rashes and eczemas, with shapeless nails and painful finger ends, this treatment works wonders.

—J. A. Holton, of St. Matthews, Ky., has accepted a call from the church at Longview, Tex., and began his work there September 22, with two confessions at the first service. Our church in this prosperous business center in northeast Texas comprises many of the leading men and women of the community. A new building of stone and cement is nearing completion. It is centrally located and has all modern improvements.

—L. N. D. Wells, on his return from his vacation, during which he supplied regularly for J. G. Slater at the East End Church, Pittsburg, finds the new building at East Orange, N. J., well under way. The corner stone is to be laid at once. The present quarters are packed. There is great interest in the Bible school, and on account of lack of room this has to be carried on in sections. This church will send a goodly delegation to Norfolk.

—Seeing the notice that A. Martin is to retire from the pastorate at Davenport, Ia., to enter upon the evangelistic field, J. F. Floyd, minister of the Coburg Street Christian Church, St. John, New Brunswick, Canada, sends us a fine recommendation of Brother Martin's abilities in this direction. He has had experience of his work in several successful meetings, and says it is the kind that is needed among our people.

—W. R. Hunt, whose letter appears on another page, is, with his family, now in England, visiting his home folk after years of service in the China mission field. He is the only one now living of the four young enthusiasts who went out from W. T. Moore's training class to take the gospel to the Chinese. He writes: "My heart is sad as I think of the loss of dear Brother Arnold. I can not easily realize that of the four boys I alone am left to work awhile for China's redemption." Brother Hunt and his family will come to America in the early spring.

—I. N. Grisso will close his work with the church at Plainfield, Ind., where he has been for three years, on or before the fourth Sunday in December. This congregation is harmonious, has the largest and best C. W. B. M. auxiliary in the eighth district, and about one-fourth of all money raised has been given to missions. It is out of debt. Those wanting to know about its pulpit may write to Dr. J. S. Ragan. Brother Grisso has, we believe, not decided upon a location and is, therefore, free to respond to communications from churches wanting a pastor.

—A new church building which stands as a monument to the meeting held by Allen Wilson and H. J. Corwine something over a year ago at Latham, Mo., represents the liberality of a splendid band of Disciples. The house and lot cost $4,225, and $1,600 of this amount had to be recently provided. T. A. Abbott made the appeal and $1,725 was the response, all to be paid within the year. Ben F. Hill, of California, Mo., says the church at Latham will hold him in grateful remembrance. Brother Hill and his son, Harry, have been holding a meeting for the church, and his next meeting is to be with Brother Prunty and his congregation in the fine, new building at Brookfield, Mo. The work at California has been blessed. Since January there have been eighty-three accessions, and the Bible school is 50 per cent better than a year ago.

Church Extension Receipts.

Comparative Statement For Third Week of September, 1906, and Third Week of September, 1907.

Contributions from Churches.		Contributions from Individuals.		Number Contributing Churches.
1906	$2,817.94	1906	$597.95	1906	181
1907	2,306.48	1907	161.53	1907	167
Loss	$ 511.46	Loss	$436.42	Loss	14

It will be noticed that for the third week of September, as compared with the third week of September, 1906, we have fallen off $511.46 in receipts from the churches, and $436.42 from individuals, making a total falling off in receipts of $947.88.

The majority of strong churches have not yet been heard from. When their offerings come we expect to make substantial gains over last year. This is the time when individuals should send Annuity money. For information, address G. W. Muckley, Corresponding Secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and send all remittances to him.

—Samuel Gregg, minister of our church at Fremont, Neb., has been appointed by the N. C. M. S. as state evangelist. He will enter upon his new duties early in October. The work at Fremont is left in good condition. During the past year there have been some seventy added to the membership. It is a good field for an active and strong preacher.

—The Bible school of El Reno, Okla., recently had commencement exercises for the Teacher Training Department. There were 11 graduates who had completed a two-years' course. Diplomas were granted by the Sunday-school Association of Oklahoma. O. L. Lyon delivered the commencement address and Brother Smith writes us that the exercises will be repeated each year.

—The annual report of the missions of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in Japan shows 247 new members for the year and $827 given by native Christians for the work. The total native membership is now nearly 1,200. Four missionary families from Japan are now in the United States—two on needed furloughs and two because of illness. Brother Madden says that the work is, for this reason, much crippled and asks if there are not men at home who will fill these vacant places. Our missionaries are stationed at five cities in Japan. They have twenty out-stations and fifteen native evangelists.

Four Years' Work in Columbus, O.

The third Lord's day in September was the beginning of our fifth year's labor with the Broad Street (formerly the Central) Church in this city. The day was a beautiful one, there was a large audience and four took membership at the morning worship, making twenty since August 25. We used for the first time our new pipe organ, built to replace the one destroyed by fire. On Tuesday evening following the minister and his family were given a delightful reception at the church, strengthening the already strong bonds which unite us in the work for Christ. In the four years some 350 names have been added to our register, of whom 111 were baptized. In these years the debts on the old building at Third and Gay streets were liquidated, the property sold, the lot at Broad and Twenty-first streets secured and the beautiful, commodious and well-arranged house erected, the whole plant costing about $55,000. These four years have witnessed, also, substantial progress in all our congregations in the city. West Fourth Avenue built the auditorium, having had the Bible school part of the building several years, and now with a plant worth $25,000 and under the leadership of Walter Mansell, that congregation is growing rapidly and doing a fine work in the North End. A church was organized in Linden Heights, a beautiful and well-equipped house, worth $8,000, erected and L. A. Warren is doing a fine work in that suburb. The Wilson Avenue congregation (formerly the Franklin Avenue) having sold its property and removed a mile or so to the southeast, has the foundation in for a house to cost $15,000 or $20,000, and Brother Dodd has been with that work for nearly four years. It is one of the best locations in town for a great Bible chool and church. The Chicago Avenue Church has recently called C. M. Arthur, of Lancaster, and is looking forward to an aggressive work under his leadership. Our newest organization—our sixth congregation—has been constituted within the past two months on the South Side and Brother Bridwell, who is temporarily preaching there, is hopeful of building up a strong congregation. The outlook was never brighter for our Israel in the capital city than now.

The Nashville churches extend a cordial welcome to all.

The "Christian-Evangelist" Special.

The special train which will carry THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST party and friends to the Norfolk convention is scheduled to leave St. Louis at 2 p. m., Tuesday, October 8. It will leave Pana, Ill., at 4 o'clock, Mattoon at 5:30, Paris at 6:17 and arrive at Indianapolis at 9:20. It will leave there at 9:40 and is due to arrive at forty-five minutes past midnight in Cincinnati. It will leave there at 1 o'clock, and is timed to arrive at Richmond early Thursday morning so that those desiring it may take a carriage drive around the city and catch the boat going down the James River and arrive at Norfolk Thursday night. This train is so scheduled as to pass through some of the finest of the mountain scenery in daylight on Wednesday. Stops will be made at several points on the journey.

The round trip railroad fare is $25 from St. Louis, and the fare between St. Louis and Norfolk, each way, is $5 in the Pullman and $2.50 in the tourist cars for the two nights' service. Those going with us should let us know at once; otherwise they may be disappointed in some detail of the journey, even if we could find room for them on the train at the last moment. It is necessary for us to make reservations of sleepers well in advance, as well as the hotel accommodations and friends should specify tourist or Pullman, and state whether they wish us to engage rooms at hotels.

Southwest Oregon.

The Churches of Christ of the South-West District, Oregon, will meet in convention in Medford, Ore., October 10, 11. Several speakers outside the district, as well as many within the borders, will take part in the program. E. R. Moon, state Sunday-school evangelist; Dean E. C. Sanderson, president of Eugene Divinity School; Mrs. G. S. O. Humbert, president of C. W. B. M.; F. E. Billington, state corresponding secretary, are all expected to be present. Every church should send delegates.

Marion F. Horn,
Pres. S.-W. Dist.

On to Norfolk.

It is not yet too late to send your preacher to Norfolk. The trip and the Convention will refresh his spirit and increase his usefulness. He will bring home the cream of the great assembly. Paying his expenses is the best investment your church can make just now.

The Annual International Convention is the great representative gathering of the brotherhood. It is the privilege as well as the duty of your church to be worthily represented there. All the general activities of the past year will be reported there and all the work for the year ahead will be outlined. Be a part of it.

Norfolk is half-way to Pittsburg, 1909, and the great Centennial Convention. Hear Charles Reign Scoville's Centennial address at Norfolk, thank God, and take courage for the two years that remain of the Centennial campaign.

W. R. Warren,
Centennial Secretary.

The Convention at Norfolk.

The date set for the opening of our great convention is now near at hand. The people of Tidewater section are desirous that this shall be one of the best conventions ever held. No sacrifice of time or effort has been too great for our local churches to do everything essential to this end. It has been the leading object of interest, for the entire year, and it is very earnestly hoped that we may have such a representative gathering of Disciples here during the convention as will make a lasting impression on this community. Those who have not lodgings in advance will find full information and directions at the registration rooms, which are located in the business center of the city, not far from any of the depots or steamboat landings. These rooms are on the ground floor of the Arcade just opposite convention hall, and only a few steps from the Monticello Hotel. Some of our brethren will doubtless be called upon to make a sacrifice to attend, but it will be such a sacrifice as will be abundantly rewarded.

M. W. Mason.

State and National Secretaries' Meeting.

The annual meeting of the State and National Secretaries' Association, at Norfolk, will be held in the ladies' private dining room or on the sixth floor of the Monticello, beginning at 10 a. m., Friday, October 11, and closing at 6 p. m. A banquet will be served at the same place from 6 to 8 o'clock. State and national secretaries will please take notice and be present promptly. A program of interest has been prepared and a good time will be had at the banquet. The secretaries' wives and friends will be welcome to the banquet if notice is received in time to have the covers laid. The price will not be large. The association last year voted to hold the meeting a day in advance of the sessions of the convention, and this is the reason for the early date. Every state and society should be represented.

T. J. Legg, President,
W. A. Baldwin, Secretary,

Something New for the Prayer-meeting.

We are having the best prayer-meeting here I have ever had in my ministry of over twenty years. Recently I appointed a critic, a talented young lady who teaches elocution in Blackburn College here, and told her I wanted her at the close of the service to tell us about the things that impressed her most and to point out any weakness in our program. We had a most excellent report of the service. This critic should be chosen at the close of each service, instead of at the opening, so that all will be on the lookout for a good point to emphasize or things to correct. As a different one is selected each week or at every service, no one knows but what he, or she, is to be chosen; hence alertness is secured, a thing of great value itself. I shall watch this experiment with great interest.

Topeka Wants the Convention.

We have received a statement from the brethren representing our churches at Topeka, Kan., who are making a claim for the national convention to go to that city in 1908. As we have already stated, New Orleans wants the convention and made its want known last year at Buffalo, and, while no vote was taken, it was, at that time, generally understood that the convention would go, in 1908, to New Orleans. Of course the ultimate decision lies with the convention which will be held at Norfolk. The brethren at Topeka, under the leadership of Charles A. Finch and F. E. Mallory, have the co-operation of the governor of the state and the officers of the city, as well as the commercial club of Topeka, in desiring our national convention to assemble in their city. There is a fine auditorium seating 5,000 people, and this will be suitably decorated and furnished. Other inducements are offered, all of which will, no doubt, be presented to the delegates at Norfolk. The convention committee concludes its request with the following statement:

"It is obvious that no agreement upon the part of contesting delegations to secure the 1907 convention could pledge the convention for 1908. The brotherhood is free. The question of the location of the convention for 1908 was never before the convention at Buffalo, and consequently the only authority that could definitely settle the matter has never passed upon the question. Is it not perfectly apparent that the thousands who are planning to Pittsburg will entirely ignore the convention of 1908 unless it be held somewhere near the heart of the brotherhood. Both in enthusiasm and attendance the convention of 1908 should be a stepping-stone to the throne convention of 1909.

"Charles A. Finch, Chairman.
"F. E. Mallory, Secretary,
"Convention Committee."

The Work in New Zealand.

After so long a time I redeem my promise to write a short letter to the readers of the dear old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from this far-off land of New Zealand. Though separated over 14,000 miles from the mother country (England) the old lady manifests a great deal of interest in her offspring, and New Zealand is one of her favorites. Just lately she has passed from her swaddling clothes as a colony and put on the more dignified name of "Dominion." The population of New Zealand is less than a million and its area only about 100,000 square miles. Compared to the "Dominion of Canada," we feel the new name is rather inappropriate. However we will try to adjust ourselves and what we lack in numbers and extent we will make up in feeling. New Zealand is ahead of the world in progressive legislation, which I cannot enter into at this time. Suffice it to say that the problems of government ownership of public utilities is solved here and all things work together for the good of all. The most beautiful and benign law of all is the "old age pension." The dependent aged receive from $2 to $5 per week. Why should we not pension the honest toiler as well as the heroic soldier? The one makes the country—the other protects it.

Religiously we are not behind the chiefest of sectarian lands. In this part "Otago," wherein Dunedin is the "hub," old Scotch Presbyterianism is the predominant note, and the old fathers laid the foundation deep and strong in "reserves and grants" so that everywhere we are confronted with "church property" which is now a great source of revenue. The same can be said of the Anglican church in Canterbury, of which Christ church is the cathedral city, and so on throughout the country. The churches of Christ have not made very much progress in the last twenty years. We are only a few over 3,000 members in the country. This is owing, perhaps, not to the less receptive spirit of the people to the gospel, but more to the ultra conservatism and legalizing of the gospel message. There are many splendid brethren, but many of the "meat axe" order in "our cause in Chicory," who have the letter but not the spirit of Christ. The Baptists are a progressive missionary people and consequently a growing, vigorous body. They grant liberty at the Lord's table while our people demand baptism as the seal of the Christian and the right to the Lord's table. What is needed is Paul's guidance. "Let a man examine himself and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup." The brethren here can give lessons to many American churches in the grace of liberality, but here, too, they restrict gifts to the people of God, which is interpreted to mean "us four and no more." In many instances money has been handed back to those who gave unto the Lord out of a willing heart. "Mutual Edification" is carried to extremes. Converts not a year old, and sometimes only a month or two old, are called upon to "exhort the church," and it frequently turns out to be neither exhortation nor edification, but fadification. Fadists take advantage of the privilege to preach all sorts of side issues. In some churches in Australia, notably in Sydney and Melbourne, where there are a number of preachers and able men, "exchange of pulpits is profitable unto all, but in many places it is a cause of ridicule. However, things are undergoing a change, and the full liberty of the gospel will soon be enjoyed by all. This is our fond hope.

Brothers Hamilton and Garmong held a meeting in Ashburton and organized a church of 130 members. Last Lord's day we had the pleasure, together with Ralph Gebbie, of Christ Church, to open their "Mission Hall," costing about $1,200. They have a property, valued at $2,500, nearly paid for. What has been accomplished there can be duplicated in every town of like size (3,000 population) in the country. What we need is an evangelistic campaign on the American plan, which would take the country for primitive Christianity and the unity of God's people. The few Disciples can not push a very vigorous campaign, for we do not have the means or the men to do it. Globe trotters are not wanted, but men who can and will stay for a number of years can find an open field and a good support.

Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all; and also because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100 not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.

The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the Doxology and The Lord Is In His Temple.

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

Dependable Books

—New Commentary on Acts. J. W. McGarvey. $1.00. President McGarvey is one of our ablest commentators, and in this role never appears to better advantage than in Acts. We would like to know that this book was in every Disciple library.

—Paths to the City of God. By Frank W. Gunsaulus. $1.25. Dr. Gunsaulus is pastor of one of our largest American churches. He is president of Armour Institute. He has many rare gifts and among them is an eloquence manifest in his writings as in his speech. Here are fifteen inspiring sermons by one of the great masters of sacred oratory.

—The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. Edited by J. H. Garrison. $2.00. This is an interesting historical resume of our great Restoration movement. Some of the ablest writers among us contribute to "The Introductory Periods:" "Period of Organization;" "The Turbulent Period;" "The Transition Period." The Editor's "Lessons from Our Past" is worth many times the cost of the book.

—The Practice of Prayer. By G. Campbell Morgan. 75 cents. The great evangelist confesses the aim of the book is purely practical. He contends that "Teach us to pray" relates to the cultivation of the habit rather than the manner of prayer. The work is a serious effort to make more universal the "morning watch," the "still hour" and the family prayer circle. It is a very pertinent message. It ought to be communicated to all our people.

—The Development of the Sunday-school—1780-1905. This is the official report of the Eleventh International Sunday-school Convention, held in Toronto. This book sold for $1.50. We overstocked and will sell the next one dozen copies at 75 cents each. It has 716 pages and contains some remarkable addresses in addition to a great deal of valuable statistics and historical data.

—A Typical Mission in China. By W. E. Soothill. $1.50. This is an exceptional book. Secretary Corey says this is the very best book on the actual work of the mission stations. It tells of evangelization, types of converts, native sermons, medical work, temples, and the various religions and their founders, including Christianity. The introduction alone is worth the price of the book.

—The Pedagogical Bible School. By Samuel B. Haslet. Introduction by G. Stanley Hall. $1.25. This book presents concisely a description of the mental characteristics and needs of the pupils at each stage of development. It indicates, too, the pedagogical order of the Bible books, suggesting sections adapted to the various grades of the Sunday-school scholars. It is not only adapted to all Bible school workers, but also for parents, teachers and all engaged in religious and mental training.

We recommend each of these to our patrons.

Seen on Furlough

By William Remfry Hunt

Some of the most beautiful landscape in our tight but bright little island is seen in the Strand valley en route to the lovely Cotswold hills, and the historic Gloucester city. England is a veritable little homeland. Its ancient churches, cathedrals, castles, battlefields and delightful forest, river and seaside retreats make it unique, while its wonderful panorama of healthy and flourishing suburbs with their picnic parties to its fascinating chines, ruins and ancient military strongholds, make up a most charming holiday program.

There is always infinite variety to those who see as well as look out of their "windows of the soul." Most of the common fields are now utilized by players of that exhilarating Scotch game called golf. Mark Twain defined the popular game thus: "All you want is a big field, and a small ball, then you take hold of one of the clubs and strike the ball, of course always in the right place; then if that ball is found the same day the game is won!" I struck my first ball at Muswell Hill golf links, but as it was under the superior guidance of our own Leslie Morgan, who told me in clearest terms and careful demonstration where to strike the ball (though it might have taxed the keen vision of a prophet to have foreseen where that little white ball would alight), it was, however, finally discovered by a close shave of heather and daisies; so I guess I won't! Many medical men and the clergy—and those two classes know most things—prescribe golf in catering for the needs of their clients, with attractive results and scenes free from ennui.

One very pleasant afternoon was spent with Leslie Morgan (of Hornsey) and Ernest L. Mobley (of Southampton). We were at Southampton preaching the great claims of China. The pressure of the services on the Lord's day was relieved by a blow on the salent, and we visited Ryde and Southsea. It was a rare treat to be with these two fullgrown disciples. Our lungs were filled with ozone, our hearts burned within us, and we enjoyed rare privileges in conversation. We talked of persons, places and things seen in America and amid the quiet luxury and sea-walls of Southsea felt some pardonable pride and inspiration as we three graces faced the promenade at the sea-front and talked of the strength, growth, grace and truth of the mighty brotherhood that we represent and in whose confidence we rejoice.

Our trip to the English lakes is the best yet. This was made possible by the kindly invitation of Brother and Sister Joe Coop, of Southport. At the lovely lakeside station we were met by the two princely brothers, Joe and Frank Coop (worthy sons of a noble sire). Mr. and Mrs. Frank Coop were in the motor-car, and Mr. J. Coop, accompanied by his son Charles, was in the motor-boat, awaiting us. In a few minutes we moved alongside the pier outside Bro. J. Coop's summer residence, and climbing the winding path to their pretty bungalow were received with warmest hospitality by Sister J. Coop and her daughter-in-law, Minnie. What a beautiful lake view looks out of their windows! It was simply charming. If they had not prepared such an excellent dinner I should have fed on the view. The climate is par excellence and the most fascinating halo of romance lies about its hills and its valleys. In its natural gardens we recognized some of the flora which grows upon the hillsides of our own precipitous mountain sanatorium in Kuling, and the rocks and ferns also reminded us of our 4,500-feet-above-the-sea-level China summer home.

The magnificent panorama of woodland and cultivated ground, diversified in form and scenic beauty is intersected by views everywhere of the silvery lakes. Sister Coop arranged a motor picnic to the other lakes and after doing sixty miles in Bro. J. Coop's motor-car—he is, by the way, a royal motorist—we counted up we had visited or seen Windermere, Rydal, Grasmere, Thirlmere, Derwenwater and Keswick. The trip was splendid. Then after lying unconscious all night at Brother Coop's bungalow, we had a motor-boat picnic next day to Bowness, when I was allowed to take the helm and use all the nautical language I liked to use.

At the twenty-seventh annual conference of the churches, held in Liverpool, we were introduced to the working machinery of our churches in England. It was a fine convention, beautiful in spirit and in service. In company with Brothers and Sisters Joe and Frank Coop we motored to Southport and were ready for the program. Our ministers are sound, solid and seasoned. They are true to the genius and spirit of our movement. We have varied talents and ideals. In all there is consecration and devotion. They are not insensible to the new and progressive movements toward the best interests of the kingdom, and we have all windows open towards the light. The conference reunion and the addresses were all of a high order and showed strength as well as grace. The evening missionary meeting was of much spiritual power and blessing. The total membership of the English churches registered 2,360 and represented work in nineteen centers.

While on furlough word reaches me from China often. The famine conditions are beyond human description. It is estimated that the famine in the four provinces as well as the awful pestilences that follow in its terrible wake will mean the death of ten millions of people. Already the heroes fighting this gaunt skeleton are falling. Two medical men died in Chinkiang of typhoid fever. Dysentery, cholera, typhus and the whole gamut of death-dealing fevers will this fall find appalling harvests in Central China. At the last word from Nanking our beloved brother, Abram E. Cory, was about to undergo an operation for appendicitis. The awful epidemics this unusual year in the crowded, filthy, stinking, pestilential city, which in the torrid heat is like a vast lazar house, is a call to prayer in behalf of our missionaries there. Brother Garrett writes that the stations will be left more than usual this unprecedented famine season. We must be economical as well as sacrificial in the service and strength of lives given in the bloom and chivalry of its best youth to the ransom of the millions of China.

A Great Meeting in Bonner Springs, Kan.

Bonner Springs is a beautiful and rapidly-growing town of 1,500 inhabitants, and is located sixteen miles from Kansas City. The church here was alive and anxious for advancement. After much urging we succeeded in getting Evangelists Wilhite and Tuckerman to come to us. Brother

O. C. Moomaw, Bonner Springs, Kan.

Tuckerman arrived in time to organize the chorus before the meeting began in earnest. The minute Brother Wilhite arrived on the scene a great meeting was evidenced. It was held in a great tabernacle that would seat a thousand or more people, and it was filled at every service, and on Sundays at least 1,400 people were crowded in. The meeting continued twenty-eight days, cost much, but it paid its own way. The cashier of one of the leading banks of the town slept in the tabernacle every night and never missed a service.

The result was 173 additions, 125 of the number by primary obedience; 130 of the number were over the age of twelve years. At the last services three doctors came. The church is now double the strength of any in the town. Brother Wilhite, in a very few minutes, raised money by pledge to remodel and enlarge the church building, making the seating capacity over 500, and well-equipped for Bible school work.

Otho Moomaw, pastor.

Maryland Convention.

As we go to press comes the program of the thirtieth annual convention of the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Del., and the District of Columbia. It is to be held at the Christian Temple, Fulton avenue, near Lexington street, Baltimore, Md., October 2-4.

Wednesday morning is the preachers' day, the program of which has appeared in these columns. The convention opens at 2 p. m. The C. W. B. M. sessions are on Thursday at 2 p. m. and the Christian Endeavor session at 8:30 p. m. Friday.

A Testimony to a Beautiful Faith and Interest.

The editor feels that the interest of the brotherhood in Brother Harlan's recent departure justifies the publication of this extract from a personal letter from Sister Harlan:

"I want to tell you, Brother Garrison, of the last day I had with Mr. Harlan, when he was in his rational mind. It was seven weeks previous to his home-going. I read to him almost every article in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Though the paralysis was so bad in his face that he could only speak a few words at a time, he understood and sat during the entire time of the reading, holding my hand, and I could tell by the pressure and by the expression of his face when he especially appreciated some good point. After I had read a little while, he asked me to turn to your special page, and how he did enjoy hearing me read that! And he said, 'Jennie, don't miss a word. Read everything that Brother Garrison has written. I always do so love to read his Easy Chair and the Pentwater Musings.' Then, when I was through reading, he asked me to read the fourteenth chapter of John, which I did, after which we had prayer together. On account of the paralysis in his face, he was at least a half hour offering his prayer, but at that time he was able to carry a sustained and beautiful thought throughout the entire petition. I think of it as the most precious period of our life together, and of the time when he was reaching up to the Father in the most supreme trust, all of which gives me assurance, in connection with his noble life, that he is now in the presence of the Father. I wanted you to know, Brother Garrison, of his joy in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and in God's Word on the last day, that we were privileged to be together and converse of the things of this life and of the things of the future.

Your friend,

Mrs. M. E. Harlan.

Those Who Know Speak.

At the regular weekly meeting of the ministers of the Christian Church in Cincinnati, Monday morning, September 23, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The "Christian Standard" has seen fit to criticise our national missionary societies and their presidents and secretaries from time to time for years; therefore, be it

Resolved, 1. That we have full confidence in the truthfulness, integrity and capability of the officers and secretaries of our national missionary societies and will pledge to them our hearty support in the prosecution of their work.

2. That we deplore the spirit manifested by the "Christian Standard" and its policy, which tends to hinder our progress and divide the forces of the people, who plead for the oneness of the saints of God.

New England Convention.

The New England convention of the Churches of Christ met September 12-15 with the historic church of Danbury, Conn. This church was organized in 1817, and it is said on good authority that during the ninety years of its existence the brethren have never failed to break bread on the Lord's day. This church is now the strongest in New England. numbering 850 members, and under the leadership of E. Jay Teagarden. who has ministered for this people more than 17 years, it seems destined to become a still greater force in this sparsely settled corner of "our" religious world.

R. H. Bolton, of Boston, is president of the New England board and Harry Minnick, of Worcester, the corresponding secretary. The yearly report shows that as a whole our churches have enjoyed but a very slight increase during the past 12 months. But all of the churches which have got beyond the struggling stage for existence and are well established in the community, showed encouraging gains along all lines. The secretary expressed gratification over the prospect and stated that the field was better supplied with ministers than it has ever been before and the work was on a much better footing. Springfield is building a new house, Bridgeport is preparing to build in the spring, Haverhill has a good man located; Boston hopes to get a man soon; both the Worcester churches have strong men at the helm; Providence, Everett, and Lubec are in good trim for another year's work. The prospect inspires us.

The C. W. B. M. session on Friday afternoon was full of interest. Mrs. Knox, the New England president gave an encouraging report of the year's work. Out of 19 churches of Christ in New England 13 auxiliaries were reported. No bad showing. Mrs. Effie Cunningham. of Indianapolis, gave an inspiring address which was well received. She will spend a week in New England visiting the local auxiliaries.

The Bible school work received a large share of attention. A. P. Finley gave a helpful address on "The Bible School as a Workshop and Recruiting Ground of the Church," which was followed by an open discussion of much interest. It was resolved by the convention that the churches lay greater stress on Bible school work and that they endeavor to keep abreast of the times in methods and equipment.

With only 42 delegates the convention was full of enthusiasm. It is surprising how much inspiration we get from these little conventions. But this convention was small only in point of numbers. The program was a good one. Almost all of our missionary agencies were represented. and the convention had the missionary ring from start to finish. We New Englanders believe in missions and we think we have one of the greatest mission fields in the world. The people are here by the millions and more are coming by the thousands every year. There seems to be a general dissatisfaction with the present religious conditions and a reaching out after something more scriptural and more vital. It is our opportunity. We believe that the great need of this field is the gospel, simple and unadulterated. Our greatest problem is to get a hearing. Being so little known among the people, we are classed along with the hundred and one spasmodic efforts that are being made every year by religious enthusiasts.

With the feeling that the time is ripe for the plea of Christian union in New England and realizing the need of the simple gospel in this land of the Puritan, we left for our respective places of labor with renewed determination to throw our all into the service we love so well. The convention meets next year with the Highland Street Church of Worcester, Mass., for which A. P. Finley so ably ministers.

West Virginia Convention.

The Churches of Christ in West Virginia have just closed the best convention in the history of the work. The attendance was larger, the addresses more inspiring, the spirit more Christlike, the reports more cheering, the plans more aggressive and the chickens sweeter than ever before. The convention was held at Beckley, 2,500 feet above the sea level. Physically and spiritually we were on the mountain top. The place of the convention had an added interest because it is the location of the new C. W. B. M. normal school. Mechanics were heard at work putting the old Academy building in shape for the opening of the school. The church, under the leadership of Richie Ware, royally entertained all who came.

The first sessions of the convention were devoted to the interests of the West Virginia Ministerial Association. At the opening session E. H. Hart, president of the association, delivered a very brief annual message. This was followed by the convention sermon, preached by Prof. Phil. Johnson, of Bethany, who chose for his text the words of Jesus: "I am the way, the truth and the life." In his own pleasing and inimitable way the speaker led his hearers out into new fields of thought and meditation. All felt when he had closed that the very highest note of the convention had been sounded. At the morning session next day seven ministers discussed definite phases of the theme: "The Minister and His World." All of these were well thought out and delivered. Percy H. Wilson, of Moundsville, then delivered an address in the interest of our National Benevolent Association. In this he showed that in benevolent enterprises we had not even begun to restore the apostolic church. He argued that in such work we would find the means of uniting our own more or less discordant hosts. All agree that this is a great and helpful ministry that has too long been neglected. The address was the best Brother Wilson has ever delivered at any of our conventions. "The Graded Bible School" was the theme of the discussion at the following session. P. H. Wilson, W. H. Fields, W. B. Taylor and O. G. White were the speakers. So well did they do their work that the audience felt that this must of necessity be the best session of all. Following this the officers of the Ministerial Association for the ensuing year were elected. They are: President, G. W. Ogden; vice-president, J. C. Reynolds; secretary-treasurer, A. H. Jordan.

The next session was a joint session of the West Virginia C. M. S. and the C. W. B. M. Miss Mattie Pounds, of Indianapolis, Ind., spoke for the C. W. B. M. on "Woman's Obligation to the Kingdom of Christ." Very clearly did she show the blessings that have come to women through the influence of Jesus. The address abounded with comparisons between the condition of women in Christian lands and the condition of her pagan sister. Prof. W. B. Taylor, of Bethany, was the next speaker. He chose for his subject, "The Transforming Power of God's Word." Always an interesting speaker, Professor Taylor was here at his best. For nearly an hour he gave proof after proof of the wondrous influence of the Bible upon the lives of men and nations. If any unbelievers were present they would not willingly have acknowledged their unbelief after hearing this address.

The next two sessions were devoted to the interests of the C. W. B. M. The writer did not have the privilege of attending either of these, but he has been informed that they were very interesting. The organization is doing a great work in West Virginia. The following session was given wholly to the interests of state missions. The speakers were: Professor Taylor, A. Linkletter, G. F. Crites and J. W. Yoho. It had been understood that the state board would not be able to close the year free of debt. An old debt of more than $250 had been carried over from the preceding year. Something more than $100 of this remained unpaid. The time seemed opportune to raise this debt and begin the year without any burdens. Pledges and cash offerings were called for and in fifteen minutes nearly $500 had been raised. Enough was paid in cash to more than meet the debt. The reports of the state board, made through their corresponding secretary and treasurer, showed that during the past year $2,016.52 had been received from all sources for state missions. The gain in regular receipts from churches, Christian Endeavor societies and individuals, amounted to $731.58. Fifty-three were added to the churches by baptism and 130 otherwise by workers supported in whole or in part by the West Virginia C. M. S. W. J. Wright delivered a strong address on "1900." This was followed by a thrilling address by Prof. C. T. Paul on "The Awakening in China." If you are in doubt as to whether foreign missions will pay, hear Professor Paul. He bears on his body the marks of service and sacrifice in the land of which he speaks. The work of the Christian Endeavor Society next engaged our thought. D. M. Walker, J. C. Waddell, C. M. Small and J. R. Glenn brought helpful messages upon some phase of Christian Endeavor work. W. J. Wright then laid upon our hearts the obligations and opportunities of America in our service of the Christ. His descriptions of the sacrifice and hardships of some of the home missionaries aroused an intense interest in this work. At the closing session O. G. White delivered a thoughtful address in the interest of Church Extension. The last address was that of Prof. E. W. McDairmid, of Bethany. He spoke in the interest of the new C. W. B. M. school. Having spent seven years teaching in the C. W. B. M. schools in Kentucky, he was able to give to the people of Beckley much useful information in regard to the institution about to be opened in their midst.

Officers for next year are: Richie Ware, president; W. H. Fields, first vice-president; D. R. Moss, second vice-president; W. E. Pierce, recording secretary; O. G. White, treasurer; J. W. Yoho, corresponding secretary; S. A. Worley, J. D. McReynolds, Phil. Johnson, W. B. Taylor, F. H. Ollom, P. H. Wilson and A. L. Ward directors.

J. W. Yoho, Cor. Sec.

Kentucky's Seventy-Fifth Convention

[From two separate reports furnished by Robert Hopkins and B. W. Trimble we make the following report of the meeting just held.—Editor]

The Kentucky state convention, which has just been held in Latonia, has been pronounced in every way a success. This is the seventy-fifth annual meeting of the sort that has been held in historic Kentucky. The first one met at Lexington in 1832 to consider the matter of union between the followers of Barton W. Stone and Alexander Campbell, and resulted in the sending out of John Smith and John Rogers as evangelists, John T. Johnson acting as the first secretary. Bro. H. W. Elliott, the present evangelist, brought in every way a most favorable report. About 2,500 additions to the church constitutes only one of the many excellent features of the annual report. The program was an unusually attractive one. Monday night, the opening session, was given over to the welcome addresses and response and an address on education, by Z. F. Smith. Tuesday was C. W. B. M. day, and among the speakers may be mentioned H. W. Elliott, of Eminence; Mrs. M. E. Harlan, of Indianapolis; W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg; Miss Jane Strigfellow, of Carrollton, and Dr. W. A. Alton, recently returned from Porto Rico. Mrs. Harrison, the state president, was unable to attend the convention on account of the illness of her sister, and her loss was deeply deplored. The evening session was one of the most popular of the entire convention, and was denominated "An Evening with the Highlanders." The interests of the mountain schools at Morehead and Hazel Green were presented by the teachers and students of these schools.

At Tuesday's session of the convention Mrs. Sarah Yancey, state secretary and organizer, presided. We have not her report, but from it are taken these items, which are approximate: Auxiliaries, 134; membership, 3,148; "Missionary Tidings" taken, 1,900; money for all purposes, $21,000, and this sum includes $1,900 raised by the children and a special gift of $2,000 for Hazel Green Academy dormitory. This dormitory for the boys will cost about $9,000 will be made of reinforced concrete, two-story, and will accommodate eighty boys. It will be begun at once and is expected to be finished early in 1908. For this fund an offering was taken aggregating $1,066.94.

The present officers were re-elected: President, Mrs. A. M. Harrison, Lexington; state secretary and organizer, Mrs. Sarah Yancey, Lexington; treasurer, Mrs. O. L. Bradley, Lexington; superintendent of young people, Mrs. Mary Smith Walden, Danville.

Wednesday was devoted largely to the discussion of state missionary interests. Addresses were made by Prof. H. L. Calhoun, B. M. Arnett, H. Newton Miller, state secretary of Ohio, and A. L. Orcutt, of Indianapolis. One of the interesting features was the introduction of the evangelists employed by the state board, each telling in his own way the condition of his field of labor. Mrs. L. W. St. Clair and Carey E. Morgan, representing a joint committee of all the state interests, announced that it is the purpose of the Kentucky brethren to hold their centennial state convention in 1909 at Lexington, and preparations are already on foot for making this Lexington convention second only to the Pittsburg convention in its attendance and interest.

Seventy-five years have passed since the restoration movement began under Stone, Campbell, Smith, Rogers and others. It is safely within the realm of probability that 100,000 people have been led to unite with us in these seventy-five years through this agency of co-operative missionary effort, and 500 congregations organized independent of growth in local congregations. During the past twenty-two years our missionary organization has raised and expended, including money for local work and self-support, $443,166, and built 167 houses of worship. As early as 1840 this co-operation began to be called "The Kentucky Christian Missionary Convention." There are sixty counties included in this organization.

The financial statement for the past year showed $7,186 collected from the churches and a total of $9,646 in the treasury. Through the men in the field there was raised a total of $20,746, giving a grand total for K. C. M. C. of $30,393.

The matter which received most discussion in the convention was the proposed change of the plan of holding the state convention. For several years an effort has been on foot to turn the convention into an assembly, but hitherto has been voted down. A resolution was passed in the Latonia convention, however, to the effect that a large committee representing all the state interests—missionary, educational and benevolent interests shall be appointed to consider the propriety of holding such a state assembly. This committee is to report to the next state convention. The place of holding the next annual meeting was not decided upon, but was referred to the decision of the two state executive committees.

Officers for next year are: President, Carey Morgan, Paris; vice-president, H. C. Runyan, Latonia; recording secretary, B. W. Trimble, Mt. Sterling; state evangelist and treasurer, H. W. Elliott, Sulphur.

The Bible school interests were on Thursday. W. Hume Logan, president of the convention, delivered a most timely and practical address. The report of State Evangelist Robert M. Hopkins showed the work in a thriving condition. The schools were practically unanimous in their support of state work. All the districts of the state were reported as holding annual conventions and Kentucky appeared from the report to be in the front ranks in the general advanced movements of the Bible school. J. H. Hardin, of Missouri, was present and delivered two excellent addresses, one on "Teacher-Training" and the other on "The Teaching Function." J. H. MacNeill, of Winchester, spoke most earnestly on "Bible School Expansion," and R. M. Hopkins conducted a practical Round Table discussion. The topic of supreme interest on the Bible school program was that of the Centennial enterprise, the endowment for a chair of Bible school pedagogy in the College of the Bible. Short addresses were made by President J. W. McGarvey and F. M. Rains, and at the conclusion pledges amounting to about $1,500 were raised toward the endowment fund. This fund now lacks only about $3,000 of the completion. The Bible school address was delivered at the evening session by P. H. Welshimer, of Canton, O., and it was pronounced one of the most stirring addresses ever heard in Kentucky.

Officers for 1907-1908: President, Chas. H. Fisk, Covington; first vice-president, J. K. Bondurant, Paducah; second vice-president, W. O. Hinton, Paris; recording secretary, Harvey B. Smith, Beard; state evangelist, R. M. Hopkins, Louisville. Executive board: D. F. Stafford, Louisville; Thos. W. Floyd, Louisville; Thad S. Tinsley, Louisville.

H. C. Runyan and his faithful little band of workers entertained the convention royally. Eight years ago there was no Christian church in Latonia, and the excellent congregation there now is a product of state missionary labor. Every comfort was provided and general old-fashioned Kentucky hospitality was to be found on every hand. The attendance was among the largest in Kentucky state meetings.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

A Pioneer on the Pungo.

For a few months I have been doing pioneer work in the Old North State, and my itinerary has been confined to the regions of the beautiful Pungo River. North Carolina, like some other states, has a history of sacrifice and heroism, and along with it the inevitable history of human frailty which it were profitable to forget. Of late the work has been coming to the front, and those who are the most interested say that the prospect for the establishment of primitive Christianity on that soil was never better. The people are still in the stone-age, religiously speaking. Every man's hand is against his fellow. Our religious neighbors sleep with a hatchet within easy reach. Wherever I went I found them inflammable, and I have no doubt that I always had a spark to drop into the combustible nature. I tried to avoid a "fuss," but when the spirit of combat is in the air, it was either a fight or a flight. My pleasantries were construed as heresies. I was regarded by some of our loving friends as "the worst man that ever struck the town." If I tried to show them that we ought to be as good-natured in religion as we are in politics, my effort was construed as a back-down or a surrender, and I was obliged to transform the church militant into the church triumphant. All my peaceful overtures were taken in a Pickwickian sense, and as I did my best for peace and still had war, like Pat, I was determined to have peace if I fought for it. A theological fight in the South is the event of the season. Men lie awake at night to find equipment for the next day's encounter. The combative spirit is in the blood. If there are those who think that religion is so dead in the land that men will not waste their breath arguing about it, let them go to the Pungo and all the regions round about. They may think before going that the best policy is to handle humanity with gloves, and to do nothing that will stir up strife or contention. That was part of my program. Had I adhered to it. I would have been sent home in an ambulance. I rolled up my sleeves, and neither gave nor asked quarter. As a result I am alive and well, and enjoying a much-needed rest at this writing.

A great work is to be done in the state. Our churches are few and far between, and weak. There is a greater need for well-equipped preachers than any section that I have ever been in. It is folly to fight ignorance with ignorance. That makes an interminable battle, and both sides will shout "victory." What is needed is tact, knowledge and consecration. A man needs the qualities of mind and heart in these pioneer fields that we demand of those who go to the foreign field. Those who are on the firing line there now are doing a great work against heavy odds. They are worthy of all honor. A. B. Cunningham, president of the state board, has done an excellent work in that office, and has the work of editing the North Carolina "Evangel" as well as the care of the church at Washington. He is doing the work of two men. W. G. Waler is the state evangelist, and under his leadership the work has made wonderful progress. New fields have been opened, and old ones have been improved. An effort is being made to pay off the debt on Atlantic Christian College of $11,000, and to raise $5,000 for state work this year. It is probable that both these plans will be successful. In three meetings that we held, almost 150 were added to our churches. We hope that the interest may continue and that our brethren may make the most of their opportunities to evangelize the state and to strengthen the work in every way.

The Work at Carney, Okla.

James Cage recently closed two years' work here, and is now engaged with the work at Crescent. We are pleased to note the results of his work here and are confident that success will follow his labors. Sixty members were added during the two years, 48 during Elder C. F. Trimble's meeting and 12 at regular services, making our membership nearly 175. We have advanced from the weakest church in town to the strongest by five to one, and hold a very decided advantage in the way of a church building. C. E. Smootz and G. W. Leonard recently held a series of meetings for us and greatly strengthened the membership on scriptural teaching needed by young churches; we also received two additions, one by primary obedience and one by letter.

Our Bible school is just closing a contest with Tryon. Both schools are greatly strengthened by the friendly rivalry.

Our town rolled up a majority for state-wide prohibition. We are desirous for more of our brethren to come and cast their lot with us in the new prohibition state.

C. R. Miller recently closed a meeting at his church in Tallapoosa with fourteen additions.—— We expect to organize the church at Lowell next Lord's day (the fifth Sunday), and in my next week's notes will give sufficient particulars.—— The Griffin district convention is now in the past. It was highly enjoyed and twelve of the thirteen churches in the district were represented in the convention, and plans for greater activity in district evangelization were adopted. Preachers present were W. B. Shaw and B. P. Smith, Atlanta; Howard Brazelton, Macon; D. A. Brindle, Griffin; Harrison Jones, Hampton; E. L. Shelnutt. Acworth. Charles Smith, of Concord, was re-elected chairman and J. A. Scott, of Griffin, secretary and treasurer. Next fall the convention goes to Griffin.——The Northern District convention will be held with the church at Ludville, beginning Thursday night, October 3.—— Georgia will send a good delegation to the National convention next month——Brother Shaw will preach at Hampton the first Sunday in October.——My new tract, "John Sims," is selling right along at 20 copies, postpaid, for $1. Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Word from East Washington.

No doubt many of the friends of the East Washington Christian Missionary Society are wondering what has become of the corresponding secretary and why no report of the Palouse convention has been made. The explanation is to be found in the fact that the corresponding secretary was persuaded to accept that position at a time the Dayton church, of which he was the pastor, was just beginning the work of constructing a large and expensive improvement in their house, and this, after persistent urging on the part of the pastor. So his first duty was to the Dayton church, as he understood it. To secure the right man to take up the work at Dayton, to do the work of an architect, to take general oversight of the building, and to do the work of a pastor, was a many-sided task, to say nothing of the work of a corresponding secretary in addition. He has done the very best he could, and is very glad to report some things have been successfully completed. The right man to take up the work of the ministry at Dayton was found, we feel sure, in W. H. Harris, of Ritzville. The new church building is being pushed rapidly to completion and all is well and harmonious at Dayton. Work is moving nicely all along the line. But the corresponding secretary is now out of that work and can give entire attention to the state work. All correspondents will be promptly attended to hereafter, the Lord willing.

A word about the Dayton church. We have a splendid congregation there, in many ways. They have a splendid opportunity for a large growth. In their new house they will have a large building well equipped for a great work. While expressing sincere regret and feeling that a change of ministers at this time was a very serious step for them, yet they accepted the change with true Christian grace, realizing the importance of the larger work. Whether their feeling in the matter was correct or not, the churches of East Washington owe a debt of thanks to the Dayton church. During the past three years of their work there have been added to the church, in all, 187 persons. About $1,500 was given to all missionary purposes. A living link was established with the A. C. M. S., which they hope to continue. The three Christian Endeavor societies have had a total membership of about 175. The Bible school has an enrollment of about 300, with the largest attendance of more than 200. Two young men are preparing for the ministry and missionary work. The present membership totals about 425. In comparison with the denominational churches we are far in the lead.

J. A. Pine.

A Letter from Ontario.

Canada loses a good worker in the removal of J. I. Carter from Kilsyth, Ont. Brother Carter had served the Kilsyth church for two years. There has been a noticeable growth in the work there in that time. The membership has been increased, the forces have been better organized, the finances have been systematized and promoted until the report for last year shows an excellent condition. Brother Carter goes to Ladysmith, Wis., and is succeeded in Kilsyth by a Brother Wellman.——T. L. Fowler, a Canadian, and for many years identified with the work in Ontario as pastor and educator, has just returned to the province and taken the pastorate of the church at Poplar Hill. A splendid new church building has recently been built by that substantial congregation and the prospects are excellent for a prosperous work in that field. F. E. Lumley, the hustling head of Sinclair College at St. Thomas, is sounding the educational trumpet loud and clear among the people of Ontario. During the summer vacation he made a tour among the churches, especially those in the Niagara district, everywhere earnestly laying the claims of Christian education upon them, and meeting with encouragement by the way. He reports the outlook especially encouraging for a good year's work this year.

The prospect for an adjustment of the educational problem among the Disciples in Ontario in the near future seems good. A joint committee from the educational board and from the provincial convention will have the matter under consideration during the year and will report at the next annual convention.

R. W. Stevenson, the provincial evangelist, is busy with special meetings with various churches and is ready to answer calls for such work from any part of the province. He is an indefatigable worker, a strong preacher, an invincible canvasser and will leave the work in any place much advanced. His heart is in the Canadian work, and he should receive every encouragement.

A depot for the sale of Sunday-school supplies has been opened at 561 Manning avenue, Toronto, where all the supplies published by the Christian Publishing Company of St. Louis, can be secured. The enactment of the recent postal regulations by our government, by which postage on periodicals from the United States has been greatly increased, and the postage of the New Dominion Lord's day act, prohibiting the distribution of Sunday literature on Sunday have seemed to make some such provision a necessity. Our schools can now be supplied with our own literature without the annoyance which these regulations impose. An enquiry addressed to R. W. Stevenson at the above address will bring full information.

W. N. Arnold, of Gibsonburg, O., is expected to take up the work at Ayhner.

The financial report of the church at Selkirk for the year just closed was very encouraging. The work on the Selkirk field is in a prosperous condition apparently. The new Sweets Corner's church is well filled at every service, and the money pledged at the dedication is coming in promptly. We expect to see this valuable property clear of debt within the year.

Selkirk, Ont. M. B. Ryan.

S. Life Everlasting. Gal. 6:7, 8.
S. Topic.

Let us take the readings suggested in 1 John as the starting point of our meditation. "The world passeth away." One does not live long until he begins to note the fleeting of the things of this world life. If the heart is centered upon what the present world has to offer the life must feel that vanity is its portion.

Much of the restlessness of the men of the world rises from their turning from one disappointing thing to another, hunting and hoping for something which will abide. Its shadows mock them as they fly and they cry. "The world passeth away."

For the one who believes in Christ, however, there is "life eternal." The idea of eternity is beyond our thought. The mind faints before it reaches the confines. Yet how glad a thought it is. Here is fleeting change, disappointment and death. There is enduring, never-ending, ever-satisfying, increasingly wonderful life eternal.

In the third chapter of 1 John this thought is further developed. This great fact of eternal life which brings as its chief value our likeness to Christ becomes the great hope which keeps our hearts pure.

The man of the world fancies that he is enjoying life. The word of God insists that he who lives in pleasure is dead while he liveth. Jesus taught that the purpose of his coming into the world was that we might have life, and have it more abundantly.

In the world to come we shall begin to realize the possibilities of life. Paul describes the veritable substantial nature of the body we shall live in. Read the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians. Our inner selves demand and require a body for their full and satisfying expression. This body in which we now live does not afford it, as we all know. The spiritual body which shall be ours at the resurrection will be the perfect organ of the fullest expression of all the infinite possibilities which God deposited within us.

And there will be time to begin and accomplish things in eternity. Here we have hardly time to begin a work until the death-stricken hand must yield the tool. Recently I stood before a noble piece of sculpture. The angel of death had laid his hand upon the hand of the artist as he was engaged in what might have been his life work.

There will be a sphere in which to labor. We shall be in the new earth under the new heavens. There is no haziness, no indefiniteness in the scripture allusions to the locality of our eternal life. The epistle to the Hebrews speaks of it as "the inhabited earth to come."

Jesus in the parables of the Kingdom encourages us to faithfulness in little things here with the promise that we shall be set over great things in the kingdom that is to come. John in his visions which close his apocalypse tells us that we shall not only see the face of God, but that we shall serve him. When a child we used to sing, "There'll be something in heaven for children to do." True. There will be something for all the redeemed to do, and the doing will be worth while as well as the thing to be done.

Life in eternity shall mean all that God has put into it. We shall have time to be and to do, unhindered by the weakness and vanity of the present earthly tabernacle in which we live, or by the enemy which fights against us.

Life in eternity will be "real and earnest." What a pity to leave it out of the problem as we pass the days and hours of the present time. What an inspiration to Christian Endeavorers to make the most of their present lives so that in the life to come the great Father may find us useful in his service, and we shall find not only joy but worth in the things that he will have us do.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

Keeping in Heart for Our Work.

Topic October 9. 2 Cor. 4:1-18.

First of all, in order to hearten and strengthen us in our work and for our work, we need to remember that we have received this ministry, and have received mercy. It is much to realize that we have been redeemed, not with corruptible things, but with incorruptible, by the precious blood of Christ. It is well to remember the rock from which we are hewn and the pit from which we were digged. "As we have received mercy we faint not." And along with this realization of the mercy that has saved us, and the obligations of our ministry, must go the stern renouncing of the hidden things of dishonesty, craftiness and deceit. A good life is the normal condition of all successful ministry. In the manifestation of the truth we commend ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. The Gospel on legs is the world's greatest need. Perhaps not so much a runabout religion as a real living of the Christian life. But it is impossible to live the Christ life without, like the Master, going about doing good. We need everywhere the "Gospel of the Helping Hand." And we need to realize that if our gospel be hid, it is hid in them that are lost. Lost! Do we understand that? Lost in the darkness! Without God and without hope! And what they need is the glorious Gospel of Christ to shine upon them. They need the reflection of that light from our own lives. We are to bear the image of the Christ that others may see and follow him. To have our hearts centered on Christ will save us from disappointment and discouragement. There is nothing like being anchored to the Rock of Ages to give us a sense of safety and security and stiffen us up for heroic service, in the midst of many distresses and sore afflictions, such as befell the Great Apostle.

And it is well to remember that we have this treasure in earthen vessels. Genuine humility is a great grace. And genuine humility, that takes all the conceit out of our lives, the false notions of our wisdom and our ability, the pride and place-seeking, the littleness and lovelessness, the bitterness and the bickering,—such will fit us for service and save us from ourselves, while saving us from a lot of troubles that annoy and fret and spoil us of our faith and freedom.

But spite of all our humility and sincerity, along with our devotion to duty will come the troubles common to the ministry, or common to men. To recognize that nothing has befallen us save what is common to men, and to bear bravely the common lot and the common burden, is the Christian and manly thing. And in the midst of it all to bear about in our lives (if not in our bodies as Paul did, who was thrice beaten with stripes, forty times save one), the marks of the Lord Jesus is to manifest the life also of Jesus to the world.

It is something splendid to have that same spirit of faith, according as it is written, "I believed and therefore have I spoken"; and to be able to say with Paul, "We also believe, and therefore speak." But beyond all else, to have that confident hope, which moved the heart and hand of Paul, "that he who raised up the Lord Jesus will raise up us also by him," and present us with all the faithful, is to have a tonic for all trial, a panacea for all pains, a placidness in the midst of all persecutions, a persuasion of victory in the midst of all-seeming defeats and defiant enemies. This conviction of the Unseen and the Eternal has been the stay of all sturdy and spiritual manhood in all the ages. After all, manhood is made out of something finer than the things of earth—the stuff of souls is something stronger, if less tangible, then the things that we can grasp with our hands or turn into merchandise or farms or bank stock or United States bonds. To get a good grip on God and hold a steadfast hope, to endure as seeing Him that is invisible, is to line up with the heroes of faith and the victorious of all the mighty centuries, whose names are among the immortal.

Israel Enters the Land of Promise.

Commit v. 7. Read Joshua 2-4.

Golden Text.—And he led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation. Ps. 107:7.

The time had come for the actual entrance of Israel into the Promised Land. The new leader, Joshua, had been appointed, commissioned and recognized. The people had been exhorted and encouraged to advance. The Jordan was just ahead, and beyond the Jordan lay Canaan. Behind was the wilderness. Behind, too, were the experiences of a generation of wandering, during which the nation had learned lessons of faith in Jehovah and also lessons of military efficiency and discipline and of justice and civil administration.

Joshua, who had himself been one of the twelve spies sent out from Kadesh nearly forty years before, thought it wise to send out spies again. These spies were not to determine whether or not there should be an immediate advance. That was taken for granted this time. They were only to look over the road and choose the most suitable route. They went only as far as Jericho, where their coming aroused instant suspicion and their lives were in great danger. Rahab the harlot, seeing that Israel's star was rising and Canaan's setting, allied herself with the invaders and delivered the spies secretly.

The entrance to Canaan was signalized by a notable and spectacular miracle, as the departure from Egypt had been. While all miracles are, in a sense, equally wonderful, a passage dry-shod through the bed of a river at the time of flood is a good deal more remarkable than a passage through a shallow sea where the wind might be effective in pushing back the waters. The evidence for the miraculous parting of the waters of the Jordan lacks a good deal of being contemporary. Considered purely on the basis of historical evidence, it is not the best authenticated of miracles. On the side of motive, however, there is much to be said for it. It was a great day in the nation's life. It was important that, as they entered their new home and began the arduous work of conquering it, they should be again unmistakably reminded that God was their strength and that the new land was a gift from his hand. This incident, and the belief of subsequent generations that Jehovah himself had swung back the gate to the Promised Land, went far toward establishing the permanent conviction that they held the land as a fief for which they owed service to Jehovah as their over-lord.

People's Forum

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I read with sorrow—sorrow for you and for any who may follow your lead—your comments on Haywood's acquittal. But I was not surprised, as I have some acquaintance with your point of view. The spirit of venemous hatred, veiled under a most "sane and sober" method of treatment, which your comments breathe, I am wholly unable to reconcile with the spirit of Christ.

You seem very much shocked at the verdict of not guilty, and deeply grieved that the "two jurors, who still believe him guilty," should violate their "sworn obligations" by not hanging the jury.

You admit that "the decision of the case depended almost wholly upon Orchard's testimony." "If Orchard lied there was no serious evidence of Haywood's responsibility for the death of Steunenberg." You also admit that Orchard's story was unworthy of belief.

But there is one strain of rejoicing accompanying your lugubrious wail at this miscarriage of justice, and that is: "This verdict in no way vindicates the methods of the Western Federation, and in no way disproves the president's statement that these three men are 'Undesirable citizens.'"

There was another man mentioned in the President's 'Undesirable" list, and that was Eugene V. Debs. And there are thousands more of us who would be proud to be so classified by the President, and who "thank God and take courage" for the "murderous and treasonable language of Debs and his paper." But for the "Murderous and treasonable language of Debs and his paper," the grass would now be growing green over the graves of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, and a smug preacher would be writing platitudes about the triumph of "Law and Order," and the "Confessed villain," Brother Orchard, would have a long life of usefulness before him, divided between singing psalms and inventing stories," inherently impossible," by means of which other "unreliable citizens" might be put under ground.

But you say two of the jurors perjured themselves. What right had they to believe Haywood guilty? The same right that you have: "The wish is father to the thought." You say there was no evidence against Haywood except Orchard's testimony, and that was a lie on its face. You say they were not psychologists. How do you know? Is there no possible motive that would prompt a constitutional liar to tell Orchard's remarkable story except a simple, honest desire to tell the truth? Might he not have invented it to save his own neck? It certainly has accomplished that purpose—for eighteen months at least. And Orchard will never pay the penalty for his "score of murders" as long as the mine-owners have use for him—and that will be as long as there are any "undesirable citizens" above ground. And there are several of them, even among our own preaching brethren. Even in the little church to which I belong, in Eureka Springs, Ark., where Dr. Garrison has preached, myself, a deacon, and one of the elders and several of the brethren are trying to carry out the economic teachings of the Christ by following the blood-red banner of universal brotherhood. We are Socialists. And even if the revolution should, as we hope and pray it will, succeed in overthrowing "Principalities and powers and the rulers of the darkness of this world," Orchard's life would still be safe, because Socialists don't believe in killing anybody. Theirs is a doctrine of Love and Brotherhood, Equality and Justice.

What do your higher criticism and your psychology have to do with this case? Would a knowledge of these sciences lead a jury to hang an innocent man? What would you have done if you had been on that jury? With all your hatred of Haywood, you would have done just as this jury did. And you would have done it on the first ballot.

Why do I say you hate these men? Your whole article breathes the spirit of vituperation, and of sore disappointment at the verdict. And then you say the Western Federation has not been vindicated, and the President's contemptible, cruel, cowardly statement has not been disproved.

"He that hateth his brother is a murderer!"

You say nothing about the conspiracy of the Mine-Owners' Association. You do not mention the Pinkerton spies. You say nothing of the corruption of governors, legislatures and courts. You are silent as the grave on the subject of the reign of terror under Peabody and Sherman Bell—of the Bull-pen and the Deportations, and the tedious list of crimes that have been committed in the name of "Law and Order." And these crimes were not committed by the Western Federation of Miners, collectively nor individually. All these things were proved in this historic trial. You also failed to mention the fact that, owning all the executive, legislative and judicial machinery of government, the mine owners have never proved one crime against the Western Federation of Miners. Out of a membership of forty thousand, and smarting under an oppression of unthinkable cruelty, there have doubtless been some crimes committed by members of that association as individuals, but the Western Associations of Miners is not an organization of murder or any other crime, and the "Inner Circle" is a figment of the brain of as base a scoundrel as Orchard himself, James McPartland. The W. F. M., like all other labor organizations, counsels first and last against violence, and no baser lie was ever uttered than that this organization would tolerate for a moment the thought of secret assassination. And this association has endorsed Socialism. And of all things on earth the Socialists do deplore and cry out against it is the mad folly of wreaking vengeance on any individual. "Thou shalt not kill" is a cardinal doctrine of theirs, and he is not a Socialist who will not endorse the words of Paul: "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." "We wrestle not against flesh and blood."

"But, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it." But, in this case "the rulers" were not ignorant. They conspired in cold blood to judicially murder these men, and many "sober brows" bless their action, "and approve it with a text." I think you have been misled by the reports of such "intellectual prostitutes" as Oscar King Davis and others who have been romancing on this case for the metropolitan press.

If you think my designation of these gentlemen too severe, I refer you to a no less able apologist for and eulogist of the present system than Senator Beveridge, in his debate with Mr. Bryan on the trust question. He says we are in the grip of a "newspaper trust that sends out lies for news." And he weeps because there is no remedy for this saddest of all trust manifestations, and he lifts up his voice and cries aloud, in vain, to Mr. Bryan to please suggest some way of escape. He says they have even lied about Mr. Roosevelt.

You have elected to condemn the innocent, and there is no excuse for ignorance in your case. You have no right to make any statement unless you know it is true. You have no right to take the word of a band of pirates who live off of the sweat and blood of the poor.

I resent this insult to my comrades as much as if it had been offered to me personally, or to my brothers in the flesh, or to my wife, or to any that I hold dear.

I desire to have this little reply published, so that all may read it who read your article. This is the least you can do in the way of reparation.

James Alexander Campbell Meng.

Eureka Springs, Ark.

[The brother's name, especially the middle portion of it, is better than his logic. When we said that the acquittal of Haywood on the charge of murder does not prove that he is a desirable citizen, we said only what any sane man is prepared to admit. The desirability of such citizens must be determined by finer considerations than the question as to whether they are guilty of murder or not. We have never asserted the guilt of Haywood and his associates. We do not remember that we have ever declared them undesirable citizens. What we do assert is that the acquittal does not prove that they are desirable. Again, about the perjured jurors. The question is, not whether Brother Meng was convinced of Haywood's guilt, but whether the jurors were convinced of it. Two jurors declare that they were convinced that he was guilty, and yet they voted "not guilty." Having sworn to give their honest judgment according to the law and the evidence, they gave a verdict which they believed to be contrary to the law and the evidence. Whether the verdict was right or wrong, the moral status of these jurors is fixed by the fact that they thought one thing and said another. If any one is really interested in knowing whether or not our comments on the Haywood case breathe "the spirit of venomous hatred" and "vituperation," we recommend that he read them over again and form a first-hand opinion from the documents themselves. It is just possible that Brother Meng, though mild and gentle in his own language, has found in our editorial utterances a degree of ferocity which others may not have noticed.—EDITOR.]

THE JAMESTOWN FAIR.

Where Pocahontas strung her beads
Beside her wigwam door,
And Captain Smith with rapture hailed
The green and wooded shore,
Lo! all the nations of the earth
Bring treasures, rich and rare,
To where Virginia sits in state
And holds the Jamestown Fair.

Where long ago the painted brave
Propelled his birch canoe,
The fleets of mighty naval powers
Are anchored on the blue;
A thousand silken banners gay
Are fluttering in the air,
And batteries from every ship
Salute the Jamestown Fair.

It is Virginia's proudest day—
Three centuries of renown
In war and peace have won for her
A fadeless laurel crown.
The fruits of all her years of toil
Are proudly garnered there
Beneath the countless clustered roofs
That mark the Jamestown Fair.

From Indian tepees she has reared
From palaces of trade,
From strings of savage wampum shells
The gold of commerce made.
The smoke from her tobacco crops
Is fragrant everywhere,
And like an azure aureole
Surrounds the Jamestown Fair.

Virginia is "at home" to-day
Among the glittering spires
Arising from the ashes gray
Of ancient council fires,
And ready to receive her friends
With pride beyond compare,
She opens wide her spacious gates—
Behold! the Jamestown Fair.

As Pastor Brown went about his new parish he found many people who had moved there from the surrounding cities and towns to hear the preaching, and having been touched and transformed by the Word they were loth to remove from the locality, notwithstanding the winter season was coming on and there was little to do for so many people in such a country place. At first this fact distressed the pastor, but as he prayed and thought upon the matter, light dawned upon him.

He would propose that all the land within two miles each way from the house of worship be placed within an incorporation and platted into a garden city, and a portion be allotted to each household belonging to the congregation. Upon this a small rent should be paid into the common treasury, from which those owning the land thus put within the incorporation should be paid. The price should be fixed at its nominal value from the first, which then stood at about ten dollars per acre. Thus the land would pass into the ownership of the incorporation, which was the Christian Congregation of Middleton, or representatives chosen by the Congregation, being always and only members of the assembly as elected from year to year.

The details were easily arranged, since Pastor Brown put his land in first at cost, and did not ask for a payment to be made until ten years should elapse. Others did likewise, and many put in money also, until it was estimated that over a half million dollars was represented in the corporation, and a bank was the next public building after the house of worship was built.

Men of all trades and occupations were called together in that community, so that there was lack of nothing that was required in ordinary life. Nor did there seem to be too many when all were organized and each doing his or her part for the community.

The land was apportioned in large garden plots, with streets, alleys and parks along the beautiful river. A fine public square and grounds were apportioned for school buildings and other public functions, as they might be needed for future use. All who were able built houses from their own funds; but those who were not had houses built from the corporation funds. All who built for themselves received approved paper from the corporation, which bore interest and was payable in full on demand for all that they could show vouched for accounts. This gave all ownership of community property such as was necessary for the maintenace of life and the common necessities of all, to the corporation. But other investments, such as factories and business establishments, etc., were owned and built by individuals and companies, upon leased ground from the corporation, upon most reasonable conditions, being taxed according to their income, which was always ascertainable from copies of their bills and receipts being required as public records, the same as leases and bonds. In fact, none of the business houses kept their own books, but turned their whole accounting over to the public functionaries, who did all the business of accounting for the city, which was paid for out of the common treasury. This necessitated more officials and a regular department for accounts, but it was found to be the cheapest and best practice, since it could be attended to by experts and there was no opportunity for large firms to make fictitious accounts nor evade their tax. Then the city had control of all business without owning it.

Indications of oil and natural gas led experts to investigate, and in the course of six months a gusher was brought in which furnished oil and gas sufficient for the use of the city. Many others were also sunk for business needs, and the community grew and flourished.

A railway company saw the advantages of this region and pushed their western-bound survey and subsequently a railroad directly through the incorporation's plat. This had been anticipated by the surveyors who platted the town, and there was no difficulty in adjusting the matter when it came.

Schools, sidewalks, streets, water works, lights and every public function now sprung up and were paid for from the rents of the land and other revenues derived from other public property and franchises, without license from any corrupting saloons, brothels or gambling dens. And there was abundance of revenue, and public spirit was not lacking to use it in building up a clean and prosperous city, which became a model upon which the "restoration" began not many years later, as we shall see.

By the ownership of the land the city had an increasing and perpetual revenue, from which a larger income could be derived than by taxation, and yet the burden was not so great upon the people, since the investment was not theirs, but the city's, and they paid less than legal interest in the rent system. All houses and improvements, not exceeding a thousand dollars, were built and the expenses borne by the city, and the investment counted as a rise, to that extent, in the value; hence the rent increased correspondingly. But the rate never increased beyond 5 per cent and fell far below that figure. So that the rent upon land worth a thousand dollars with a thousand-dollar house and improvements, did not amount to over $50 per year ordinarily, and never above $100, which was exceptional. It reached that figure but once in my informant's remembrance, and that was when the great steel bridge was built across the river at a cost of a million dollars.

Should any one wish to build, for their comfort and pleasure, a house worth more than the limited sum set aside for each, he could do so and be protected with an extension lease and rights to sell his improvements to a successor. Over two thousand homes were built in the first three years and the income from rents and other revenues accrued to about three thousand dollars, making it possible for the Assembly to extend the improvements and increase the comforts to all within the incorporated community as well as to send out relief to worthy friends and prospecting parties who acted as their first missionaries.

Many came who did not wish to work their land. To such homes without gardens were provided upon lots within the more densely populated parts of the city, on the same scale. Again many gardens with one, two or three acres were provided at corresponding prices, according to locality, for families as they were able to work them. And thus the living places were increased and homes multiplied and the city enlarged.

It was found necessary to increase the house of worship and also to build others, as the population spread. Several of the denominations sought to get a foothold within the city and build churches, but the thought of unity was so strong within the hearts of all who came in touch with the Middleton project that even the missionaries who were sent in to build their churches, were wont to follow the plan of the Christian congregation, and leaving their own churches they applied for work under the Assembly.

Dr. Reid, Mr. MacDonald and the Gordons, with a large company of believers, came on to find a refuge and an asylum with the new project, for they had found only disappointment and persecution in the city of Eaton, after President Brown left.

Charlie and Miss MacBride had joined their fortunes and come to the new town to attend to its law and superintend its printing work, shortly after it was started, and they found much to do and were appreciated for the excellent qualities and efficiency they possessed.

The Judge having lost heart after being out of active work and subjected to the petty annoyances of such treatment as was accorded to him, sold his home and gathering his other belongings, bade farewell to the sacred spot where his dead were resting, and found his way also to the "Eden beyond the Rockies," as he was wont to call Middleton.

Loneliness in a Great City.

If you live in a large city you are lost. You are swallowed up in the ocean of people around you. You go down into the deep and that's the last of you, except perhaps an occasional bubble that may come to the surface near where you were last seen. There are so many people you can't escape drowning.

You can't make friendships as you do in a smaller place, where the individual isn't entirely effaced by the mass. Society is not what it is in the smaller place, where the human element enters in altogether. In the larger place your comings and goings are not noted even by your friends, and never by the newspapers unless you are one of the high financiers or packing-house bunch. The births and weddings in your family are of no more interest, outside your own flat, than are the wreaths of smoke curling up into the empyrean; no merry crowd of interested neighbors with their warm congratulations. The deaths bring little sympathy from the rumbling, rattling world outside; no sorrowing acquaintances who have stood by you through the long sickness; there is little or none of that evidence of loving kindness that comes from neighbors and real friends in a small city or town, where the dollar mark is not written so large and so indelibly on everything.

It is a paradoxical law that where there are so many people there are fewer friends, and when you diminish the number to a frontier community where neighbors are miles apart your friends are ready to take their lives in their hands for you.—Fremont (Ohio) Post.

"Dress and Undress Thy Soul."

This is George Herbert's advice, and this is the way to do it: "Sum up at night what thou hast done by day, and in the morning what thou hast to do." Seek sweet fellowship with God both in the beginning and the ending of the day, as well as through all its busy hours. Pass judgment on what you have done, and plan what you will do, in the light of an opportunity to serve and glorify God. Be sure that your soul is always "clothed with the righteousness of Christ."

Here is a poem, not of roses and sunshine, as that of Turran Wilbur's, but of food. Thus it runs:

There are no "ten best things to eat"
Here in Virginia,
To make the catalog complete
Here in Virginia.
We'd first allow ourselves a score:
When that was done we'd call for more—
And then all limits we'd ignore—
Down in Virginia.
The oyster nowhere grows so plump
As in Virginia.
The soft crab's nowhere such a trump
As in Virginia.
Our turkey comes from Princess Anne—
The same that gladdened Powhatan—
And nowhere do they cook it, man,
As in Virginia.
Elsewhere fried chicken counterfeits
Ours in Virginia;
And as for soulful gravy, it's
Ours in Virginia.
Oh, every bird from snipe to squab
Is with us, too: and, gob on gob,
A fellow eats corn on the cob
In old Virginia.
Nowhere are bogfish found so sweet
As in Virginia.
Nowhere have pigs such pickled feet
As in Virginia.
There is no other Smithfield ham.
Our corncakes thrill the diaphragm,
We have the little neck-ed clam
Down in Virginia!
In vegetables and in meat,
Here in Virginia,
We've everything that's good to eat—
Come, get it in yuh!
Whether it hail from soil or sea,
Whether it hang on vine or tree,
The best of edibility
Is in Virginia.

The Old Dominion.

Do you know how Virginia came to be called the Old Dominion? According to Dr. J. P. Blanton it was in this wise:

"King Charles II was proclaimed in Virginia before the invitation was extended to him to return from exile and mount his father's throne. The title by which the colonial authorities proclaimed him was King of England, Scotland, Ireland and Virginia. The Virginians were intensely royalist during the civil war in England, and sent a special messenger to Charles, begging him to come over and rule in Virginia as king until he came to his own in England. It is said that he was on the point of sailing when invited to London. As a return for the loyalty of the Virginians, he directed that the arms of Virginia be quartered with those of England, Scotland and Ireland, as a separate number of the British empire. Hence the colony was known as the 'Dominion of Virginia,' and the word 'old' was used to distinguish the present territory from other parts of the British colonial empire in America, much of which was originally known under the general name of Virginia."

Record in School Attendance.

What is believed to be a good record attendance at school has been made at Richmond, where Jessie Hobday has attended every school day without once being late, from the age of three to fourteen. This makes eleven years' perfect attendance, and she has won every award the education committee can offer.

She has a silver medal for seven years' attendance, a silver watch and several other valuable prizes.—London Globe

Reasons for Optimism.

Here are some of the reasons why I think life is a blessing and hope the world is growing better:

1. Because I was born that way.
2. Because my father and mother were very good to me.
3. Because there is a lot of useful work to be done in the world, and very interesting.
4. Because it is a pleasure just to know things, and everybody can know something.
5. Because there are a great many people in the world of the same kind (though not of the same degree) as Edward Everett Hale, and it is good to keep company with them.
6. Because marriage is a success when it is real.
7. Because it is free to go a-fishing, even though you catch but little fish.
8. Because good books are cheap, and the best are the cheapest.
9. Because virtue wears better than vice.
10. Because God lives in the world. A consistent religion is at the foundation of all optimism.—Henry van Dyke.

ECHOES FROM THE CRADLE

By JAMES L. HILL—(Continued from last week.)

The fiery orator who has been affirming that God Almighty has lost money on every negro he has raised since the war ought to visit the $100,000 negro building and exhibit. The young ladies employed in this building had their pictures taken in a group. In figure and in looks I did not see but that they would hold their own with any of them. They were, as the Scripture says, "black but comely."

History is only dull to persons who lack imagination. I worked my picture-making faculty out to its limit when at Jamestown, in trying to fancy the Dutch trader standing on a hogshead selling the slaves who were made to stand on a contiguous hogshead. These twenty "negars" were the first slaves imported into this country.

At Norfolk, which is central to the Exposition, imbedded in the wall of St. Paul's Church is a five-and-a-half-inch cannonball, lodged there by Lord Dunmore in the bombardment New Year's day, 1776; and in the churchyard, which was given the generous area of two acres in extent, is this epitaph:

"Behold my grave, how low I lie;
As you are now, so once was I;
As I am now, so you must be;
Then be prepared to follow me."

It is said that during the Civil War a soldier was responsible for scratching on the tombstone with his sabre these additional lines:

"To follow you I am not bent Until I know which way you went."

Living in the North, we do not realize what swarms of negroes there have come to be, numbering more by far than there were people in the country when the Revolution was fought and the Constitution adopted. Middle-aged men revert to a time when the negroes of the South did not own a square foot of the earth's surface, and now have more than five hundred million dollars in property.

I recall no instance during the eleven days given to the Exposition in which I thought I was overcharged. I engaged the first room I was shown in the first hotel I visited. I never was more contented nor more comfortable.

They run a vegetable-express from Norfolk every night. It was novel to see eleven negroes, a few feet apart, in a line, tossing watermelons along from one to another on their way from the stacks on the boats to the cars about to start in the cool of the day for the night run to the markets next morning in the North.

If a person will run over the literature at the Exposition, he will come pretty near reaching the conclusion that the far-famed dusky damsel, daughter of Powhatan, was first of all in love with the ablest man, the natural leader, for whom she interceded with her father, who offered to adopt when about twenty-nine years of age. But John Smith cared more for adventure, and would not tie himself up with even a princess. It appears that Pocahontas only married John Rolfe on being told that John Smith was dead, as he had returned to England on account of burns received by an accidental explosion of gunpowder on his boat; that he kept out of her way when she went to England, and saw her tardily; and, when they met, after a "modest salutation, without any word, she turned about, and obscured her face as not being well contented." At length she said to him: "They did tell us you were dead, and I knew no other till I came to Plymouth (England). Your countrymen will lie much."

Around Williamsburg, which became the recognized successor of Jamestown in the life of the colony, cluster more historic associations than about any other existing American town or city. Here in its church worshiped Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Madison, Monroe and Tyler, the Randolphs, the Lees, and Chief-Justice Marshall. Here is the font used in the sprinkling of Pocahontas. The fees of the parish clerk were three pounds of tobacco "for registering every christening and burial in ye parish," the "sexton to have ten of tobacco for every grave he diggs." When the students from the college of William and Mary file into the gallery, the door of the gallery is locked, and the key given to the sexton. Here can still be deciphered the names of Patrick Henry and other notable men who beguiled themselves while locked up in this gallery by carving their names upon the hacked railing with their jack-knives.

In tide-water Virginia the breeze seems continuous. Take the shady side of the street, or lift a light sunshade, and there is no particular discomfort.

My visit to Jamestown I counted about the happiest of my whole life. Any man who is not interested in such scenes as these is a hopeless case. An angel from heaven would not know what to do with him. Standing in one spot you see the earthworks built by John Smith before even Pilgrim days. That's one thing. You see, too, plainly the foundation of the house of Bacon, who one hundred years before the Revolution led Bacon's Rebellion, which was the first American open-armed determined resistance to the crown. You see the earthworks thrown up at the time of the Revolution, and the fortification by Lee at the time of the war between the states. More bloody conflicts have occurred on the peninsula between the James River and the York than upon any territory of similar size in the New World.

At Fort, or more properly Fortress, Monroe, as it is a fort within a fort, right across from the Exposition grounds, we visited the Young Men's Christian Association building, given by that idolized queen among women, Miss Helen Miller Gould. We walked across the moat, and looked in at the grated window and large iron-bound door, heavily hung with chains, of the casement where the ex-president of the Confederacy, Jefferson Davis, was detained as a prisoner in 1865. We walked out upon the parade ground and stood under the solitary live oak tree where he was given his freedom.

"Mamma, mamma! Come quick, mamma. Here are Captain John Smith and the Indians!" The little fellow, going ahead and looking in at the door, saw the redoubtable colonist saved by the intercession of Pocahontas and the twenty Indians, wax figures; and without tarrying to further contemplate the scene he rushed back to call up the less excitable laggards. His mind had been all stirred up by the pictures in geographies and histories. And here they were. We will never give up the story of the rescue by Pocahontas, nor the one equally dear to childhood of the cherry tree and hatchet. Perish the wicked thought! Go off the stage, you skeptics who would expunge these precious morsels of history. You give me a pain. Go away.

Yorktown, being so near, is a part of the show. If Rip Van Winkle were to do again what made him famous, this ancient of days would be the place. It makes one sleepy to look at the town. It is drowsy, and has waited for more than a century for a regeneration that will never come. As it has been, so it will continue to be, world without end. It has not one touch of life, and not one sign of progress. It lives in history. Here is the first custom house erected in the United States, and all goods for both New York and Philadelphia were imported only through it. But this home of the lotus-eaters, this somnolent, dreamy, quaint, picturesque town, scene of Washington's proudest achievement, will always be a Mecca to those who desire to stand on the spot where the ca-

Just where the Canonicus, exhibited by special act of Congress, an old-type monitor and a veteran, lies at anchor, a scene that we passed over a dozen times, the iron-ribbed Merrimac, looking like a submerged house with the roof only visible, steamed majestically along, delivering a broadside at the Congress, which burned and finally blew up, until, true as an arrow, with all the power of her irresistible weight she plunged headlong into the Cumberland, striking her amidships, crushing in her side with a mortal gash. Crowding on all steam, she made another plunge, striking exactly upon the former wound, demolishing the oaken side as if it had been a lattice-work of laths. Forty-five minutes finished the Cumberland, and all that could be seen of her was the tip of her topmast, where just above the water were the Stars and stripes still floating. The Minnesota, Roanoke and St. Lawrence were all grounded, and an easy prey for the insatiable, cruel monster on the morrow. That morrow!

"The heavy night hung dark, the hills and waters o'er."

The consternation was indescribable. Gloom settled over the North. The Merrimac, from whose invulnerable sides the heaviest projectiles glanced off like hail, would dismantle Fortress Monroe, and then devastate our exposed cities. A little past midnight, March 9, 1862, a mysterious thing crept in between the two capes of Virginia. It looked like a cheesebox on a raft. The Merrimac, entirely unconscious of a new antagonist when the sun rose Lord's day morning with unusual brilliance in a serene and cloudless sky, came leisurely along and opened fire on the Minnesota, which was still aground. The Monitor, like little David, comes boldly out to meet the lordly Goliath. She steamed around her heavy antagonist as a hornet would attack a bull. Never before had ships met carrying such heavy guns. All the wooden navies of the world became valueless in an hour. The advantage was all with the smaller craft. The Merrimac received her pounding in sullen silence until she had been opened and some of her guns put out of action. Particularly notice that, while she had the advantage of a flood-tide, she did not return to do anything further to the Minnesota, Roanoke and St. Lawrence. Her injuries were vital. Two tugs took her fainting and dying to Norfolk, where, in chagrin and despair, she finally committed suicide.

This is the first exposition ever held on deep water. When we at length turned away homeward by ocean-going steamer, any attempt to describe the glare and luster of the myriads of electric lights blazing and flashing through the wide, brilliant area of the City Beautiful would be like trying to paint the lily. The most competent descriptive pens have with this task faltered, and been laid aside in defeat. Though we were receding rapidly by steam, yet the magnificent pageant lasted for hours, and in thought we can still, and shall ever, see the flash and halo of that enchanting dreamland picture or mirage. We have nothing but praise for Dixie, away down South in the land of cotton, where we have had so much happiness in the good old summer-time. To write with less enthusiasm is to write less than the truth.

"The roses nowhere bloom so white as in Virginia;
The sunshine nowhere shines so bright as in Virginia;
The birds sing nowhere quite so sweet,
And nowhere hearts so lightly beat;
For heaven and earth both seem to meet
Down in Virginia.

"The days are never quite so long as in Virginia;
Nor quite as filled with happy song as in Virginia;
And when my time has come to die,
Just take me back and let me lie
Close where the James goes rolling by,
Down in Virginia.

"There is nowhere a land so fair as in Virginia;
So full of song, so free of care, as in Virginia;
And I believe that Happy Land
The Lord's prepared for mortal man
Is built exactly on the plan
Of old Virginia."

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

From C. L. R., Letah, Wash., comes a picture inscribed "To Felix." It is a portrait of a child who desperately grasps a poor cat by the elongated neck. Underneath is written:

"Got my kitten's picture took!
Had to put me in
Cos we couldn't make her 'look'
Nor hold up her chin."

Which reminds me that I was about to tell of Felix' attendance at the wedding. A month or so ago a couple drove over to Bentonville to have my father marry them. The ceremony took place in our parlor, and as the bridal train swept through the spacious halls (the graphophone next door struck up Mendelssohn's "March" written for such occasions) Felix squeezed his way in unobserved, very sneaking and meek, as an uninvited guest at a wedding should be by rights. No one paid much attention to him till things drew to a focus, and personal questions began to be asked, such as "Do you take," etc. Felix got restless and began pacing up and down before the high contracting parties, looking into their faces and saying "Miew!" just as plain as anything. I laid for him, to grab him should he come within reach of my rather long arms, and, fortunately, as the minister was asking if any one present knew a reason for keeping the gentleman in conventional black from "taking" the lady in question, and as Felix backed himself upon his tail, lifted his forepaws from the ground and drew back his whiskers preparatory to letting off a stentorian wail, I was barely able to clutch him by the throat, which I did. So everything went off smoothly, with smothered protests from Felix, frantic wrigglings of his lithe form and much shedding of his hair, in his futile attempts to break up the wedding.

Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn., sends her twenty-sixth Av. S. quarterly report, and has this to say: "Mrs. Anna Shaw is not president of the W. C. T. U. She is only one of our lecturers. Mrs. Lillian N. M. Stevens is national president. The national convention this year will be held at Nashville, November 8-15. Come over. And the South is going 'dry'!" (Of course it is I who said that Mrs. Shaw was national president. Looks like I am always getting into trouble. I'd better leave the W. C. T. U. and San Antonio alone).

Anna Smith, Howard, Kan.: "I'm late to the orphan's ice cream social, but the ice cream at the bottom of the freezer is always best. Pineapple flavor, please, and $1 worth. The Av. S. is doing a noble work, and may Charlie ever follow its example."

O. G. Kitchen, Louisville, Ky.: "'Over the desolate wastes of those lonely mountains the moonlight threw a veil of hushed mystery.'—Around the Gulf to Mexico. Ah, you do not know how I love that 'desolate wastes,' 'lonely mountains,' 'moonlight mystery.' Well, if that is dreaming, I am a dreamer beyond redemption. To dream of the 'hushed mystery' of the moonlight; of the shimmer and fall of the autumn leaves; the weird woodland by night; the dumb love of the autumn and my October which is now come. Just a word to say that I await with great anticipation the weekly arrival of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST."

Mrs. M. J. Cliser, Barnard, Mo.: "Here we come to Charlie's ice cream social; a little late, but all can't eat at the first table. Mrs. Mary Key wants a dish; Truman and Roena Witt, little grandchildren, want one each, and the rest of the 90 cents will get three dishes for myself."

Kathryn from Clover Dale Farm, McGirk, Mo.: "I can not resist sending a snapshot of our 'moreau,' recently taken. The writer sits in the boat but is not rowing. I wish I had been, so you could see how it is done!" (I am mighty glad you weren't, for I know the boat would, in that case, have been going so fast no kodak on earth could have snapped it. Maybe you think I can't row? When I row the kodaks are aimed about twenty-five yards ahead of me, and by the time the snap is snapped—but, "Ich prahle nicht," as we students of foreign languages sometimes say). "Please compare this picture with the card sent you by Mrs. Bessie Tracy Ryman, and kindly advise her if hers looks anything like a moreau. When will I hear the last of that, anyhow? While on a visit to St. Louis lately I visited the Orphans' Home and called to see Charlie." (Well, well, well! I just now glanced at the top of the page I was copying, not because I was looking for anything, but because I had nothing else to do. [This is Monday, but our washing is done "out"] and lo, and behold! just see what I found written there in large letters: "Do not have this printed." That's what it says. Now, see what I have done! I won't give any more, but really I can't scratch all this out after taking the trouble to copy it. The next time Kathryn writes to me I'll look for the "Don't publish" posting on her grounds before I go hunting. I can only say to Mrs. Ryman that what she sent me as a moreau isn't near so romeauish as Kathryn's romeau, but is made out of the same material).

Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo.: I will send in my fourteenth Av. S. report in the near future. I enjoyed 'Around the Gulf to Mexico' very much. If the orphan's ice cream holds out as well as it did last year there is still some for husband and me; we prefer vanilla flavor. May God bless the Av. S., Charlie and Drusie."

Ataline S. Stokes, Carthage, Ill.: "As I do not eat ice cream, I send $1 to be divided between Charlie and Drusie. I am hoping Charlie will be another Dr. Shepardson in usefulness. God bless Drusie in her work. I enjoyed 'Around the Gulf to Mexico' very much. Have been reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST since 1870."

Mrs. A. W. Campbell, Talala, I. T.: "I am greatly interested in our orphan boy Charlie, and trust he may grow up to be a true, useful Christian man. I enclose $1.50 to help with the ice cream social. Most of this is part of a collection taken up at our union Sunday-school. I attend a union church, where three branches share equally in collections, etc. We are thankful for even this privilege, and hope for better things in the future. May God bless the undertakings of the Av. S., and may that social be a grand success."

Mrs. J. R. Goodwin, Abilene, Kan.: "Better late than never! For this $1.25 give two dishes of that orphan ice cream to Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Goodwin, four saucers for our own family, the rest for you and Felix. May God bless this noble work is my prayer."

A brief extract from Drusie's last letter, which will be given more in full in two weeks: "The draft for $6 from the Av. S. sent June 25, reached me to-day (August 1). Thank you again. The Lord timed its coming. Delayed rains have caused foodstuffs to go up almost two prices, and on account of the people not being able to get in their crops there is much danger of suffering this winter. The Av. S. and the entire CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are as interesting as ever. In fact, they grow better each week. 'Agnes of the Bad Lands' was just splendid in every way. I enjoyed it immensely. I also enjoy 'Around the Gulf to Mexico.'"

Mrs. C. E. Alderman, Instituto Christiano, Monterey, Mexico: "It is very kind of you to offer to give to the Mission all your books we have not on hand. Of your books we have already Adnah, Red Box Clew and Garcilaso. We will certainly appreciate the other books. It makes my heart glad to see the children so interested in the Av. S. writings. We will have two new teachers in our American school this year, Miss Wise, of Indiana, and Miss Hopper, of St. Louis. I will have Mexican pupils beginning in English. Under Brother Inman's direction the evangelistic work is growing fast. We now have twenty-five preaching points. Children and I spent five happy weeks up in the mountains, about

Avoid Secret Stomach Remedies

Because Most of Them Contain Dangerous Ingredients, Which Produce the Drug Habit.

Thousands of people, having dyspepsia or stomach troubles in some form, continually "dope" themselves with all sorts of secret tonics, drugs, pills, cathartics, etc., which not only inflame and irritate the stomach and intestines, but in many cases cause the opium, morphine and cocaine habits.

You have a right and should demand to know what any medicine contains before you take it, unless it is put up or recommended by some reputable physician. Fakes and quacks will put most anything into their secret preparations, to make you like their useless stuff so as to want more of it, until it makes you the victim of some drug habit, which will ruin your health in a short time.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are not a secret remedy, they do not contain injurious drugs, and they are recommended by thousands of physicians in the United States and Canada to their patients for dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach, and all other stomach troubles resulting from improper digestion of food.

These wonderful tablets actually digest food because they contain the very elements that are required of a healthy stomach to properly digest food, thus acting as a substitute and giving the overworked digestive organs a rest and a chance to regain their former health, strength and vigor.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain fruit and vegetable essences, the pure concentrated tincture of hydrastis, and golden seal, which tone up and strengthen the mucous coats of the stomach and increase the flow of gastric and other digestive juices; lactose (extracted from milk); nux, to strengthen the nerves controlling the action of the stomach; bismuth to absorb gases and prevent fermentation, and pure aseptic pepsin (gov. test) of the highest digestive power. All of these are scientifically incorporated in these tablets or lozenges and constitute a complete, natural, speedy cure for any stomach trouble.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold in large fifty-cent boxes, by all druggists.

100 miles south of Monterey, at the home of Dr. Lines. All are well but Helen; she is having the fever."

A Sincere Friend, Knox City, Mo.: "I send wherewith to buy seven dishes of ice cream from one who never eats the restaurant kind. The ice cream of your orphan's social is the only kind that perfectly agrees with me."

Mrs. S. A. Penn, Wellsville, Mo.: "One dollar for ice cream for a family of six. I am glad Charlie has been able to make himself useful, for our earnest prayers for him are that he may be a useful man, and make the world better by having lived in it. May God's richest blessings be his. You can never know the good the Av. S. is doing for young and old."

Bunceton, Mo.: "Divide this $1 between Drusie and Charlie, and may the Lord bless them and the Av. S."

Mrs. Ruby Garrett, Holt, Mo.: "Sixty cents for ice cream. My three little girls send a nickel apiece, their little friend, Raymond Miller, sends a nickel, two friends send a quarter and I add the 15 cents."

R. S. Hoqueth, Medford, Mo.: "I have for some time been intending to help along the good work of the Av. S., so on yesterday's hot afternoon, as I read the Av. S. letters about the orphan's ice cream social, I decided that I could not, must not, wait longer. I tell all the children I can of those good stories on your page, and of the Av. S. God bless the noble work. I enclose $1 for ice cream."

Sadie Pugsley, Woodbine, Iowa: "A dish of ice cream, please; it is very warm to-day and will taste good. I enclose my eighth quarterly report. I must tell you how much I enjoyed that 'Around the Gulf to Mexico'." (Well, now, just look at that! "Of course," says this letter, "this is not for publication!" Isn't that aggravating, just as I was getting ready to print some compliments to my ownself!)

Mrs. J. O. Johnston, Stewartsville, Mo.: "We've been selfish reading 'Around the Gulf to Mexico' and never saying a word. How Mr. Johnston did laugh—he happened to be shaving himself at the time, too—when I read him about the shaving experience on the train. I know it was a fine trip for Jebly; of course, Morton had been there before. The utter lack of all sham and pretense in the narrative is perfectly remarkable in this day of shams. I hope that band may have other fine trips before them and that their final destination will be the Eternal City, where they need neither tricycle nor bologna sausage."

A card from Mrs. Alderman, Monterey, Mexico: "The books came to the Mission, and my children and I am greatly enjoying 'Stork's Nest.' Mr. Moses is in ill-health and has returned to the States. Dengue fever is sweeping the city. My little Eva is now in bed. Our new teachers are splendid."

Detroit, Mich.: "$5.70 for Charlie. This is all that was cleared at an ice cream social given for him by his friends in Detroit."

El Oro, Mexico: "That account of the trip through Mexico was very interesting, though, of course, I could pick holes in the weak spots till it would look like a porous plaster, if I wanted to. If you pronounced San Luis Potosi as you said it should be pronounced, any son of Mexico, or stepson, either, would laugh you to scorn. After a great deal of coaxing I have induced my cat to get upon the shelf at my elbow, where he is rolling in enjoyment. That miserable beast curries himself every day on my trousers." (When I get out "Around the Gulf to Mexico" in book form, I am going to leave out all about San Antonio and Mexico, to avoid errors, and simply retain the Gulf. Which brings receipts from our orphan's social to the interesting figure of $65.15. This includes another quarter from Mrs. Burris of this city, and my friend Bert Coleman's half dollar).

He and his wife happened to be visiting us one evening when a neighbor sent in some ice cream to us (not knowing we had company). Of course, we were considerably chagrined to have to divide up—Mrs. Doke was here, too—but we smiled and made the most of it, and they made the most of it, too; that is to say, they ate the most of it. But Mr. Coleman had his half-dollar for the orphan's ice cream, so I couldn't withhold a little of my own. Mr. Coleman is an engineer and has seen much of the world, and he says I can't say anything against Mexico that will be as strong as the truth. Not that I want to say anything against her at all, but I'm glad there's one man on the ground to back me, so we insist on San-loo-ee-po-to-see as being the pronounciation of that city, as given by the magnates we met on the International.

I was just about to mail this to The Christian-Evangelist when comes the "Via de Paz" from Monterey with this bad news: "Mrs. Alderman, her son Floyd and Miss Hopper have dengue fever. Miss Wise is not well enough to teach. There is hardly a home in the city where the fever is not raging. It is sometimes called 'the breakbone fever,' because of the terrible aches in the back and head. We have been obliged to close the American school this week."

Logs Make Paper.

The Census Bureau has just issued a bulletin on the printing and publishing industry, taken from the census of manufacturers for the year 1905. The bulletin says:

"The total number of establishments in this industry in 1905 was 26,422, a number larger than was reported for any other industry. The increase reported from 1900 to 1905 forms a striking exception to the prevailing tendency toward consolidation, for it was proportionately greater than from 1890 to 1900.

"Photography and photo-engraving have become the handmaidens of printing, and the liberal use of these two allied arts has brought extensive patronage from interests hitherto unresponsive. So great, indeed, is the cost of illustration employed by many large manufacturers and others in commending their interests to the public that the mere printing—the cost of composition, presswork, paper and accessories—becomes a trifle in comparison.

"No increase in the industry has been more striking than that reported for the number of pounds of paper used. Of the total amount of paper manufactured in 1905 more than 900,000 tons were used solely for newspapers and periodicals, representing almost one-third of the entire output of the paper mills of the United States. To make this paper required the services of nearly 15,000 men, and represented approximately $9,000,000 in wages. These mills used as raw material 1,300,000 cords of spruce, poplar and hemlock logs, representing the timber product of approximately 100,000 acres, exclusive of the logs imported from Canada. Thus every working day in the year the forests of New England and the Middle States, with scattered areas elsewhere in the North and Northwest, yielded approximately 1,765,000 feet of timber to be transformed into the newspapers and magazines required to supply the people of the United States.

"As might be expected from its preeminence in population, New York reported in 1905 more than double the number of daily papers contributed by any other city, the total number being evenly divided between morning and evening papers."

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, OCTOBER 10, 1907.

FORWARD WITH CHRIST!

(Dedicated to Norfolk, 1907.)

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

NOT "Back to Christ!" our battle-cry,
But "Forward!" as He still leads on,
Till on the Heights our feet shall stand,
Amid the glories of His Dawn.

He rules not from Jerusalem,
He speaks no more in Galilee;
His throne is in the hearts of men,
His voice is heard from sea to sea.

Forward with Him in righteousness,
Till we indeed be sons of God;
High minds, pure hearts and stainless hands
Be ours who tread the paths He trod.

Forward with Him until all men
Shall brothers be from shore to shore,
Till Hatred shall be overthrown
And Selfishness shall be no more.

Forward with Him, the Prince of Peace,
Till He shall set Love's banner high
Above the nations of the earth,
And bid the last war demon die.

"Forward with Christ!" Be this our cry,
Till we shall gain that longed-for Goal
Beyond the clouds, to dwell with Him,
Undaunted Captain of the Soul!

—The pressroom of the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, is in need of several competent feeders for cylinder presses.

—Our communion ware contains the best values for the selling price of any manufactured. If we were not convinced of this we would change to another line. All the makers write for our orders.

—Last Thursday morning's mail added twenty new preachers to our list. The loyalty of this paper to the Scriptures, its unceasing advocacy of the plea of that great Reformation, and its unfailing constructiveness is being appreciated by Disciples as never before.

—A great many preachers are joining our Book Lovers Society and writing us to send them one book per month of the new books we think would please them. All our preachers are cordially invited to join the society. Books are sent promptly and payments may be made at the convenience of the purchasers.

—We sell the famous Philadelphia Pin-cushion Blackboard complete with table and pictures for $15. The use of this device has doubled the attendance and the usefulness of the younger departments in many schools. Descriptive circulars sent on application. We strongly recommend the use of this board.

—While you may not have secured enough new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to pay your way to Norfolk before the convention, now that you have returned home, begin immediately and you will be surprised to see how quickly you can pay back into your household treasury your convention expenses.

—Marion Stevenson's teacher-training course now appearing in "Our Young Folks" is attracting wide attention. We will supply the earlier numbers to new classes. Those getting 70 per cent or more in the final examination will get a diploma from the international committee. This will be a certificate of a noble achievement and an evidence of one of life's real honors.

—A brother minister recently informed us that during the past year he had purchased over $200 worth of books from the Presbyterian Board of Publications. Another wrote that he had been liberally patronizing a Baptist publication society. We are as well equipped as either of those denominational houses for serving our brethren and believe we could have saved them a little money on many of their purchases. At least, try us first hereafter.

—Bible Studies for Teacher-Training. By Charles Roads, D. D. Price 60 cents net. This is a normal text book with analytic, synthetic side lights. The studies are outline in character, but stimulating. It will be very helpful.

Beautiful Joe. By Marshall Saunders. Price $1.25. Five hundred thousand copies of this classic animal story have been sold. Do you want any further testimony as to its worth? Buy it, read it, cry over it, laugh over it. One underlying thought in the book is that the keeping of pets by children unconsciously leads them to think of others.

—The Saloon Keeper's Ledger. By Louis Albert Banks. Price 75 cents. A series of temperance revival addresses by a well-known, popular preacher. Dr. Banks is a specialist in illustration. The idea of the book is to show the saloon debtor to disease, immorality, ruined homes, pauperized labor, lawlessness, crime and political corruption. Then we are told how to settle the account.

—Christianity's Storm Centre. By Charles Stelzle. Price $1 net. The author, a young minister, has for some years been making a special study of social conditions. To him the storm centre is the city and its problem an industrial one. He wants to arouse the church to alter its methods; then he believes it will win the fight for uniting the church and the laboring masses The book is one to be studied.

—To-day in the Land of To-morrow. By Jasper T. Moses. Price $1. This is the latest book on Mexico and is written by the president of our Christian Institute at Monterey and the son of Editor Moses, of the C. W. B. M. It is an excellent account of the people and this land. Many half-tone reproductions of photographs, and among them those illustrating our own church's work, make the book exceedingly interesting.

These gleanings from the writings, sermons and addresses of the writer of "As Seen from the Dome," in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST were selected in celebration of his thirtieth anniversary at Vermont Ave. Christian Church, Washington. Excellent portraits of Brother Power at the present time and in his early ministry, appear as well as of his church and others that have grown out of it.

—Teaching and Teachers. By H. Clay Trumbull. Price $1.25. This is one of the tried-and-not-found-wanting books. It is by a Sunday-school expert. It is systematic and avoids purely technical terms. In part I is discussed the teaching process under the broad heads of its nature, essentials, elements, methods. There are subdivisions under these heads. The second part takes up the Sunday-school teacher's other work than teaching, such as having and using influence reaching scholars, etc.

WHAT FRIENDS ARE SAYING.

Have just finished reading "Christian Union," by Bro. J. H. Garrison, and wish to thank your company for the service it has rendered our brotherhood in publishing this book. It is the most helpful one on the subject I have ever read. To my mind it presents the error of denominationalism while keeping clear of sectarian seclusiveness. I wish it were possible to place this book in the hands of every denominational minister. It would hasten the day when the churches would be found in world-wide visible fellowship.—Ernest J. Bradley (minister), Lampases, Texas.

Some of the Spiritual Assets of this Great Reformation

By J. M. RUDY

Great! Let us use no feeble words, or weak expressions, in any setting forth of the purpose, or in any description of the scope and mission of our people. The great, big, indifferent world, including a large portion of the religious world, will never think of us as standing for anything great if we do not compel them so to think; and certainly we shall be wholly unfit to so compel them if we ourselves are not so thinking, so feeling and so acting. We can not expect those who simply journeyed along the road with Saul of Tarsus to go forth to whippings and scourgings, to toil and tears, to sacrifices and to death. Why? Because they "stood speechless, yet they saw no man." They did not have the "heavenly vision." God does not seem to call the crowd, but here and there he causes the scales to fall from a few eyes that are blind, and these go forth to see. The great denominations are "journeying with us." How thankful we ought to be to Heaven, that upon us alone, and our puny shoulders, God is not resting the awful burden of saving his world.

At the same time the "vision" that our forefathers saw was peculiarly their own; and to-day it is peculiarly our own. That "vision" is our first great spiritual asset. The man or the woman who does not see that the plea for the organic union of God's people is a great plea, in all his methods of propagating the plea, and in all his efforts to interpret and expound the underlying principles of the plea, will drop to the level of the commonplace and the ordinary. What is not taken in can never be given out. The greatness of our plea is its vitality, and the vitality of our plea is its greatness, but as light mediates between the seeing eye and the object to be seen, so men mediate between God and the great things that God would have realized in the experience and the life of his people. I therefore insist that the greatness of our plea be profoundly realized. The denominational last ought not to be slipped into our shoes. It is too small. God knows we can not stand any shrinking. There is plenty of that sort of tendency in our natures without encouraging it. It is like the weed which comes without coaxing.

We have an abundant supply of little things already; that is, relatively speaking. To hear some people talk you would think our plea is to make plain the few things men must neglect in order to make sure of perdition. The ordinances are used to prove that certain people can never be saved. To hear others talk you would think we were sent of God to make the world see how baptism is for the remission of sins. This is just as profitable as to start out to make it clear how the corn becomes feathers on the goose's and the wool on the sheep's back. Wonderful? Certainly. It is all the more wonderful since we do not know how it happens.

To hear others talk, you would think "our plea" is to show how the people of God are to get together. This is as silly as to undertake to tell how the chicken gets hatched. We can do the incubating, but the hatching process belongs to God. We can look after some of the conditions of Christian union, but the actual growing of Christian people into oneness belongs to God.

If men had stopped to "reason out" how God put the children of Israel over the Red Sea they would still be there "philosophizing." When the waters are sufficient in bulk they make a path for themselves.

God provides veins and arteries as tracks for the flow of the blood, but "the life is in the blood." Give us the life that will impel us forward, and we shall find paths for our feet. The same Christ who is "the life" will show us that he is "the way" also. What then can we do? We can avoid, as we have been trying to do for almost a century, the things that divide the people of God. If we do this faithfully, earnestly and heroically we are creating an atmosphere and an environment which is favorable to union. We are letting our "light so shine before others" that they may see. Whatever helps to create this atmosphere and this environment we need to use, and to use with all our might.

Are we not asleep on the subject of making the printed page preach "our plea" to the people three hundred and sixty-five days in the year? What are we doing to make our plea known, and to make its power felt through the mightiest agency of modern times, viz., the printing press? How many of our families are taking advantage of the inspiration and the information, which a good religious paper brings to the home every week? Think of the results for good of multiplying the power of such a paper as THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Is is not time to wake up the hearts and minds of our people on the subject of what can be done to advance the interests of this great plea?

A few weeks ago there were about forty families in our church at Sedalia, Mo., reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; to-day there are over one hundred and forty. The Christian Publishing Company has a plan which every pastor ought to know and use in putting the paper into the homes of the people. Write for the plan, then go at the work and never let up until this one part of our great Centennial aim is realized, viz., the putting of a good religious paper into every home.

O Love That Will Not Let Me Go

By George D. Matheson

O Love that will not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in Thee!
I give Thee back the life I owe,
That in Thine ocean's depths its flow
May richer, fuller, be.

O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to Thee!
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in Thy sunshine's glow, its day
May brighter, fairer be.

O Joy that seekest me through pain,
I can not close my heart to Thee!
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be.

O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from Thee!
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be.

Current Events

Waterways.

Mr. James J. Hill is in a position to know what he is talking about when he says that it is physically and financially impossible for the railroads to increase their equipment fast enough to keep pace with the increasing commerce of the country. At present the railroads are not able to handle all the business that is offered to them, and most people think that they charge too much for what they do handle. The remedy for both evils is to create new facilities for the transportation of goods by water. The use of the nation's waterways, both natural and artificial, has failed to receive the emphasis which it should receive, partly because, with the great expansion of railroads, the use of water transportation seemed slow and old-fashioned, and partly because the improvement of the waterways has been so complicated with political and sectional interests that the whole affair became an object of disgust among thinking people. For a generation, the rivers and harbors bill of each succeeding Congress has been a hiss and a by-word. It has represented no consistent plan of accomplishing a definite purpose, but has been the resultant of the pulling and hauling of congressmen, each eager to "get something" for his own district. There can never be a rational program for the improvement of the waterways of the country until the representatives of the people in Congress get some glimmer of the idea, which prevails in the British Parliament, that their business is not solely to represent their respective districts but to legislate for the best interests of the whole country. When the problem has been studied, as it is now being studied, with reference to the welfare of the whole country and not with reference to the few who will get the money which the government spends, we shall be ready for a great expenditure for internal waterways, such as was proposed at the last Congress.

Statehood for New Mexico.

An authorized statement has been made that President Roosevelt is in favor of single statehood for New Mexico. He announced recently that he would abandon the plan of joint statehood for New Mexico and Arizona, since it was evident that the two territories did not wish to be united. New Mexico's growth in population has been very rapid during the past two or three years. In the northeastern counties, especially, the transition from a cattle country to a farming country, from open range to cultivated ranches, has been going on with great rapidity and has been accompanied by a great influx of population. In other regions, scientific dry farming, though still in the experimental stage, is attracting large numbers of enterprising settlers to lands which, half a decade ago, were considered incapable of cultivation. About fifty new postoffices have been established in New Mexico in the past ten months. Most of these represent new agricultural communities. All of this means not only an increase of population and of taxable wealth, but an increase in the proportion of Americans and a proportionate decrease of the Mexican element.

Organization of Attorney-Generals.

A permanent organization of the attorney-generals of the several states has been formed as the result of a meeting held last week in St. Louis. The organization is the outgrowth of the movement to control corporations, and has for its special purpose to secure uniformity of action and to induce Congress to enact legislation which will put an end to the conflict between federal and state authorities. It has already recommended the passage of a law prohibiting any circuit court from interfering with the enforcement of a state law pending the review of such law by the Supreme Court of the United States. Attorney General Hadley, of Missouri, who was the prime mover in the formation of the organization, was elected its first president.

History Up to Date.

The secretary of the Oklahoma Historical Society is planning to secure a complete record of the ceremonies connected with the beginning of the state government and the first inauguration by the use of the phonograph and the moving picture machine. This is history up to date. If the films can be made of a material sufficiently imperishable, it will be an excellent way to preserve a vivid record of an event which will, in after years, be of great historical interest to residents of that state.

Our Field Secretaries.

Two of the members of President Roosevelt's cabinet have developed marked ability as traveling ambassadors to foreign lands. The secretary of war, Mr. Taft, is at present engaged on a mission of peace in Japan, and is apparently succeeding wonderfully well in his effort to make the Japanese people forget that there was ever a threat of complications between that country and ours. Certainly a secretary of war can not be more usefully or more appropriately employed than in an effort to keep the country out of war. Meanwhile, the secretary of state, Mr. Root, is paying a visit to Mexico. Mr. Root's tour of the South American republics last winter was felt to be productive of a much better understanding between those countries and ours, both politically and commercially, than had hitherto existed. The visit to Mexico has, in general, a similar purpose. The relations between the United States and the Republic of Mexico are already close, and they are destined to become closer. During the past ten years our exports to Mexico and our imports from Mexico have more than tripled. At the same time, American investments in Mexico have been vastly increased. At one time a proposition to invest in an enterprise in Mexico was looked upon in much the same light as the offer of a gold brick in open market. Now more than two-thirds of a billion dollars of American capital is invested in Mexico. There are still plenty of wildcat Mexican schemes, but it is not possible to draw a geographical line between legitimate promotions and swindling enterprises which exist only to sell stock. Secretary Root is the recipient of great honors in Mexico, the most notable being a special session of the Mexican Congress to greet him. It is significant in this connection that President Roosevelt and President Diaz have united in an invitation to the Presidents of the five Central American republics to send representatives to a conference to be held in Washington during the first part of November for the purpose of making such adjustments of the complicated relations of those states as will insure the preservation of peace among them. The growth of friendly relations between the United States and Mexico must mean more than the increase of commercial intercourse between them. It must mean also that they will use their joint influence to maintain peace on the continent. The two big brothers of the North must keep the little brothers of the South from fighting so much.

The President in the Mississippi Valley.

President Roosevelt and Mr. Bryan are both emphatically in favor of a deep waterway channel from the great lakes to the gulf. That is the first thing of importance as a result of their visits to St. Louis. The President has been making a voyage on "the Father of Waters." He traveled overland to Keokuk, Iowa, and from there on board the river steamboat "Mississippi" to the waterways convention at Memphis, stopping on the way for the best part of a day at St. Louis. In the course of several speeches he showed himself entirely sympathetic to the revival of river traffic, while Mr. Bryan, in an interview at St. Louis said: "I heartily favor the plan for a fourteen-foot channel from the lakes to the gulf. It is a matter of general importance to the whole country." It is felt that the project will receive the approval of Congress. The President also, during the week, expressed himself on other questions. He declared the Panama Canal could be finished in six years; he advocated a strong navy for purposes of peace, wanted national control of corporations, especially of railroads, and said he would call a convention to be held in Washington to advocate the preservation and reservation of the natural resources of the country, including coal, water power, oil, etc. He declared war upon lawless anarchy, whether among labor leaders or captains of industry. After his Memphis speech he went to the canebrakes of Louisiana for a hunting trip.

Some First Principles.

IX.—Led by the Spirit.

In connection with the subject of prayer which we treated in our last number, the question that inevitably arises is, What should we pray for and how shall we make our petitions in order that they may be effectual? It would be easy to specify a number of things which might be prayed for, and a number of conditions of prevailing prayer, but one who was deeply taught of God gave this word in relation to prayer which is wiser, no doubt, than all our specifications and rules: "And in like manner the Spirit also helpeth our infirmity: for we know not how to pray as we ought; but the Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which can not be uttered; and he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." (Rom. 8:26, 27). In another passage this same apostle, describing the conflict with the powers of darkness and the means whereby we can overcome, says: "With all prayer and supplication praying at all seasons in the Spirit, and watching thereunto in all perseverance and supplication for all saints." (Eph. 6:18.) These and many other passages which might be quoted, clearly teach that real prayer is the product of God's Spirit dwelling in us and kindling in our hearts those desires and aspirations which are well-pleasing to him. He it is who aids us in our prayers and who interprets even our inarticulate longings and groanings before the throne.

Not alone in prayer but in every spiritual exercise, in every effort of the believer in Christ to bring his flesh in subjection and to crucify its evil deeds and desires, he is led by the Spirit of God. Let us hear the great apostle on this point also: "But ye are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. But if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ is in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelleth in you, he that raised up Christ Jesus from the dead shall give life also to your mortal bodies through his Spirit that dwelleth in you. So then, brethren, we are debtors not to the flesh to live after the flesh: for if ye life after the flesh, ye must die; but if by the Spirit ye put to death the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are sons of God." (Rom. 8:9-14.)

This is a very rich passage and deserves the careful study of every one who is seeking to perfect his Christian character. Notice (1) that whatever else we may have, if we have not the Spirit of Christ we are none of his. We may be "sound in the faith," as the phrase is used, meaning intellectual orthodoxy, and yet if we have not Christ's spirit we are not Christians. Notice (2) that we are "in the flesh" unless "the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." Observe (3), that it is through the indwelling Spirit of God that our mortal bodies are to be brought in subjection and quickened so as to be the instruments of righteousness; (4) that to follow the dictates of the flesh is death, but that to put to death the deeds of the body through the Spirit, is life. Finally, mark the important statement that it is only those who are led by the Spirit of God that are the sons of God.

If, then, in our prayers, in resisting the temptations of the flesh, in bringing the body in subjection, in a word, in living spiritual lives rather than carnal, we are helped and guided by the indwelling Spirit, without which we are none of Christ's, how infinitely important is it that we possess the Holy Spirit, and yield our lives to his gentle but transforming influence! Especially is this true in view of the further teaching of the apostle in the same chapter, that it is by the Spirit of God that we come into the consciousness of sonship, whereby we cry, "Abba, Father," and that it is through the testimony of the Spirit himself with our spirit that we know we are children of God. Without this inner witness of the Spirit, all outward testimony is unavailing to produce that assurance of sonship to God that brings peace to the soul. This is the help that Christ promised his disciples before he left them—"another Advocate"—whose coming marked the beginning of a new era in the religious life of mankind, and whose presence with us, and whose abiding in us, is at once the hope of glory and the means of our spiritual transformation into the image of Christ.

The vital relation between faith in Christ—the faith that knits the soul to him in vital union—and receiving the Holy Spirit, is indicated by our Lord himself in the words which he spoke "on the last day, the great day of the feast," when he said: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, from within him shall flow rivers of living water." (John 7:37, 38). What Jesus meant by "rivers of living water" flowing out of the believer is explained by John, who says, that "This spake he of the Spirit which they that believed on him were to receive." How copious and rich this phrase—"rivers of living water"! How finely this expresses the lifegiving and saving influences which flow out from the life of one whose heart has become a very fountain of living water! Here is the secret of the power that some persons possess of winning others to Christ. It is not eloquence, nor learning, nor logic, but the power of the Spirit which may use all these, but which may also dispense with them, and yet make its possessor successful in winning souls, and enriching the spiritual life of others.

If, then, we be led by the Spirit of God, we are not only sons of God, but faithful and fruitful sons whose lives are fountains of blessings to others.

"The New Theology"—What Is It?

The readers of our current newspaper literature have grown very familiar with the phrase, "the new theology," and we dare say that many of them are puzzled to know just what is meant by it. It is plain enough that those who use the phrase oftenest expect it to be understood as something very dangerous, which, if one imbibes, he is on the downgrade to perdition. The papers which delight to roll this phrase under their tongues, as a sweet morsel, do not stop to define what they mean by it. The probability is, they attach no definite meaning to the words. It is enough to say of a man that he accepts "the new theology." That settles it. He is a dangerous man. Avoid him as one having the smallpox.

And yet it may be worth while to inquire, What is "the new theology"? No man's views can be rightly so termed, nor those of a little coterie of "advanced" thinkers. Hence Dr. R. J. Campbell's recent book, representing his own radically rationalistic views, and those of a few others like him, is a misnomer. Manifestly the new theology, rightly so called, is the present-day theology in contrast with that held by the older theologians, as formulated in the creeds of Christendom. Every reader of current religious thought knows that there has been, thank God, a remarkable change in the thought of the best thinkers of to-day in all the churches as respects this old theology. The old doctrine of election, foreordination and predestination, of limited atonement, of the direct and miraculous conversion of sinners without their co-operation or consent, and without the use of means, the material nature and arbitrary character of future punishment, the solely evidential value of miracles in the New Testament revelation, the numerous varieties of faith and its arbitrary relation to salvation—on all these subjects the thought of men has undergone a profound change, and that for the better. We are speaking now of the consensus of religious thought—the maturest thinking of thoroughly evangelistic scholars and writers.

This newer and better thinking concerning God, concerning Christ, concerning the Holy Spirit, concerning the Scriptures, concerning the method and nature of salvation, the meaning and scope of Christ's atonement—this is the new theology. To use the phrase in any other sense is wholly misleading and tends to give the impression that modern thought on these great vital questions is all wrong and unscriptural, and that we must return to the old theology of the past to get the Simon-pure doctrine of the Bible! If we wish to denounce rationalism, or any modern form of skepticism, let us do so by calling things by their right names. None of us accept the old theology of the creeds. Even those who accept the creeds do not accept these doctrines in their old meaning. We all believe in emphasizing God's fatherhood as well as his sovereignty; his love as well as his justice. We repudiate the partiality attributed to him in the old theology and believe he desires and has planned for the salvation of all. We believe in emphasizing the humanity of Christ as well as his divinity, thus bringing him nearer to us as our brother-man, our Savior and our friend. We believe in teaching that the Holy Spirit, as a person, acts upon our human nature through the laws governing man's mental and moral nature, and not arbitrarily and violently. We believe in the progressive character of God's revelation, and not in the old method of treating the Scriptures without any reference to this truth. We believe in the gospel as the "power of God unto salvation," and not that it is a "dead-letter" until miraculously interpreted, according to the old theology. We accept the modern view of the world as the accepted science of to-day sets it forth, and not the ancient view of the world which science has overthrown.

In all this we are sure we are expressing the convictions of the great mass of the brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ, who are a reading and thinking people, and who understand that theology, like astronomy and geology and chemistry, and every other department of human knowledge, is a growing science, and that the newest, generally-accepted theology, among the best thinkers of the church, is likely to be the truest theology, just as the latest recognized science is the best science. Scarcely a textbook in use in the schools of the country, twenty or even ten years ago, is in use to-day, so rapidly has scientific knowledge advanced. Who prates about the "old" science, and sneers at the "new" science? Why should it be different in our thought about God and the great themes of revelation? Have we exhausted these themes? Remember, it is not the faith we are speaking about —but theology—the results of our human thinking about God and his revelation—the net product of the intellectual toil and heart-struggles of the best minds of the age.

No one has less sympathy than we have with the flippant criticism of the old, simply because it is old; but no less do we deprecate the tendency to deride and reject the new, simply because it is new—even the new theology.

Notes and Comments.

One of our ministers who says that it is impossible for him to attend the Norfolk convention asks if he can not be permitted to vote by proxy in favor of federation. He adds: "It is the only position we can take and look sober when we talk of union." Granting the possibility of one looking sober, while preaching in favor of Christian union and voting against practicing it, it is hardly to be expected that those listening to the appeal would take it seriously.

A preacher writes: "Here's our hand for a journalism as sacred as our pulpits. The editor's desk is just as much a sacred desk as a minister's." Why not? The truth is, the Editor of this paper feels a greater responsibility for what he writes, editorially, than for what he preaches from the pulpit; for in the former he reaches tens of thousands, whereas in the latter, ordinarily, only a few hundred. The same sense of responsibility should be felt by every writer who sends a contribution for the religious press. It seems to us there is a recklessness in this regard that can only result from thoughtlessness. The brother just quoted from is right in saying: "Our peril now is not destructive criticism, but destructive newspaperism. How are we going to shut it off?" The question is too large for us, and we refer it to the prayerful thought of the whole brotherhood.

Referring to some recent "Notes and Comments" in The Christian-Evangelist, a correspondent writes as follows: "Some of our people have not learned that there is any other way to tell the truth but in the use of old words. Our young men are not disloyal to Christ, and our churches must give them place and freedom or repudiate our historic position." Nothing is truer than this, as to the principle involved, and we believe what is said of our young ministers is true, with very few exceptions. While we plead with the churches to grant the liberty and charity toward ministers whose way of stating old truths is not exactly the old way, we would, at the same time, urge ministers, both old and young, to stick very close to the vital things of the gospel, which is the only power that can deliver us from the prevailing worldliness and corruption in private and public life.

As we stopped the press last week to print the telegram from the Foreign Society, announcing that it had passed the $300,000 mark, we had no space nor time for editorial comment. This success is so remarkable, under all the circumstances, that we feel like extending our hearty congratulations not only to the officers of the society, who have devoted themselves with consuming passion to their great task, but to the brotherhood at large on this invincible proof of a growing interest among us in worldwide evangelization. It is often said that this or that discussion is going to greatly injure one of our missionary offerings, but it is becoming more evident each year that these gifts for missions proceed from a depth of faith and of religious conviction that is practically undisturbed by these agitations on the surface. "Well done, good and faithful servants," will be the verdict of the Norfolk convention, in relation to the leaders who have borne the heat and burden in this great advance movement.

It is a great pleasure to The Christian-Evangelist to hear the gratifying news from all our schools as to the splendid openings which they have had. Increased enrollment is the rule in the institutions which have been running for years, while Oklahoma Christian University, the new institution under President Zollars, which has just been opened at Enid, has enrolled a sufficient number of students already to guarantee a successful session. To all these institutions we tender our congratulations, and bespeak for them from the brotherhood that hearty support, both in patronage and endowment, which the importance of their work so justly deserves.

Never, perhaps, in our history have the brethren given so much serious thought to our religious newspaper problem as at the present time. The problem, briefly stated, is this: How can we support and maintain religious journals that will fully and fairly represent the great cause we plead, and not bring it into disrepute before the world by their narrowness and partisan spirit, on the one hand, nor by their latitudinarianism on the other, nor obstruct the progress of our missionary enterprises by seeking to dominate them for their own purposes? It is not for The Christian-Evangelist to say how far it is subject to just criticism for the lack of fidelity to the great interests of the brotherhood, but we may be permitted to say that, with singleness of purpose, subordinating considerations of mere gain to principles of righteousness and truth, it has sought to serve the cause with which it is identified. In the last analysis the blame for an unworthy type of journalism must rest with the brethren themselves. It has been said that cities, states and the nation, get just as good representatives as they deserve, for their votes, as a whole, elect such representatives. Sooner or later the prevailing sentiment of any religious body determines the character of its religious journalism. It will be what they make it. If they support only the best, the best will prevail. If they support the inferior, the inferior will prevail. It would seem, then, that the remedy for the evils growing out of a faulty journalism is very simple and entirely within the power of the brotherhood. The Christian-Evangelist does not ask or expect the patronage or support of any one not in sympathy with what it stands for, and the way in which it stands for them.

Editor's Easy Chair.

With the coming of the cool days of October, St. Louis has a custom of introducing her fall festivities for the purpose of attracting the people here from all the surrounding country. For a long time it was the St. Louis Fair which lasted a week. Then came the St. Louis Exposition which lasted longer. For a number of years the parade of the "Veiled Prophet" has been the chief attraction of the week of festivities. Each year tens of thousands of people come into the city to see this parade, and throng the streets where it passes, in solid masses, for miles. Of course the chief object of this parade, kept up by the St. Louis business men, is to induce their country cousins to come to town. The merchants have a great yearning to receive the people from the country about this season of the year, for reasons not wholly unselfish. On the other hand, the people in the country evidently like to come to St. Louis, and like to see the great show prepared for their benefit. It is a decided change from their life on the farm, or in the small towns and villages, and so there is a kind of reciprocity between the city and the country. As for the Easy Chair, we must confess that we would rather see the glorious pageantry of Autumn, when she hangs her crimson banners on the hillsides and in the valleys of the country forests, under the shimmer of an October sun, than all the tinsel and spectacular display of a Veiled Prophet's parade, under the glowing light of the electric bulb. But this, of course, is a matter of taste, and concerning tastes let there be no dispute. We are glad that the people of the country can enjoy our city festivities in the autumn, as much as we do their rural attractions in the glad summer time. In this way, both the city and the country have their seasons, and the people have their change of scenery with its new experiences, and this reciprocity binds all together in closer unity.

The chief attraction of our week of fall festivities this year, however, was the visit of the President of the United States, and over a score of governors of various states, as a part of the remarkable and destined to be historic trip down the Mississippi river, from Keokuk to Memphis, in the interest of the deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. The coming of the President is a noteworthy event in the life of any community, but Theodore Roosevelt is no ordinary president. Unquestionably he is the most popular man in the Unted States, as is freely admitted by men of all parties. If we inquire for the secret of his wonderful popularity, it is evident that it is not in his eloquence or grace of oratory, nor in his freedom from mistakes. It is his rugged honesty, his downright opposition to evil doers, his courage to do what he believes to be right, his true Americanism, his democratic spirit, his marvelous executive ability which enables him to do things and have things done, which have endeared him to the American heart. Neither aristocratic birth, moderate wealth, nor university education, has spoiled him nor alienated him from the common people. The machine politicians do not like him, any more than they like Mr. Bryan or Governor Folk, but the people believe in him, and give him an enthusiastic ovation wherever he goes, which is as much for the man, Theodore Roosevelt, as for the President of the United States. The example of such a man in the highest office in the nation, if not in the world, is of incalculable benefit in its influence on the young men of the country, in teaching them that the way to success and power, after all, is the path of honesty, uprightness, courageous opposition to what is evil, and unselfish devotion to the public weal. He whose life illustrates the truth which Tennyson expressed concerning the Duke of Wellington, that "The path of duty is the path of glory," is the truest benefactor of his race.

In referring to his prosecution of the great interstate corporations for their violations of law, the President said, in one of his speeches, that he was appealed to, frequently, by people who claimed to be decent citizens, to desist from such efforts, on the ground that it would "hurt the business" of the country. Some of the great dailies of the country had taken up this cry, and called a halt on his efforts to bring the railroads of the country under the regulation of law. He might have added that many professed Christians have taken up the same hue and cry. The President said that he did not believe that the enforcement of the law against evil doers would result in any injury to the business of the country, but even if it did, we must put honesty and righteousness above commercial considerations. That is good enough preaching for any pulpit. There are plenty of pulpits that need to preach it and to practice it, and plenty of newspapers, both secular and religious, that need to declare it and to live up to it. One of our critical daily papers, referring to the President's speeches, said he "scolds too much," and that he ought to cease to point out the faults of people, and tell of their virtues! And yet the people are not finding fault with the President's preaching of righteousness, but only the evil-doers themselves who are hit directly or indirectly by his denunciation of wrong-doing, in private and public life. As we had occasion to say recently, in referring to this same matter, let the nation be righteous first, and prosperous afterwards, if it can be. To "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness" is a good rule for nations as well as individuals. If the President's preaching shall help us to remember that truth, and to mould the government's policy in harmony therewith, it will not have been in vain.

But there are other things going on in October besides fall festivities and the President's tour. Even before this shall greet the eyes of our readers The Christian-Evangelist Special will have left St. Louis with its large delegation en route to Norfolk and the national convention. Whether October is to continue to be the convention month or not, is one of the questions that will probably come up for decision at Norfolk. Other questions of transcendent interest to our movement are to be considered at the Norfolk convention. We may not all be exactly of one mind on all these questions, and yet on the most vital questions we anticipate far less division of sentiment than upon some of the minor questions. Let no one be alarmed at the possibility of differences of views on some of these questions to be considered. We need not be cowardly to be Christian. We only need to be courteous and kind, and to treat each other as we wish to be treated, to rely on reason and truth, and discountenance all appeals to prejudice and to passion, and our discussions will be both educational and inspirational. It is always an edifying spectacle to hear strong men measuring arguments with each other on a great question, in calm reliance on truth, and with a courteous recognition of the honest motives of each other and a gracious willingness to submit the question at issue to the prevailing judgment of their brethren. Indeed, there is no truer test of the Christian culture and intelligence of any religious body, than its ability, in its great deliberative assemblies, to deal with vital questions, concerning which there are different views, in the broad spirit of Christian statesmanship, without faction or strife. That we may not be found wanting in these elements which should characterize a great religious movement, standing for a great cause, when we come to deal with these questions having a vital bearing on our future welfare, should be the earnest prayer of every lover of our cause, whether he remain at home or go up with his brethren to the great convention.

There is an Exposition at Norfolk, which you have heard about. It has been in progress for some time, and will continue for some time after the convention has ended. There are historic places of interest in the neighborhood of Norfolk, and these will remain there indefinitely. Is it too much to ask that those who go to the convention at Norfolk, should give their first attention to its sessions and its important business, and take in these other attractions at such times as will not interfere with their attendance on the convention? We trust that such will be the case. After all, this is only putting the interest of the kingdom of God above all other interests, and this is not too much to ask of Christians. One of our ministers has started a new organization to be known as "The Order of Titus," the motto and ruling principle of which is, "Speak evil of no man." We trust the membership of this organization will be greatly increased at Norfolk, or at least, its motto may be widely practiced. St. Paul, who thought himself the "least of the saints," has left on record a list, or at least a general classification of things, about which we may find it profitable to talk and to meditate, between sessions of the convention: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, take account of these things." Maintaining this attitude of spirit, and seeking "the wisdom that cometh down from above," we shall make the Norfolk convention a memorable milestone on our path of progress to higher and better things.

A Missionary Tour Through the Heart of Africa

By Royal J. Dye

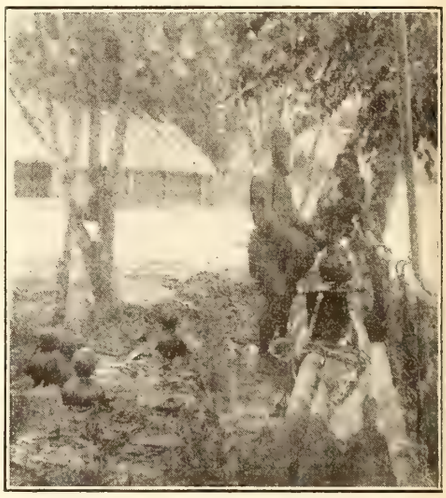
Bolenge, Coquilhatville,
District de l'Equateur,
Etat Independent du Congo,
W. C. Africa,
July 11, 1907.

A long-desired trip has at last been made. Since we came out this time I had desired to travel at least once the great "hinter-land" of Bolenge and was not able to make the arrangements, what with sickness and press of duties at the station, until just now. June 18 I made a start and went by chance to the far Injolo towns, a two-days' journey overland, reaching there at sundown and disembarking our expedition. We took up our march that evening to the village of Lolunga, one of the Injolo towns, where we have a little band of native Christians. They were surprised to see us and gave us a right hearty reception and we had a fine meeting that night, with an after-meeting for the Christians. There had been a little spirit of jealousy between them and the big village of Boyela (of Injolo), where the evangelist and teacher "sat" while on his term of two months' stay there.



Decanting sugar cane beer into gourds to ferment.

So we had a long conference with them and straightened out their little palavers and arranged a program for the evangelist so that he should alternate his Sundays between the two towns. The next morning they arose to an early morning prayer-meeting, and afterwards cheered us on our way to the next village of Injolo. Boyela is the largest of this group of villages, and we arrived here at noon and held a large meeting at once, with others announced for the afternoon and evening. There is a fine little chapel begun by Brother Eldred and being finished by the native Christians.

We had the evangelist drum the native drum (see illustration) and call the elders of the town. They assembled under a large spreading tree, their usual palaver tree, and listened attentively to the preaching of the gospel by the evangelists and then by myself. (See illustration.) Large and interesting meetings were the rule here. We have a good sized body of native Christians in all of Injolo, some thirty all together. They have a good reputation among the heathen, which the Catholics have not. The latter fight us tooth and nail for every inch of ground, but the sincere natives, those who are honest, all favor our work, as the Catholics lie as badly as ever, steal as boldly and swear and curse as roundly as any heathen, while adultery is no sin to them, smoking of hemp and drinking of intoxicating liquors are winked at as minor sins and all are pardonable if the sinners frequent the confessional. The natives are not fools that they need any special teaching to see the difference between the life of purity and self-restraint and that of license and deceit.

The next morning we left Injolo and started through the swamps and forest jungle to the town of Bempaka, the "hub" of the inland towns. It lies midway between the Injolo and Bofiji towns and midway between the Inganda (Bolenge) river towns and the Ikengo towns. Paths radiate in all directions. It is a small place itself and is well covered by the Bolenge evangelists, so we just preached to it and passed on. We had been six hours wrestling with the slippery logs and corduroy placed by the natives to facilitate travel, but I came to the conclusion after I had slipped up and down for about five hours that they were meant to hinder one's progress. We passed, in one of the little knolls of land scattered here and there through the swamps, a tree famous for its size and age. Here the natives used to gather during the days of pre-white-man'd occupancy and settle all their inter-tribal differences. The limbs of the big old monarch of the jungle were as large as "saratoga" trunks and covered with hoary moss and festooned with hanging vines as large around as a man. We stopped for lunch to "pay the debts" as said the porters, "of that beggar, hunger."

The "Buya" village's new beer vat showing the heavy pestiles.

Near Bempaka is a creek of considerable size and in high water it communicates with the Lake Mantumba creeks and at its other end reaches the Boloko River, which runs in back of Bolenge, thus making Bolenge an island. But we never appreciated this fact, for the way around is a long cry from Bolenge. From Bempaka to Buya, where we were halting for the night, it was three hours' good hard marching Beating the Lokole to call a meeting. The Lokole is the Church bell, school bell and the telegraph (wireless) instrument, all combined.

at a fast pace. So the chief of Buya, who was with us, thought before he got back home. "I did him stunts" in jumping logs on the way, and he was not used to that exercise. It was laughable to see him cheat and step quickly on the log if it was too big. He got home in a fine sweat, for he couldn't suffer the humiliation of being beaten at anything even by a white man. We found a lot of lazy beggars in this village, whose sole desire was for a spoon of salt and when we refused to pauperize them they went away in disgust. They preferred the man who gave them a dash of salt. We slept there that night and preached twice to them as well as a farewell sermon in the morning. Their interest was taken up in the initiation of a new beer vat which had been hollowed out of a large log and for which they were preparing sugar cane (see illustration). We left them next morning early and started by a short cut to Ikengo, a series of big back towns whose chief came over a year ago to ask for teachers, as he did not wish the Catholics in his town. I sent you his picture and the deputation that came with him. The short cut was not so short as we thought for it proved to be a worse morass than any we had come through, over logs and through slimy mud up to one's knees, with the promise of something deeper in its quagmire, if we slipped off from the sunken roots and sticks we were walking on. Our walking sticks forked at the lower end would get stuck and almost pull us into the sloppy, filthy mass. I fell in once, and I tell you I was a sight; no one would have accused me of being a white man; but I made haste to get the worst of it off at the first puddle of water we came to. After what seemed to be an age we came to land and were soon in the village. The sole Christian woman of Ikengo happened to be in this end of the town when we arrived and she made us welcome and preceded our caravan through the village, calling out to the half-frightened villagers that we were not "Bula Matade," the dreaded state white man, and they came out to hear the message of life where they had feared death. We went on to the section of the village where "Mboloko" the friendly chief lived and found him and all of the elders of the village busy with their greatest occupation, settling palavers and disputes over the price of wives and slaves and the payment of fines for all sorts of misdemeanors. They stopped their palavers to listen to the message with which we came, the evangelists speaking first, as was my custom, and I closing up with a talk emphasizing every point the evangelist had made, and adding a scathing rebuke to their lives of sin and indolence, with a plea for their serious attention to the Gospel message and a warning of a certain judgment to come, citing to them the signs given by Christ which they themselves had noticed. They wanted us to stay there and preach more, but they were under the regular teaching of an evangelist, so we passed on to a far section of this great town, which has at least 10,000 population. Here we found them in the very act of decanting the native beer into gourds, in which it is covered up by the beaten pulp of the sugar-cane and allowed to ferment. (See illustration.) We preached here and it was strange to hear the native evangelists give the drunkards of this village hot temperance shot.

Bolenge Christians are brought up anti-alcoholic and anti-tobacco and anti-hemp (the fearful hashesh of India), and are all the stronger men and women for it.

We left this town and pushed on through a section of tall pampas grass, where there had once been a large and populous village, but the days of the rubber tax, some ten years ago in this section, had left it quite depopulated. We passed many "Elaje" (native for desolated villages) on our journey and they largely date back to the "rubber days." Oh, what the very phrase awakens from the native! It has meant expatriation, devastation, murder, mutilation, starvation, horrors!

Now there are no rubber taxes because the rubber has all been taken out of the country and there are no atrocities to record from our immediate district nor have we seen anything in all of our four years' residence at Bolenge that needed redress and of which we have complained to the government but what it was put immediately straight. The sole tax has been the food tax and it has been administered with fairly decent measures. We could have asked for a fairer distribution of the tax but it was not annihilative, and much of the distress felt by the people was caused by their habits of thriftlessness and by their neglect to notify the proper officials of the death of a tax-bearer and the consequent assumption of the burden of the dead by the weakened remainder. Lack of inspection makes the system oppressive.

From this village of Ikengo we passed on to the end village of this series of villages, "Bosumbakongo," where we passed the night holding the customary meetings, to which the entire village came out. Early the next morning we started off for the Isaka villages, following through the jungle the course of the Boloko River, a small tributary of the Bosira along which tributary lies the towns we have mentioned. At Isaka we rested and took our lunch and while there I was actually reminded of the natives' propensity for pilfering. While cutting my remaining loaf of bread I laid down the sole table knife I had with me and failed to pick it up again, because it was not there. From childhood they are taught to steal and they are not dull scholars.

The Dynamic of Preaching By Stephen J. Corey

What shall be the preacher's real power? What the hidden dynamic that enables him to take God's word and use it mightily? What his inspiration? What the power that moves him? I would not quarrel with any man's interpretation of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. I do not care what he calls it so that he recognizes it. Much of the fighting over this doctrine has been unworthy the followers of Christ. It has been a quibbling over words, and definitions, and expressions. But the New Testament is saturated with the teaching of the Holy Spirit in the world in a blessed and helpful ministry. We are not to grieve the Spirit, not to quench the Spirit, to be filled with the Spirit. The Spirit beareth witness with our Spirit, the Spirit intercedeth for us, the Spirit is our Comforter, our Guide. Call his influence what you may, he is here, and during the times of blessed fellowship in our ministry we recognize his mysterious, powerful presence. To me the denial of the personal indwelling of the Spirit of God makes union with Christ and the presence of the Comforter an enigma.

We plead for the primitive, undiluted, unencumbered gospel. Let us plead likewise for the power of the early gospel. They were but the incidentals—God's initial testimony in beginning his Church. The power was that within, which moved men to anything for Christ. We may return to the early teaching, in belief, in organization, in method; but unless we have the power of the early teaching, our belief is lifeless, our organization but carnal machinery, and our method but a rope of sand. Christianity is a supernatural religion in its source and application. A sleepy church and a dead world await a message of spiritual power; we can have it when we are fit channels for it.

The modern pulpit does not so much lack intellectuality, or culture, or eloquence, but it does lack spiritual power. In the words of another: "It fails to grapple with the mind so as to compel conviction, with the conscience so as to compel contrition, with the will so as to compel resolution.

The power which moves and melts men is divine, not human. The Word? Yes the Word. But the Word as a sword in the hand of a mightier power—the Spirit, without whose wielding it becomes a rusty blade, ill-thrust. The effective and spiritual preacher will get his power through immersion in the Scriptures, and dependence upon the Spirit. The Word is an inspired book and the Holy Spirit who inspired it is the same Holy Spirit who indwells in the believer. The gospel is a spiritual message, spiritually discerned, and without the equipment from above preaching will degenerate into lifeless rhetoric, a forced earnestness, or a heartless argument. The words of the godly Arthur of last century are fitting: "In this age of faith in the natural, and disinclination to the supernatural, we want especially to meet the whole world with the credo: I believe in the Holy Spirit." Not that we talk at every opportunity about him, not that we go into agony of prayer for his coming, but that we simply pay the price of his abiding influence. We need to believe in him as a personal, present power without whose indwelling the preacher is helpless. Not that we confine his blessing to merely that of "comforter"—a term which has become the mere embodiment of vagueness to many of us. Paraclete means far more than something hidden behind the Word of God. Not that God will grant us a spiritual communication which will not take into account his truth, or be subversive of Scripture, but God has not ceased to wield his truth with his own hand. The supreme help in the preparation and delivery of a sermon, is a prayerful, humble, devout meditation on the Word of God until the spiritual eye is opened and the vision of truth appears. The Spirit-led man can not be commonplace if he would. "Where the Spirit of Christ is there is liberty." How we need the freedom and originality of the Spirit-led life! Freedom from the past. Freedom from prejudice. Freedom from what others have said. Freedom to stand alone if need be, and not be afraid. Freedom to strike the first blow. Freedom in loyalty to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. It is so comfortable to be conventional, but the Spirit-led man can not be conventional, for he has freedom.

Let us be loyal to the Word—yes, but can we even see or understand the mysteries of the Word at all without spiritual vision? Christ's words to his disciples are worthy pondering: "He shall receive of mine and shall show it unto you." How many men have stumbled at the life and teaching of Jesus, because they refused the illumination and enforcement of the Spirit! How easy it is to get tangled in the words of Jesus without the Spirit to teach us the meaning! How helpless were the followers of Christ in trying to understand his teaching until the Spirit had come! Are we not as helpless to-day? But some one will say: "The Spirit came once for all." Yes, but has he come into my life as a personal influence and power in preaching the gospel?

The Holy Spirit uses the word of truth as an instrument, but is it not his present, personal influence that renders the truth effective? Are we limited to moral suasion in reaching the hearts of sinful men? God help us if we are! Mere human energy, logic, oratory, fancy, imagination—all may have a show of power and yet be but a painted flame. How many times we have seen men of rather ordinary ability who were great soul-winners, while by their side toiled capable men, who won admiration, but turned few from darkness to light. The former were burning with earnestness, and spake as men having authority; the latter entertained, but did not convict. The blacksmith can do nothing when his fire is out; neither can the preacher. All the blowing of the bellows will not fan the flame which is absent.

A thorough knowledge of the letter of the New Testament is not a sufficient

FOOD STOPPED IT

Good Food Worth More Than a Gold Mine.

To find a food that will put an absolute stop to "running down" is better than finding a gold mine.

Many people when they begin to run down go from one thing to another without finding a food that will stop the progress of disease. Grape-Nuts is the most nourishing food known and will set one right if that is possible.

The experience of a Louisiana lady may be interesting. "I received a severe nervous shock some years ago and from that and overwork gradually broke down. My food did not agree with me and I lost flesh rapidly. I changed from one kind of food to another, but was unable to stop the loss of flesh and strength.

"I do not exaggerate when I say that I finally became, in reality, a living skeleton. My nights were sleepless, and I was compelled to take opiates in various forms. After trying all sorts of food without success I finally got down to toasted bread with a little butter, and after a while this began to sour and I could not digest it. Then I took to toasted crackers and lived on them for several weeks, but kept getting weaker.

"One day Grape-Nuts was suggested and it seemed to me from the description that it was just the sort of food I could digest. I began by eating a small portion, gradually increasing the amount each day.

"My improvement began at once for it afforded me the nourishment that I had been starving for. No more harassing pains and indigestion. For a month I ate nothing but Grape-Nuts and a little cream, then I got so well I could take on other kinds of food. I gained flesh rapidly and now I am in better health than I have been in years. I still stick to Grape-Nuts because I like the food and I know of its powerful nourishing properties. My physician says the whole trouble was a lack of power to digest food, and that no other food that he knows of would have brought me out of the trouble except Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

The Call of the Hour

By J. W. Ellis

Less than a century has passed since the Christian Association was formed to promote Christian unity. Forced to assume the position of an independent body, its members were derided, misrepresented, nick-named and villified. They were charged with being a sect themselves, and a mischievous denomination. The very evils they would cure, they were charged with instigating, promoting—and often were considered as those that had denied the faith, and worse than an infidel. So far from lessening the strength of denominationalism, they were said to have made it stronger by their erecting one more.

It were long to tell the story of this people contending for the restoration of the primitive church in its simplicity, its divine basis, its God-given charter, its apostolic organization and practice. Engaged in a holy warfare, its advocates have endured hardship as good soldiers. The smoke of battle has risen from many a field. The clash of arms has often been fearful. The sublimity of titanic warfare often distinguished a conflict in which giants were contestants. Though it might imperil the life of heaven's hosts, there has ever been courage and faith and—God.

The restorationists never lost heart, but went forward with the Spirit-inspiring hope that—

"Soon shall the slumbering morn awake,
From wandering stars of error freed,
When Christ the bread of heaven shall break
For saints that own a common creed."
—Holmes.

Their motto was, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent."

Who could object to this declaration? And yet men have objected. It did not exalt personal ambition and human leadership. Men's opinions were to be individual possessions, but not tests of orthodoxy. Private interpretation should belong to every one, but he must not arbitrarily seek to enjoin it as a badge of discipleship on others. The legend upon our cruciform banners reads, "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity."

What are the changes known to have taken place since 1809? They are many and varied. The exaltation of the personal Christ as in no preceding era; the relaxing of creed systems; the weakening of centralized ecclesiasticisms; the lowering of denominational fences; the revision or proposed revision of creeds; the widespread recognition of our neighbor's sincerity and goodness; the deepening, widening spirit of fraternity; the disposition to test Christianity by the life rather than by profession; the discovery that Christianity is wholesome, reasonable, and practicable and that it does not oppose the truth of its supernatural origin; the advocacy of missionary enterprises, looking to the evangelization of the world; that to be Christian one must recognize all men as brothers, and that God is his and their common Father; and not only in this respect, but men are having saner and more honoring conceptions of God; the office and operation of the Holy Spirit are receiving more intelligent consideration than heretofore; and lastly, men are learning to divide the word of truth and to read the Bible more intelligently, and, therefore, more understandingly than before.

These are some of the features of nearly one hundred years reflected from the face of the Church. It is a glorious joy to the Christian to observe them. There are yet others, but I must not dwell upon their enumeration, or more specific characterization.

Is it not a pardonable boast to claim for these pleaders for the restoration of New Testament Christianity, that they have contributed no small share to this heaven-directed result? It is a simple plea they make? All not blinded by inherited prejudice can understand it, though some are not willing to accept it.

I do not think there would be any arrogance in their calling themselves Christians or Disciples of Christ. To be true to themselves or to be consistent, I am at a loss to know how else they could name themselves, or how others in justice or Christian courtesy could otherwise call them.

It must not be thought that one enrolled in the undenominational camp may not exhibit the denominational spirit; and in his narrowness and bigotry and illiberal self-conceit, be as veritable a sectarian as any one among those against whom he inveighs. Those people calling themselves Christians do not claim superior natural endowments or deeper piety than others, but they believe and declare that herein they are more Scriptural. Neither do they declare themselves the only Christians. They are too sensible of their lack of perfection, but they do say in profound humility that they are Christians only.

The name is not chosen of themselves, but God-given, and they would that all men would wear it. They ask not that the world come to them for the name but to the Christ and be named for him.

The twentieth century opens bearing the fruitage of the nineteenth in its arms. In no respect is this more conspicuously seen than in the exaltation of Jesus as the Christ, the Son of the living God. This was the key-note of this restoration movement began in 1809. If but few voices sounded it then, a million two hundred and fifty thousand give it heart-rejoicing volume today, repeating the sublime truth not revealed by flesh and blood: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Accepting this in the heart, all else follows in obedience and life. It is an acceptance of the divinity, authority and laws of life and grace and atoning love of Jesus Christ. He is the exemplar of righteousness and of God manifested in the flesh. The New Testament is his will, sealed with his blood. All that he gives us—the plans and specifications of his church, are therein published.

It is claimed that the phenomenal growth of this restoration movement is due to this exaltation of the personal Christ and making him the center and essential embodiment of the whole system of religious faith and practice.

This position, once taken, necessitated, logically, the strenuous advocacy of Christian unity and this has been the burden of gospel proclamation from the pulpit, the earnest desire from the pew and the presenting in prayer of both in the closet. This prayer in faith, with efforts of love, has moved the world.

Christendom is inquiring. Christendom is not satisfied. Christendom is moving—and in the right direction.

"Denominationalism is unstopping its ears. Denominations are closer together, are more fraternal and more Christianlike than ever before. Men are disposed to magnify points of agreement and minify points of difference. If all shall come under the guidance of the Spirit, obey the call heartily as unto the Lord, denominationalism must cease, Christendom be united and Christian union be established: the prayer of Jesus that they all be one will be answered.

Crises come in civil and religious affairs. The epochs of transformation, reformation and restoration are evolutions

TRANSFORMATIONS

Curious Results When Coffee Drinking is Abandoned.

It is almost as hard for an old coffee toper to quit the use of coffee as it is for a whiskey or tobacco fiend to break off, except that the coffee user can quit coffee and take up Postum without any feeling of a loss of the morning beverage, for when Postum is well boiled and served with cream, it is really better in point of flavour than most of the coffee served nowadays, and to the taste of the connoisseur it is like the flavour of fine, mild Java.

A great transformation takes place in the body within ten days or two weeks after coffee is left off and Postum used, for the reason that the poison to the nerves—caffeine—has been discontinued and in its place is taken a liquid food that contains the most powerful elements of nourishment.

It is easy to make this test and prove these statements by changing from coffee to Postum. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

in human progress towards "that far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves."

We are in the swirl of a religious and moral crisis now. All around is anxiety, and much apprehension weighs on the hearts of many. Opinions of earnest, good men are sometimes given too much importance. Keep to the essentials, be liberal with opinions, in all things be charitable. "Back to Christ!" is the religious panacea. It will cure all disorders in denominationalism, it will bring order out of chaos and it will transmute strife, jealousy and hate into peace, harmony and love.

Among the questions among ourselves is over-conservatism in adherence to the letter that killeth rather than to the spirit that maketh alive. This time and forbearance will adjust according to Providential disposal. Music, societies in interest of the church, organized boards for more effective work and evangelization, state missionary convention, etc., give unrest and forebodings of ill to some honest, pious hearts. But an undenominational spirit of liberty, patience and love will wipe all obscurity from the glass through which we look, and, now transparent, our vision made clear, all will cry, "I come to do thy will, O God."

But what of the Y. M. C. A., Y. P. S. C. E. societies and what of Federation? All these are expressive of yearnings, well or ill defined, for Christian unity. Divisions have been the reproach of the church so long, that the people of God are groping after oneness, if happily they may find it. The basis offered upon which all may build is the personal Son of God; the only creed is the New Testament without addition or curtailment. As to how federation is to be developed, men will differ; but however it is done, if done, no one's liberty is abridged or destroyed further than he conscientiously or voluntarily surrendered it. There can be no ecclesiastical constituency or council to enforce it against any one without his free acquiescence. He can always appeal to the divine statutes for authority and righteous adjudication. "Back to Christ!"

Then universal good will will prevail among men, then shall be enjoyed blessed peace; but as Emerson truly says, "Nothing can bring peace but yourself. Nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles."

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

We are in Baltimore on the Patapsco this week. The saints are rallying in convention and find the flag still here. It was in 1814 Col. George Armstead held Fort McHenry against the British, and Francis Scott Key, a prisoner on one of the British vessels, saw the Stars and Stripes still floating and conceived his "Star Spangled Banner." The Montimental City they call it, but it is not specially rich in monuments. There is G. W.'s Doric column with his colossal figure crowning it; and the "Battle monument" in memory of 1814, with its fasciated column and its hideous griffins; and Wildey, the founder of the Odd Fellows and a few lions on the bridges, etc., but nothing unusual in the way of memorials. As I watched the great conflagration from a lumber pile and saw the much-despised dirty creek known as Jones' Falls do such gallant service in saving the city, better than a thousand fire engines, I said to my friend: "Baltimore's biggest monument should be erected to Jones' Falls," but Baltimore's best benefactor is still pursuing its sullen slimy course unmemorialized. David Jones, the first settler on the North Side, way back in 1682, gave his name to the stream which divides the city into "Old Town" and "New Town," and even Jones is in his locker and without a memorial, and he deserved to have the city named after him instead of Cecilius Calvert, but "Jonestown" in 1745 was swallowed by "Baltimore." Congress met here in 1776 at Jacob Fite's house and John Adams describes it as "a long chamber with two fire places, two large closets and two doors. The house belongs to a Quaker and was built for a tavern." This was "the last house at the west end of Market street," as Baltimore street was formerly called, and now it is in the heart of the city. The great fire swept things here, but the city to-day is more beautiful and more substantial than ever before.

Our beginnings here as a religious people go back to 1817, and strangely enough they begin with Peter Ainslie. Two young men were sent here by the Haldanes, one by this name and the other Charles Farquharson, direct from Edinburg, and started in at Fall's Point. This early Peter preached only one sermon to the little Baptist congregation they found here, and he failed to please them and left for Virginia, but Farquharson continued with an independent congregation of five souls. After many ups and downs, Henry Wentzel joined them in 1835 and gave them renewed life. Alexander Campbell visited them, but the work did not assume any special prominence until they entered the house on Paca street dedicated by Mr. Campbell in 1850, May 26. Such men served the congregation as G. W. Elley, Judson Benedict, Albert Anderson, David S. Burnet, Alfred N. Gilbert, I. J. Spencer, H. D. Clark, James Vernon and C. K. Marshall. In 1888, March 11, the day of the great blizzard, the church entered its new sanctuary on Harlem avenue, and B. A. Abbott followed C. K. Marshall here October 1, 1894. June 24, 1888, I presided over the meeting in a hall on Baltimore street, where the Calhoun Street Church was organized with thirty-five members. James Vernon and Thomas Munnell were pastors of this flock, and Peter Ainslie followed Munnell in 1894, and since the coming of Abbott and Ainslie the churches in the city have enjoyed a blessed period of peace and expansion. There are now eight congregations at work in this great metropolis of 600,000 people.

"TEMPLE HYMN."

O changeless Christ, whose word of power
Gave Bartimeus sight,
Come to Thy people in this hour
That we may see the Light.
'Mid clashing creeds we grope for Thee,
And faiths outworn and vain.
O Jesus, touch our eyes, that we See only Thee again.

O changeless Christ, whose listening ear
Then heard the beggar's cry,
Hear Thou our prayer, give vision clear
To each believer's eye.
Our eyes are dimmed by worldly care
And faltering faith and pride,
O help us, Lord, the veil to tear,
See Thee and none beside.

O changeless Christ, O happy soul,
Who saw Thee in that day,
Speak now to us, bid us be whole,
To follow in Thy way.
To-day as yesterday, the same:
Forevermore Thy grace
Shall always bless the soul whose aim
Is but to see Thy face. Amen.

January 15, 1905, Peter Ainslie entered a part of the Christian Temple, the latest of this group of churches. They brought 237 members from Calhoun street and organized. Since then 250 have been added. September 29 the completed Temple was dedicated. Here is a hive of busy bees. There are the Temple Church and School, the Temple Seminary, the Temple Orphanage work, the Temple Home for Working Girls, the Temple Chinese school, the Temple Guild, and such an array of Temple activities as fairly takes one's breath away. That is a fine word—that word Temple. Its root is "tem" and signifies "cut." Templum is a portion cut off. Roman augurs when they wished to observe the heavens went out with the sacred divining rod and marked out a portion of the sky. Whatever passed within that portion was the subject of their augury, and no more. That was "the templum," the separated space cut out of the heavens for sacred uses. So any enclosed spot separated to sacred uses as a sanctuary, a house of prayer, becomes a temple; so our bodies are the temples of the Spirit. So this Christian Temple just set apart, where Maryland's convention is in session, is a portion of this great city cut off and devoted to the great purposes of the gospel. May heaven use it and its beloved and saintly pastor more and more.

F. M. Rains conducted the dedicatory services. There were great crowds and $5,000 raised. The property represents $70,000, with a debt of $30,000. It is a perfectly marvellous work for three years' time and with so small a number of brethren with such slender resources. The structure is an ornament to the city, an Ionic temple, fair and beautiful, substantial and commodious, built of granite, with ample accommodations for a school of a thousand and a congregation of 1,500 souls. There is an impressive portico of six great fluted columns surmounted by a Celtic cross. The baptistry is of white marble in the form of a miniature temple on the right of the pulpit and the Lord's table is on a raised platform on the left. A large and well-lighted dome is the central feature with a beautiful stained glass window of Sir Joshua Reynolds' Cherubs, given in memory of the pastor's mother by the congregation. The Sunday-school rooms are ideal. It is a noble plant, representing beautiful sacrifices, and marks an era in our work in the great city. In fact we have not in the East anywhere so admirable a structure for the purposes of the gospel.

One of the most remarkable meetings of the dedicatory series was the interdenominational service where representative Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Lutheran pastors preached the doctrine of union in Christ, and a blessed evening was also given to some of our own men when the mayor of the city brought his personal greetings and congratulations. One of the best things of this happy occasion was the "Temple Hymn," written by H. D. Menzel, one one of the Temple eiders. (See page 1300.)

This Christian Temple crowns Peter Ainslie's sixteen years' service in the Monumental City.

"BOO-HOO"

Shouts a Spanked Baby.

A Doctor of Divinity, now Editor of a well-known Religious paper, has written regarding the controversy between Collier's Weekly and the Religious Press of the Country and others, including ourselves. Also regarding suits for libel brought by Collier's against us for commenting upon its methods.

These are his sentiments, with some very emphatic words left out.

"The religious Press owes you a debt of gratitude for your courage in showing up Collier's Weekly as the "Yell-Oh Man." Would you care to use the inclosed article on the "Boo Hoo Baby" as the "Yell-Oh Man's" successor?"

"A contemporary remarks that Collier's has finally run against a solid hickory "Post" and been damaged in its own estimation to the tune of $750,-000.00."

"Here is a publication which has, in utmost disregard of the facts, spread broadcast damaging statements about the Religious Press and others and has suffered those false statements to go uncontradicted, until, not satisfied after finding the Religious Press too quiet, and peaceful, to resent the insults it makes the mistake of wandering into a fresh field and butts its rattled head against this Post and all the World laughs. Even Christians smile, as the Post suddenly turns and gives it back a dose of its own medicine."

"It is a mistake to say all the World laughs. No cheery laugh comes from Collier's, but it cries and boo hoos like a spanked baby and and wants $750,-000.00 to sooth its tender lacerated feelings."

"Thank Heaven it has at last struck a man with "back bone" enough to call a spade a "spade" and who believes in telling the whole truth without fear or favor."

Perhaps Collier's with its "utmost disregard for the facts," may say no such letter exists. Nevertheless it is on file in our office and is only one of a mass of letters and other data, newspaper comments, e.c., denouncing the "yellow" methods of Collier's. This volume is so large that a man could not well go thru it under half a day's steady work. The letters come from various parts of America.

Usually a private controversy is not interesting to the public, but this is a public controversy.

Collier's has been using the "yellow" methods to attract attention to itself, but, jumping in the air, cracking heels together and yelling "Look at me" wouldn't suffice, so it started out on a "Holier Than Thou" attack on the Religious Press and on medicines.

We leave it to the public now, as we did when we first resented Collier's attacks, to say whether, in a craving for sensation and circulation, its attacks do not amount to a systematic mercenary hounding. We likewise leave it to the public to say whether Collier's, by its own policy and methods, has not made itself more ridiculous than any comment of ours could make it.

Does Collier's expect to regain any self-inflicted loss of prestige by demonstrating thru suits for damages, that it can be more artful in evading liability for libels than the humble but resentful victims of its defamation, or does it hope by starting a campaign of libel suits to silence the popular indignation, reproach and resentment which it has aroused.

Collier's can not dodge this public controversy by private law suits. It can not postpone the public judgment against it. That great jury, the Public, will hardly blame us for not waiting until we get a petit jury in a court room, before denouncing this prodigal detractor of institutions founded and fostered either by individuals or by the public, itself.

No announcements during our entire business career were ever made claiming "medicinal effects" for either Postum or Grape-Nuts. Medicinal effects are results obtained from the use of medicines.

Thousands of visitors go thru our entire works each month and see for themselves that Grape-Nuts contains absolutely nothing but wheat, barley and a little salt; Postum absolutely nothing but wheat and about ten per cent of New Orleans molasses. The art of preparing these simple elements in a scientific manner to obtain the best food value and flavour, required some work and experience to acquire.

Now, when any publication goes far enough out of its way to attack us because our advertising is "medical," it simply offers a remarkable exhibition of ignorance or worse.

We do claim physiological or bodily results of favorable character following the adoption of our suggestions regarding the discontinuance of coffee and foods which may not be keeping the individual in good health. We have no advice to offer the perfectly healthful person. His or her health is evidence in itself that the beverages and foods used exactly fit that person. Therefore, why change?

But to the man or woman who is ailing, we have something to say as a result of an unusually wide experience in food and the result of proper feeding.

In the palpably ignorant attack on us in Collier's, appeared this statement,—"One widely circulated paragraph labors to induce the impression that Grape-Nuts will obviate the necessity of an operation in appendicitis. This is lying and potentially deadly lying."

In reply to this exhibition of———well let the reader name it, the Postum Co., says:

Let it be understood that appendicitis results from long continued disturbance in the intestines, caused primarily by undigested starchy food, such as white bread, potatoes, rice, partly cooked cereals and such.

Starchy food is not digested in the upper stomach but passes on into the duodenum, or lower stomach and intestines, where, in a healthy individual, the transformation of the starch into a form of sugar is completed and then the food absorbed by the blood.

But if the powers of digestion are weakened, a part of the starchy food will lie in the warmth and moisture of the body and decay, generating gases and irritating the mucous surfaces until under such conditions the whole lower part of the alimentary canal, including the colon and the appendix becomes involved. Disease sets up and at times takes the form known as appendicitis.

When the symptoms of the trouble make their appearance, would it not be good, practical, common sense, to discontinue the starchy food which is causing the trouble and take a food in which the starch has been transformed into a form of sugar in the process of manufacture?

This is identically the same form of sugar found in the human body after starch has been perfectly digested.

Now, human food is made up very largely of starch and is required by the body for energy and warmth. Naturally, therefore, its use should be continued, if possible, and for the reasons given above it is made possible in the manufacture of Grape-Nuts.

In connection with this change of food to bring relief from physical disturbances, we have suggested washing out the intestines to get rid of the immediate cause of the disturbance.

Naturally, there are cases where the disease has lain dormant and the abuse continued too long, until apparently only the knife will avail. But it is a well-established fact among the best physicians who are acquainted with the details above recited, that preventative measures are far and away the best.

Are we to be condemned for suggesting a way to prevent disease by following natural methods and for perfecting a food that contains no "medicine" and produces no "medicinal effects" but which has guided literally thousands of persons from sickness to health? We have received during the years past upwards of 25,000 letters from people who have been either helped or made entirely well by following our suggestions, and they are simple.

If coffee disagrees and causes any of the ailments common to some coffee users quit it and take on Postum.

If white bread, potatoes, rice and other starch foods make trouble, quit and use Grape-Nuts food which is largely predigested and will digest, nourish and strengthen when other forms of food do not. It's just plain old common sense.

"There's a Reason" for Postum and Grape-Nuts.

Our Budget

—Off for Norfolk!

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST predicts a great and harmonious convention.

—This does not mean that there may not be some discussion, but the outcome will show practical unanimity.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special will carry a unifying delegation, that will stand solidly for peace with righteousness, for unity with freedom, and for progress along all right lines.

—And our delegation from the West is only one of many, coming from every point of the compass, which will stand for the same things, and who believe with us that we have the best cause on earth and that it deserves the best possible representation.

—The article by Stephen J. Corey has been in our hands for some months, and was not written for any occasion.

—From an excellent convention address we have taken the salient part, forming the article by J. W. Ellis.

—It is a great story we print from Dr. Dye. It will be continued, with many more illustrations. The Assistant Editor had the pleasure of hearing this enthusiastic worker speak a couple of Sundays ago in New York, just after his return from his African sojourn.

—F. A. Sword at Polo, Ill., is the evangelist for J. W. Street and his church at Mackinac in a promising meeting. Charles E. McVay is the singer. Brother McVay is to be with Isaac Elder in a revival beginning October 13.

—W. C. Wade terminates his engagement with the Second Church of Christ, Norfolk, Va., November 30, and will be open to correspondence with a view to future work. He prefers to labor in that vicinity, though he may go elsewhere.

—E. C. Tuckerman has severed his connection as singing evangelist with H. E. Wilhite. He will go to Chicago for a few weeks' rest, then enter the evangelistic field. His permanent address will be 8516 Aberline street, Chicago. From the many reports that have appeared in our columns, the excellent quality of Brother Tuckerman's work is known.

—On Lord's day the Bible school of the Central Christian Church, Pittsburg, celebrated its silver anniversary with a homecoming and re-union of former members. C. L. Thurgood is the minister of this church and R. S. Latimer its most prominent lay-member.

—While the Mitchell Park Church at St. Joseph, Mo., has just gone through the strain of paying a debt, the congregation sent in offerings for the Home, Foreign and Church Extension Societies before the books closed. C. A. Lowe is the pastor.

—The corner stone of a fine new building to cost $20,000 has been laid at Neosho, Mo. It will be the largest church building in the county, seating from 800 to 1,000 people. J. W. Baker is the pastor, and a meeting is planned for January with H. E. Wilhite.

—John T. Holton made arrangements, on the occasion of his visit to Bedford, Ky., for the erection of a new house of worship. The board of trustees was elected. Brother Holton is strongly in favor of putting a church paper into every home in his parish.

—We are glad to report that after a very serious illness which will necessitate his absence from the pulpit and his regular ministerial work, Nelson G. Brown, of Galesburg, Ill., is on the way to recovery, but it will be some weeks before he can do anything or be about at all.

—Frederick Grimes is, we understand, leaving Grand Junction, Colo., to take the pastorate at Bisbee, Ariz., where a pastor is needed. G. W. Coffman writes us that the church there is in better condition for work than for some time past, and several people are ready to take membership.

—Any church desiring a meeting during October or November can secure the services of Theodore A. Lindenmeyer, 512 North Twenty-second street, St. Joseph, Mo. The Frederick Avenue Church of that city has granted their minister a leave of absence during those months.

—Writing of his meeting at Bonner Springs, Kan., reported in our last issue, H. E. Wilhite tells us that he was presented with fifty-six jars of fruit, a crate of chickens and many groceries. This was, no doubt, in view of the fact that Brother and Sister Wilhite have just set up housekeeping at Lawrence, Kan. Brother Tuckerman was given a five dollar gold piece by the chorus. After the Norfolk convention Brother Wilhite will add to his force so that advance work may be done, which he will follow up. He is now in a meeting at Columbus, Kan.

BATH OF BEAUTY

Is Cuticura Soap, Assisted by Cuticura Ointment, Purest and Sweetest of Emollients.

Cuticura Soap combines delicate, medicinal, emollient, sanative and antiseptic properties derived from Cuticura, the great Skin Cure, with the purest of saponaceous ingredients and most refreshing of flower odors. For preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands, for irritations of the skin, for baby rashes, itchings and chafings, for lameness and soreness, for sanative, antiseptic cleansing, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery, Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, is unrivaled.

—On last Lord's day J. P. Givens began a meeting for the church at Toluca, Ill., with J. W. Landrum in charge of the music. F. M. Morgan, the minister, says this is one of the hardest places he has heard of to hold a successful revival, for there are twenty-four saloons, two Roman Catholic churches and only three where Protestants congregate.

—Marion Stevenson, after attending the Western Pennsylvania convention and a visit to the church at Washington, Pa., passed on to West Virginia where he has just been giving a series of lectures to the brethren at Moundsville, where Percy H. Wilson is pastor. From October 6-11 he is lecturing for the church at Cameron, W. Va., to which W. E. Pierce ministers.

—The Foreign Society has had by far the best year in its history. There have been more conversions than in any previous year. The receipts amount to $305,534.54. This is a gain of $36,807.92, the largest gain that has ever been made in a single year. The large gain in receipts from the church and Sunday-schools is the most significant fact in the year's work.

—The Foreign Society at Norfolk occupies Monday only. On Monday morning the missionaries will be introduced. In the afternoon business will be transacted. Addresses will be made by L. E. Sellers of Terre Haute, Ind., Ira M. Boswell of Chattanooga, Tenn., Peter Ainslie of Baltimore, Md., and Herbert Moninger of Cincinnati, O. Monday will be a full day and a great day.

—The church at Mulkeytown, Ill., where Ernest Reed is pastor, having undergone some repairs in the way of vestibule, belfrey and bell, has been reopened and dedicated by George Wise, pastor of the Main Street Christian Church, Duquoin, who raised the amount of money necessary to cover the expense. These additions have greatly improved the appearance and usefulness of the building.

—The brethren at Independence, Mo., have broken ground for a new church building of classical architecture which, when completed, will cost about $50,000. L. J. Marshall has entered upon his sixth year with this congregation, which is supporting its own home and foreign missionaries for the third year. We are glad to see this forward move where one of our brightest young ministers is now leading the church for which Alexander Procter preached.

—A most delightful reception was tendered by the First Christian Church, of Atchison, Kan., to their new pastor, Z. E. Bates, and family. There were no less than 800 people present, among them being ex-Senator C. C. McCarthy, a life-long friend of the pastor. Addresses were made by the heads of the departments of the church and ministers of the city. Our congregation is the largest one in Atchison and there is a fine prospect for a progressive work.

—William Bayard Craig is a delegate to the Norfolk convention from the Christian Missionary Society of Colorado, and will bring with him, we understand, a slogan from the West, "Denver in 1910!" But what about 1908? New Orleans and Topeka have been in training some time and are now preparing to face each other in the arena at the Norfolk convention. As a simple word of warning to the Kansas town, we would simply remark that there is a Scotchman leading the fight for New Orleans.

—W. C. Moyer writes: William Thompson joined forces with Professor T. H. Ireland and wife, for evangelistic work. They are engaged in a meeting at McCook, Neb., with eighteen additions so far—twelve of them men. The best people in the town are attending the services. We strongly commend the work of the evangelists and Dr. A. D. Finch or I will answer any questions.

—R. L. Cartwright reports a revival in the little church at Mount Summit, Ill., which has been without a preacher for several years. The membership had all but disbanded, but during the protracted meeting there were added forty-one—thirty-nine of them being by confession and baptism. There was a general toning up of the religious life of the community and the congregation is now anxious to employ a preacher. Joseph Husband has been the elder and may be addressed at Chester, R. D. 2.

—Charles C. Smith has closed his work at Blanchester, O., where, during his five years in half-time service, a new house was erected and the membership increased more than one-half. During this ministry there were added there and elsewhere 150. His church has had part in the world-wide work of the church. Brother Smith has just entered upon full-time service at Orrville, O. Speaking of the county church problem he says: "It will be solved if we have preachers great in spirit, who, like the Master, seek needy fields and live for giving and not for getting.

—George H. Combs recently returned to his pulpit at Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, after a three months' vacation. He announced at the preachers' meeting that the work during his absence had been well sustained by his assistant, Nelson H. Trimble. Seven were added on the first Sunday after Brother Combs' return, and an offering taken for church extension. Brother Combs was to address the Disciples' Union at New York city just prior to going to Norfolk, where he will preside over the convention.

—Homer E. Sala, of Sebring, O., has tendered his resignation to take effect October 7. Since June 1, 1906, when he began his work there, the church has made great progress. During this year it has paid off $400 of the debt, given $350 for missions, the Bible school has built additional rooms at a cost of over $500, while its attendance has grown from sixty to an average of 162, with an average offering of $13.50. The church very much regrets to lose Brother Sala. Any minister capable and desirous of filling the vacancy should address the elders of the church.

—Burris A. Jenkins, ex-president of Kentucky University, has been installed as pastor of the Linwood Boulevard Church, Kansas City. T. P. Haley, the retiring pastor, presided at the installation service, and spoke of his ten years' pastorate from the date of the church's organization as a mission on Springfield avenue to the present time. Many friends of both the retiring and the new pastor were present from other churches. We are glad to know that there is reason to believe the disease which has crippled Brother Jenkins has been retarded and that a cure can be effected.

—B. B. Tyler, Denver, Colo., writes thus: "I thank you for printing in The Christian-Evangelist 'A Noble Confession of Faith.' It is, in fact, a 'Noble Confession.' This 'Confession' ought to be printed so that it can be framed and hung on the walls of our church audience, prayer-meeting and Sunday-school rooms, as well as in our homes and in the studies of our pastors. This 'Confession' is some compensation for the ugly things that have recently been said, to our shame, in print. Archibald McLean is a 'nobleman' in the best sense of the word. Again I thank you. Now give it to us in a form for framing."

—From a note from Charles S. Medbury, minister of the University Church of Christ, Des Moines, we learn that his congregation, in their recent offering for home work to be apportioned among the different boards, raised $1,057, and Brother Medbury hoped the sum would reach $1,200. This is in addition to the $1,000 raised for the foreign work in the spring. One of the families of the congregation has assumed living link relationship to the state work by a gift of $300, and will have their own evangelist. Drake University, we learn, opens triumphantly with by far the largest enrollment in the history of the institution. "There is," writes Brother Medbury, "great enthusiasm for God and his work in these parts."

—A minister writing from Raton, N. M., asks us, if necessary, to "stop the press" to publish this statement of his estimate of The Christian-Evangelist: "Give your readers something free from malice, envy, boasting and backbiting, then you will have a paper that can be recommended in Christian homes. Otherwise its influence to our faith is most detrimental. How can a reader of The Evangelist be edified when its columns teem with maliciousness, etc.?" We hardly felt justified in "stopping the press" to insert this screed in favor of a higher-toned journal, but we trust its delay for a week will not materially lessen its usefulness. Sometimes the things we see are subjective rather than objective. Whether this is a case of that kind, we leave our readers to judge.

—Joseph Lowe, one of our older men in the work, is performing a service to the brotherhood at which few men are successful. He is kept busy all the time settling church troubles, organizing churches, saving meeting houses from being sold and passing out of our hands. In addition to this, of course, he works in the interest of our missionary causes. Brother Lowe is a reader and keeps in touch with the advance movements of the church. It is in that way that men, who are supposed to have passed the dead line, are able to do some of the best work of their lives long after they are 50 years of age. Bro. Lowe writes: "I stand on the sunny side of faith and hope and love and through their inspiration, save for the intrusive shadows thrown across the pathway of life by the relentless hand of death, the heart is as warm and happy as in the bright, sweet morning of life and early manhood."

—The Christian Church at Quincy, Ill., celebrated its fifty-seventh anniversary on September 29. "The Quincy Whig" gives quite a history of the church, written by one of the members, with a little sketch of the movement as a whole, with pictures of the building, the pastor and the only living charter member, now in his eighty-sixth year, Bro. A. O. Leavell. Walter M. Jordan, the present pastor, has done and is doing an excellent work there. Two hundred and seventy persons have been received into the membership during his pastorate, which began January 1, 1904. We are glad to learn from Doctor Kidd, clerk of the church, who sends us this report, that it was a great day for the church and that the work there "is taking on a brighter look than for some time past."

[The Editor of this paper had pleasant associations with that church in the days of his early struggles as editor, and rejoices in its present prosperity.]

Norfolk's Final Invitation.

October 3, 1907.

To the Disciples of Christ:

Dear Brethren—The Norfolk convention will meet October 11-17. Have you arranged for your ministers and for yourselves to be present on this occasion? The people of the East need your co-operation and your encouragement and especially need your presence.

The committees have worked hard to be ready for you and earnestly and cordially invite you to come and assist in making the convention a memorable one in our history.

The churches have been invited through the papers and individual letters to send their ministers and delegates, appeals have been made through our several secretaries for your attendance, and facts and figures have been presented showing many reasons for a large gathering.

October 17 will be "Disciples of Christ Day" on the Jamestown Exposition grounds. Special arrangements will be made for your comfort and pleasure. Arrange to remain for this day.

We must, during this convention, make the great East know who and what the Disciples of Christ are, therefore brethren we need your co-operation.

The convention is a part of the great scheme of our brotherhood. It is yours as well as ours. We therefore beseech you to come.

The ministers of other religious bodies very courteously opened their pulpits and churches for our use. Do not disappoint their expectations.

Fraternal orders have brought great crowds and made great displays. Should Christians do any less?

The churches of this section are small, but will give you a hearty welcome. The governor of this state sends you a cordial and warm welcome on behalf of the state of Virginia.

In St. Louis on "Disciples' Day" the great Festival Hall was packed. Can we not do as well on October 17?

This is our last appeal and we pray you not to disappoint us. Fraternally yours,

R. E. Steed,
Chairman Publicity Committee.

Did I Do Right?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I write this purely for information. Six miles from Wabash, in a very rich country, there is a small village named Treaty Creek. For several years the Methodist people have had a very weak organization there, and have kept up Sunday afternoon services every alternate Sunday. But they were making no advancement, and seemed to have but little influence in the community. Last spring, without consulting them, I went there and held a meeting, during which I baptized more than fifty people and organized a Christian Church, which has met on every Lord's day since to break bread and keep the ordinances of the Lord's house. This new church seems to enjoy much prosperity. Now what I want to know is, did I do right or wrong? If we had been operating under federation was I transgressing the bounds? An answer to the above will help me very much in determining whether I am in favor of federation or not. As I understand it, as explained by Brother Garrison, I did right. Am I mistaken?

L. L. Carpenter.

Wabash, Ind.

[Our veteran dedicator did right, of course, as he generally does. Federation not only seeks, through co-operation, to have needy fields occupied, but to have them occupied by the religious body which, for various reasons, is likely to be most successful. The religious body having a strong church or churches near a needy neighborhood, would, other things being equal, be most likely to keep up the work. And then the failure of any given church, having nominally occupied a field for several years, to supply the religious needs of the community, would argue the need of a change. Federation, if entirely non-partisan in its motives, is bound to consider all these facts and act solely for the advancement of the Kingdom of God. It should be remembered, too, that, in the last analysis, after fraternal council, each church must act in harmony with its conscientious convictions of duty. It is far more probable, however, that we shall be asked to occupy more fields than we feel able to do, than that we shall be restricted in our evangelistic work. It is, however, the larger aspects of federation which invite co-operation in great enterprises where united effort is necessary to success, that most strongly appeal to us. Local co-operation will meet and solve their own local problems.—Editor.]

AN HISTORIC VIRGINIA CHURCH.

Thomas and Alexander Campbell both visited Virginia in the early days. In 1825 the latter went there as a Baptist minister. It was in the course of his discussion with Bishop Semple on this visit that Mr. Campbell said: "So long as any man, woman or child declares his confidence in Jesus of Nazareth as God's own son, that he was delivered for our offenses, and raised again for our justification; or in other words, that Jesus is the Messiah, the Savior of men; and so long as he exhibits a willingness to obey him in all things according to his knowledge, so long will I receive him as a Christian brother."

In 1829 Alexander Campbell was elected delegate to the Constitutional Convention which convened in Richmond. Among its members were Madison and Monroe, ex-presidents of the United States; John Randolph and others of fame. His stay there proved to be an important step in the advancement of the restoration.

But it was due immediately to the visit of Thomas Campbell that our first church in Richmond was founded. On January 5, 1832, he arrived there and was requested to preach on several evenings by the pastor of the First Baptist Church. The latter was requested by many of his members to permit Mr. Campbell to speak on the Lord's day. This lead to trouble and ultimately a resolution calling on those "who have embraced these new doctrines and opinions" to withdraw. Sixty-eight of them did and soon a subscription list of $5,000 was made, a lot purchased, and a brick church, as depicted herewith, built. From a large sycamore tree, which threw its refreshing shade over its entrance, this was called Sycamore Church. From this one church have sprung six congregations. But the old church building no longer exists.

The Campbells made other visits in Virginia, among other places at Norfolk, where Alexander Campbell spoke in the courthouse. Our church there was organized about 1870 by J. Z. Tyler. The present building was erected in 1879.

THE CHILDREN OF OUR MISSIONARIES

must be cared for and educated in America. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society has arranged for the G. L. Wharton Memorial Home and scholarship at Hiram, O.

Other missionary societies have such homes. $25,000 is needed.

A great opportunity to put money into a permanent investment in aid of missions and in the care and education of worthy children.

Individuals, churches, Sunday-schools and societies are asked to help. Address Wharton Memorial Home. Hiram, O.

Changes at Hiram.

The new enrollment, 215 to date, promises at least 5 per cent gain over last year. Further signalizing this year's opening is the unanimous election, by the board of trustees, of Miner Lee Bates, 1895, to the presidency of the college, vice President Rowlison, resigned.

President Bates will continue temporarily his ministry in the Fifty-sixth Street Church of Christ, New York City, until certain important work of that church shall be safely in the way of accomplishment; but he will assume active duty at Hiram in the course of the year. This most happy solution of the crisis arising upon President Rowlison's deeply-deplored resignation, heretofore made public and now effective, will be hailed with unbounded enthusiasm throughout the Hiram constituency.

In this connection the voluntary retirement of the Hon. Charles B. Lockwood from the presidency of and active service on the board of trustees, is regretfully announced. The unprecedented duration and incalculable worth to Hiram of his official connection with the institution entitle him to our unending gratitude.

The faculty committee on endowment, consisting of Professors Dean (chairman), Wakefield and Paul, now effectively organized, is enlisting alumni and others in various places to assist locally in executing its definite plans of work under authority of the board of trustees. We want $100,000 for Hiram.

The finance committee of the board of trustees consists of William G. Dietz, '81, former secretary the Guardian Trust Company; Harrison R. Newcomb, president the Citizens' Savings and Trust Company; Warren S. Hayden, '92, of Hayden, Miller and Company, investment bankers; Warren S. Cowdery, president the American Fork and Hoe Company, and Henry E. McMillin, director the Reserve Trust Company, all of Cleveland. The names of these eminent and responsible members of the board of trustees sufficiently assure the safe custody and sound management of the college investments.

The endowment of the college, always too meager, is now rendered quite inadequate by the present extraordinary rise in the general cost-level and by the increasingly high educational standards with which Hiram has effectually kept abreast.

Frederick A. Henry,
President of the Board of Trustees of Hiram College.

Men's Bible Class Banquet.

One of the most notable events of the year in the city of Pittsburg was the banquet tendered the men's Bible class of the East End Christian Church Thursday evening, September 26, in the Hotel Lamont, by the class instructor, John G. Slayter, pastor of the East End Church.

This class was organized January 1 with eleven members and grew in six months to an enrollment of 108. Only those not connected with any other class or Bible school are asked to join. The members are mostly young men. They give every evidence of unusual intelligence and earnestness. Not more than half of them were previously interested in the Church of Christ.

The East End Church is located in the heart of the finest residence section of the city with great denominational churches on every hand. In its immediate neighborhood there are many high grade boarding houses. The field is justly accounted one of the most conservative and difficult in America. The appeal to its residents comes into competition not only with all the historic, endowed and influential churches of the city, but also with clubs, lecture courses, libraries, theaters and amusements of all sorts.

Attendance at the banquet was restricted to the members of the class, friends eligible to membership and a few special guests, among whom were Col. Samuel Harden Church, a grandson of both Walter Scott and Samuel Church, and formerly superintendent of the school; Mayor George W. Guthrie, Homer L. Castle, Esq., Pennsylvania's "Little Giant of Prohibition;" Wallace Tharp, pastor First Church, Allegheny; President H. O. Allerton, of the Pittsburg Board of Trade, and Congressman James Francis Burke. All of these spoke not only with rare wit and brilliancy, but with great earnestness and wisdom upon things of intimate concern to the class. The climax was reached in Mr. Slayter's stirring words on "The Heroic Christ and Twentieth Century Manhood."

Thorough, but not superfluous, organization was manifest. Mr. J. C. Kemp was master of ceremonies and Dr. E. L. Neff, president of the class, toastmaster. No speaker was assigned a topic, but each spoke from the fullness of his heart and was inspired to bring forth his best treasures. A greater group of speeches was never heard in Pittsburg. And any one of the distinguished speakers will predict the class will speedily reach two hundred, and not stop there.

We may have the men if we want them!

W. R. Warren.

Ministerial Association of Eastern Ohio.

The 44th annual meeting of the Ministerial Association of the Disciples of Christ in Eastern Ohio will be held in Hiram, Ohio, beginning Tuesday, October 29. It will be an important meeting, and every member is urged to be present either in person or by letter. One or two sessions will be occupied by a district missionary rally led by the state missionary secretary, H. Newton Miller. The remaining sessions will be filled with the regular program of the Ministerial Association.

The Association has had an active and valuable ministry for 44 years. The question has arisen whether it has not reached the end of its usefulness. This will be considered at the Hiram meeting, and I ask as a personal favor that the members of the Association, no matter where they may now be located, and especially those who are so far away as not to be able to be present, to write me their judgment in the matter. The value and usefulness of the Association in the past is without question. Of its charter members only Robert Moffett and F. M. Green are living. Having accomplished its original purpose, shall the adjournment at the close of this meeting be sine die, or not? is the question. F. M. Green, Cor. Sec.

221 Ash St., Akron, O.

A Commendation.

Our church at Manville, Ind., has recently enjoyed greatly a ten days' meeting under the leadership of J. D. Lawrence, of Muncie, Ind. We first became acquainted with Brother Lawrence through his connection with the Christian Publishing Company, and all the good he has done for us we credit to that source, of course not excluding his own earnest gospel preaching and his most zealous efforts in private for our good.

Brother Lawrence did not labor solely, nor chiefly for additions. He sought to lead the thoughts and affections of the Disciples Christward and heavenward, and thus to prepare the way for a more efficient organization, which seemed to be needed, and which he effected.

Nevertheless he interested quite a number of persons outside of the church, and especially gained the good will and close attention of the young. We have requested him to visit us monthly for an indefinite period and continue his good work. J. W. Lanham.

The International Sunday-School Lesson Committee.

The following communication is worthy of public attention. The writer probably speaks for others, and not alone for himself. Hence this public reply to his questions, suggestions and criticisms:

"My Dear Brother—Will you, prominent as you are in Sunday-school work, permit me to ask you these questions:

"How is it that the International Committee can rest satisfied without making any movement towards a great change, with the present amount of study given to God's Word, publicly? The real teaching is only about half an hour weekly, while fifty times that is given every week to the teaching of the rudiments of the world, i. e. twenty-five hours a week. The London conference did nothing as to this most vital point; and the great convention at Rome was silent. How is it? Why in the world were all these great workers silent about such a matter as this?

"They seem to me not to recognize, except in words, that the Bible is the only Book that can give any real education, i. e., must lie at the basis and foundation of all true education; and that it is the only book in the world that can build up character. All the knowledge of the universe, apart from the knowledge of God, will leave a man with a heart full of iniquity. The devil has all that knowledge, and is unchanged.

"It is the law of God that man must have time to study his Book. Why not recognize the fact in real practice?"

Dearly Beloved: How do you know that the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee is "satisfied" with present conditions and with its work? I am in a position to know that the committee is not resting in comfortable satisfaction with its achievements.

How do you know that the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee is not "making any movement toward a great change"? Great changes have been brought to pass and greater changes are coming.

I do not see what the lesson committee can do, more than it is doing, to increase "the amount of study given to God's Word publicly." This committee exists for a definite purpose. Its duties are clearly defined. Its limitations are distinctly marked.

"These great workers" were not "silent," neither in Rome nor in London, "about" the "study given to God's Word." It was the burden of their thoughts, conferences, resolutions.

Pray, in what way can this lesson committee do its work "except in words"? It certainly can not use force, to increase the amount of time given to the study of the Bible.

My acquaintance with the devil is not sufficiently intimate to warrant me in speaking of his knowledge as you speak of it. Possibly you are correct.

The International Sunday-school Lesson Committee is the agent of the International Sunday-school Association, which meets once in three years. The next meeting will be held in Louisville, Ky., in June, 1908. That convention will select a session committee to serve for a term of six years. The specific duty of this committee is to arrange an outline study of the Bible for this period. This committee is required to select sections of appropriate length and character to be used in the Bible schools of Christendom, Sunday after Sunday; to give titles to these sections; to select for each lesson a golden text supposed to express the central thought in the lesson, and to suggest verses in the selected passage to be committed to memory. The committee also indicates readings that will enable those who use the lessons to keep in mind the connection. If you have followed the International Sunday-school lessons this year you have, since the first of January, read and studied the whole of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy. This is not hop-skip-and-jump. We aim to study the Bible book by book. In this way, in the course of six years, the whole Bible will be studied in outline.

The words "in outline" are used because this is all that can be done. It is superlatively absurd to think of giving to the study of the Bible "twenty-five hours a week." Probably there is not a pastor, even, who gives that amount of time to the study of the Bible. I am intimately acquainted with one who does not give half that amount of time to this pleasant and profitable exercise. Much of his time is occupied in replying to such communications as the above.

This article will be followed soon, the Lord willing, with an account of how the International Sunday-school lessons are selected and prepared.

Western Pennsylvania Convention.

The annual convention of the Western Pennsylvania churches, held September 24-26, in the beautiful city of Beaver, was full of great enthusiasm and became a place of larger visions in all the various departments of the church work. First, the missionary board's reports, and the field we are trying to reach, impressed every one present with the conviction that we must more than double offerings and missionary effort of every kind the coming year if we are to reach Centennial aims for the state.

Percy Wilson, of Moundsville, W. Va., has been called to become field evangelist. We have bright, aggressive young ministers at sixteen points, whose labors are being supplemented by the state board. We have two of the most thoroughly equipped missionaries to be found anywhere doing work among the great foreign populations in and around Pittsburg.

The C. W. B. M. forces of Western Pennsylvania are the most enthusiastic to be found anywhere and are planning the most thorough and aggressive campaign for the coming year they have ever undertaken. They called Brother Derthick, of Hazel Green Academy, Ky., to give their convention address this year and it was the most thrilling speech of the convention in the vision it gave the churches of the opportunity and blessing of that great work in Kentucky's mountains.

The Bible school session was a most profitable one, being addressed by Marion Stevenson, who captured Western Pennsylvania by his clear and forceful address on the trained teacher for service in the Bible school. In a short conference, following, 255 graduates in the teacher-training course were pledged from not more than one-half the churches and schools. H. A. Denton gave a fine address for the home society and W. R. Warren lifted us all to a high plane of vision with Centennial aims and the especial responsibility of all Western Pennsylvania Disciples to the great Centennial. J. W. Carpenter had charge of the closing session given up to Christian Endeavor work. Clayton Brooks, of the First Church, New Castle, made an address and was most heartily welcomed among our fine fellowship of ministers. Wallace Tharp spoke to the Ministerial Association, Fred M. Gordon preached the convention sermon, F. A. Bright made an appeal for enlarged activity in the state work and O. H. Phillips presented the claims of the religious newspaper. This last address and some of the others I was sorry to miss. The convention for May, 1908, goes to New Castle.

Something to be Devised.

When I decided to give up the pastorate of the First Church of Christ in Danville, Ill., something more than a year ago, I made announcements of such purpose in all our papers, thinking, possibly, that some field would open to me where I could be useful as a pastor for a number of years yet. I waited patiently for two or three months, and nothing came of it. I would not beg for a place, so I decided to look about for a permanent home, where we could live and do such work as would come to us. We finally bought a home in Decatur, Ill., and moved to it last October. After our removal a number of churches seemed to be anxious to have me locate with them, but my arrangements had been made and could not be changed without financial loss. During the past year I have been doing hard work in making improvements at my home and preaching for churches round about Decatur.

I have taken two weak churches, Dalton City and Cerro Gordo, preaching at each place two Lord's days in each month. These churches need such a work, and I am hopeful that success will come to my ministry at each place. I am now at Blue Mound, Ill., fourteen miles out from Decatur, assisting Bro. S. E. Sines in a revival meeting. The meeting is just commencing. We expect a number of accessions to the church during the meeting.

There is something lacking in our organization which causes great loss to us. We do not have enough preachers, so there are a large number of churches needing preachers and wanting them, but can not get them. There are a number of good preachers who are capable of good service and would be glad to work, but there is no medium of communication between them and the churches that want preachers. Methodist preachers, who are not half as capable as these preachers, who are very poor preachers indeed, have places—have an organization which sends them to churches needing service. I think the time has come when our people should devise some better method than we have by which all of our ministers, who are capable, can be at work. It will be well for our wise men to consider this one question. My address in Decatur is 2096 N. Union street. Let our preachers in passing pull the latchstring and they will find a welcome. J. H. Smart.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Kansas City.

Miss Issie Daniel, of Platte City, will temporarily assist in the work at Hyde Park Church, Louis S. Cupp, pastor.——Arthur K. Brooks, the singing evangelist, has placed his membership with the Hyde Park Church. His wife, formerly Miss Bessie Fife, has for a long time been a most useful member of this church.——E. J. Lampton has for two months mingled with the Kansas City Disciples like a father in Israel. His presence has been a benediction. The medical treatment given him while here was successful. He returned to his field of labor at Louisiana refreshed in body, with every promise of many more years of faithful service.——A pipe organ has been installed at South Prospect Church, where D. Y. Donaldson is pastor. The dedication of the instrument took place on September 22. This church is progressing splendidly.——Edwin A. Eddy, for many years a faithful preacher in Cass and adjoining counties, was recently laid to rest in beautiful Forest Hill cemetery, this city. His wife, two daughters and three sons survive him.——S. J. White, of Trenton, preached at Ivanhoe Park on September 22.——C. A. Snyder, of Forest Avenue Church, has decided to enter the ministry. He preached for the first time at Moran, Kan., on September 15. He will in due course enter one of our Bible colleges.——The Argentine church has recently paid off one-third of its indebtedness, leaving $500 unpaid. F. L. Graham's efforts are telling along other lines as well as financial.——B. E. Stover is now ministering to the Armourdale church.——The joint board of our Kansas City churches recommended to each church to establish a church bulletin, or some kind of a weekly publication, with a view to laying a foundation for a paper which will represent the interests of all the churches of the city. The recommendation has already been adopted by several of the churches.——The Sunday-school at Central Church, Kansas City, Kan., on a recent Sunday morning made an offering of $316 for the Building Fund indebtedness. There were 318 persons present. The school at Jackson Avenue, with which the Central has been having a contest, on one of the days of the contest, had 390 present and an offering of $315.——"The C. W. B. M. Federation held an exceedingly interesting meeting last Wednesday at Sheffield. Splendid papers, inspiring reports, fervent prayers and a generous offering combined to make it one of the best sessions in the history of the Federation. It was unanimously decided to make the Federation a 'Life-line' during the year beginning next June. The hospitality of the Sheffield church and pastor was ideal."—First Church Bulletin.——A note at the foot of a recently issued statement of the Linwood Boulevard Church reads as follows: "It is easily discernible from the above statement that our congregation has raised in actual cash during the four years $28,641.58, and should the unpaid pledges be promptly met, this amount would reach the splendid sum of $30,197.01. All this has been done in addition to keeping up the current expenses of the church and meeting the regular calls of the various missionary societies, raising more than our apportionment on each occasion.

Increase at Wichita Falls, Texas.

We closed a meeting of three weeks with 62 added—34 by primary obedience and the rest restored and by baptism. Some of them had been out of the fellowship of the church for many years. J. J. Lockhart, of Tyler, Texas, did the preaching. He has lost none of his old time power, and the church was much pleased with him and his preaching. L. D. Parnell, who is now with J. B. Boen at Nevada, Mo., was leader in song and he did his part well. This is the best meeting in many ways held in our town for a long time. I had just held a week's meeting at a mission near by with 20 additions, making 82 in the past six weeks to our congregation.

Ohio.

J. E. Lynn has this motto hanging in the First Church at Warren: "1. To win a hundred men for Christ. 2. To enlist a hundred men in Bible school work. 3. To see the men at every public service." Why not make this a fall and winter campaign for men everywhere? John L. Brandt will assist the Warren church in a January meeting.——William Kraft has been preaching some at Vermilion. John E. Pounds will hold a meeting later and an effort made to organize a church.——F. D. Butchart, Aetna street, Cleveland, recently baptized a young Welsh brother, W. E. Williams. He has had quite a little experience in Christian work and has taken the Lindenwald Church, Hamilton.——The Uhrichsville Church has purchased a lot on which they expect to erect a chapel and have a second church in that place by 1000.——Ohio regrets very much to release Charles M. Fillmore, who goes from Carthage to the Hillside Church, Indianapolis. However, we remember Indiana gave him to us ten years ago, so yield with better grace. We all greatly love him and wish him well.——C. M. Arthur goes from Lancaster to Chicago Avenue, Columbus, October 1. He will find a big field in that part of Columbus and plenty of hard work.——Oscar Riley is stirring Prairie Depot. F. M. Tinder, of Kentucky, is now helping in an evangelistic meeting.——Hiram opened September 24 with quite an increase in attendance, and everybody in fine spirits. R. H. Miller, of Buffalo, preached the convocation sermon on Sunday, September 29. An effort will be made at once to raise $100,000 additional endowment. One member of the board has already promised $10,000 of this amount.——The sympathy of the brethren goes out to J. P. Meyers and wife, of Portsmouth, in the loss of their 6-year-old boy, Horace, by diphtheria.——The church at Bedford will celebrate in a worthy way its diamond anniversary November 15-17. This will be followed by a meeting in which the local minister will do the preaching and Miss Ida Mae Hanna, of Cincinnati, will sing.——The rallies and conventions throughout the state are proving very interesting this fall. Brother Miller is making a fine impression and winning hearts and confidence by his fine spirit and earnest message. It will soon be time for the Ohio offering and we ought easily to reach the $10,000 from the churches.——The Ohio man gets a scolding now and then for not noting some things of interest here and there. But remember it is hard to write about that of which one does not know. Some people can write quite voluminously on that of which they know nothing or very little, but such a bluff can not be put up when dealing with news items. Moral—drop a card. C. A. Freer.

A Plan of Co-operation.

Pike County convention outlined a plan of co-operation for this year that promises well. A series of institutes will be held with the weaker churches. The Fifth District is adopting the same plan for a larger application. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, with the assistance of the district secretary, O. C. Bolman, four of us Pike County ministers visited with the churches at Pearl, Nebo and Pleasant Hill. In the afternoons and evenings we considered state missions, world-wide missions, Eureka College and local church and Bible school work. The meetings were inspirational and grew in attendance and enthusiasm. The offerings paid the expenses. Promises were made to observe the state offering in November, an educational secretary appointed in each church, and in the case of Pearl funds were raised to secure a pastor for half time and to cover all indebtedness for next year. Another very probable result will be the co-operation of Nebo and Pearl in securing the same minister. The right man could easily build up both these churches, as rail connection is fine. J. W. Pearson had fine arrangements for our reception at Pleasant Hill, where he is doing a good work. D. W. Campbell and L. D. Crandall ably assisted in this experiment, and all pronounce it a great success. Our suggestion is that a district evangelist spend a goodly portion of his time with weak churches, and by the assistance of surrounding pastors put these churches on their feet by locating pastors, giving them better financial system and otherwise encouringing them all along the line.

Brethren of the Fifth District, get busy holding institutes, and where such work is needed as at Pearl, take two days for it. Bro. Bolman will furnish you literature and report blanks.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

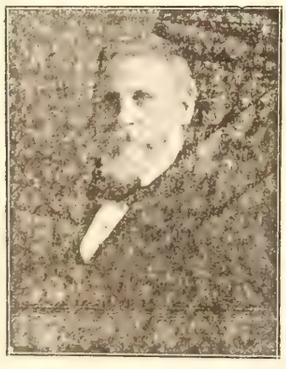
Hearsays and Guesses from the Empire State.

If the brethren in the Empire State are at all inclined to refer to Raphael Harwood Miller as a "coming man," we desire to caution them to desist, as Brother Miller has demonstrated by his good works for the Richmond Avenue Church at Buffalo that he has already "arrived." Brother Miller has been the deservedly popular minister of the Richmond Avenue congregation for the past five years. He was one of the men we missed from the 1907 State Missionary Convention. While the brethren were perspiring over the discussion of knotty problems during convention week in New York City, Brother Miller was seeking information and pleasure in England, Scotland, Holland or some other of those countries that have a place on the map across the big water.

Inasmuch as his membership generously granted him a three months' leave of absence, under the plea that some one was in need of a little rest—either Brother Miller or the membership, I am not quite sure as to the exact fact—he availed himself of the privilege. Perforce we extended to him executive clemency and issued a certificate of pardon, with injunction not to repeat the indignity. Brother Miller's summer outing was distinctively pleasant, as much time was passed in the company of his parents, who have been living in England three years, his father being there in the interest of a large American industrial corporation. His mother and sister may return with him.

If the ratio in numerical growth and attendance at the public services and Bible school is maintained this year, as compared with last year, the Richmond Avenue brethren may have a problem to solve. They are "doers and not hearers only." I guess they were wise in providing for a larger building space some time ago. D. C. Tremaine supplied Brother Miller's pulpit during his absence.



A new star appeared in the constellation of literature and scholarship during the Wednesday afternoon session of the 1907 Christian Missionary Convention in New York City. Prof. Herbert Martin, Ph. D., was unknown to the upstate Disciples until he was introduced as one of the scheduled speakers upon the program, and right glad we were to meet him. He is a young man of excellent attainments, and promises much. He is a member of the church on East 169th street, and has been engaged in literary pursuits for some time in the metropolis. His composure as a speaker was severely tested, as during his address one of the most violent thunderstorms of the season was in active operation. It was a thirty-minute trial of endurance that few speakers can experience, but Professor Martin won out with commendable patience, and received many hearty encomiums for this personal quality as well as upon the quality of his scholarly address. Hearsay informs us that Brother Martin has been engaged to supply the pulpit of the Sterling Place Church in Brooklyn for the coming year. This does not interrupt him in his regular professional work, as some one else (whom I have not learned) is to care for all other departments of the work. Brother Martin may later give his entire time to the ministry.

The advice of one Horace Greeley, "Go West, young man," was disregarded by C. Roy Stauffer, when he gave up his work at Rock Falls, Ill., to enter upon an engagement with the Rowland Street Church in Syracuse. This church is a vigorous offspring from the Central Church, of some three years' growth. It is one of the mission churches in our state receiving financial assistance from the state Missionary Society, but is fast passing on toward a self-supporting basis. It has a coterie of business men, experienced in professional, commercial and industrial pursuits, of surprising character in so young an organization, and under the guidance of Brother Stauffer is planning big things for the future. A flourishing Bible school of 65 scholars and teachers and a nominal membership of 70, with an attendance of from 35 to 40 at prayer-meetings, and free from the bugbear of financial "deficits," is a record worthy of emulation. Brother Stauffer, in avoirdupois, could hardly hold the scales in balance with Secretary Taft, but with a mental machinery that turns out some excellent products and possessing a pleasing combination of good qualities a church which he has in charge can not go backwards. He is a classmate and friend of Brother Serena, of the Central Church, and hence the relations existing between the Central and Rowland Street churches is a matter of especial gratification and pride.

The opening of Texas Christian University at Waco this year was one of the most auspicious the institution has ever had. There were about 250 students and quite a number of visitors present. By special invitation I delivered the principal address. I asked and answered five questions, viz.: 1. Who are we? 2. Whence came we? 3. To what have we come? 4. For what purpose have we come? 5. What shall be the result?

Another Unity Conference.

The Scandinavian Unity Conference has come and gone. It was brimful of good things. These conferences afford great opportunity to present New Testament Christianity to those who come to these meetings. It was my pleasure for the first time to meet C. S. Osterhus. I only wish our American brethren could have heard the four speeches he made, two of them in Scandinavian and two in English. They were on "First Principles," and I doubt if any of our brethren could have done better justice to the subject. He is a forceful, earnest speaker and people love to hear him tell the story of the cross. The Scandinavian-Baptists attended in full force. Brother Larson and also the mission preacher, Brother Lunburg, both took active part in the meetings. Brother Osterhus preached in Alta Tuesday evening in English to a good house. I am sorry the Iowa state board are not at present lending Brother Osterhus a helping hand until his paper, "Bibel Venen," gets better established. Brother Polson, of Exira, wrote that he could not attend this unity conference, but would attend the next to get fully acquainted with the Scandinavian work.

The Meeting at Cantrall.

Lord's day, September 22, was a great day in the history of the Cantrall Church. It was the last day of a four weeks' campaign. The congregations were the best we had had at any time during the meeting. In the afternoon 500 or 600 people of the community assembled at the bank of the Sangamon River to witness the Christian baptism of sixteen adults. At the evening service twenty of the twenty-one additions received the right hand of fellowship. During the meeting nineteen received baptism and three came from other religious denominations.

W. G. McColley, of the Pontiac Church, did the preaching, with the exception of the last three days. His work as an evangelist has been of the most substantial kind, and every addition of the church during the meeting will be a real addition to the power of the church.

On September 27 a reception was given to the new members. Notwithstanding bad weather, a goodly number of people were present. At the close of the program a neatly printed baptismal certificate and a copy of the American Revised New Testament was presented to each of the new members.

William Woods College.

The friends of this institution have reason to rejoice in its continued prosperity. Within the past ten years its enrollment has doubled, it has added to its equipment a large, commodious and imposing dormitory named after E. L. Edwards, one of the donors, and last year erected the D. M. Dulany auditorium, almost perfect in its appointments. Its present enrollment of pupils falls little short of 200, the greater part of them being boarding pupils. It has added to its faculty a graduate of Wellesley, who assists in the English department, besides directing the reading of the young ladies in its library. During the summer nearly $3,000 was expended in putting down hard wood floors and in transforming the old chapel into school and living rooms.

Eureka College.

The Centennial movement for Eureka College was inaugurated a year ago at the great state convention at Paris, Ill. At that time three Centennial aims were adopted. First, to increase the attendance of the college to an annual enrollment of 400. Second, to enlarge the membership of the Illinois Christian Educational Association to 5,000. Third, to raise $250,000 endowment for the college. A committee was appointed and carried on the work for a year under great disadvantages. But much good was accomplished, and the way was paved for larger things.

At the recent state convention at Jacksonville a new movement was outlined to assist the Centennial committee in carrying out their aims. One difficulty in the way during the last year was the inability of the committee to secure a man for the field work after J. G. Waggoner severed his relationship with the I. C. E. A. to accept the pastorate of the Christian church at Canton, Ill. The plan proposed in the educational conference at the Jacksonville convention was to secure eighty people who will pay $25 a year for five years, to support a man in the field to co-operate with the Centennial Committee and the Board of Trustees in carrying out these aims. Several people at the convention signified their willingness to enter into fellowship on this proposition. A. J. Elliott, of Peoria, and H. H. Peters, of Dixon, were appointed a special committee to secure the eighty names. The committee has commenced work. A great many letters have been sent out and many personal appeals have been made. Quite a number have responded. We ought to have the eighty names within thirty days. We would be pleased to have a word of encouragement from every one who reads this article. And in fact we are willing to receive words of discouragement. We would rather have these words expressed to the committee than to any other person or persons. A. J. Elliott is a railroad man and has listened to the grievances of the public for many years. H. H. Peters has been a preacher for thirteen years, and has heard every conceivable tale of woe. Send in your document.

Just as soon as we can get this matter settled it will be possible to inaugurate the most vigorous campaign ever carried on in the interest of Eureka College. To-day is the day to act. We can shout after the work is done. The only way to endow a college is to endow it; the only way to raise money is to get your hand under it; the only way for us to secure these eighty names soon is for you to send in your name at once. This is personal to every reader of this paper.

Dixon, Ill. H. H. Peters.

The Dynamic of Preaching.

equipment for the preaching of the cross. The keenest intellect may fail to grasp the meaning of the Scriptures. They are spiritually interpreted. We are such egotists. We think we can read at a glance, and accept and interpret the great truths of revelation. But back of all our self-evolved efforts must be the spiritual interpretation of the Truth, if we are to be effectual messengers. It seems strange that the religion of Jesus Christ, which was born of the Spirit, and whose gospel is aflame with the personal and present power of that Spirit from Matthew to Revelation, should be preached with apparently so little recognition of this fact. Why is it that a doctrine so plainly conspicuous is so undiscovered by us? Is it possible that the same blindness which covered up the Old Testament and hid from the Jews the coming of the Messiah has fallen upon us who study the New Testament, and hidden from us the power of the Evangel—the Holy Spirit?

But, it is not the theory we hold in regard to the Spirit—we may have many different ideas in regard to that, but do we really believe in his presence in the Christian heart, and if so must we not honor him in our preaching? We are unbelieving these days. We become blinded by the powers of the world and forget the power of God. Let us let go our unbeliefs. We will never win the world for Christ until we do. It will cost much to do it, but is it not worth while for us to become channels of divine energy to a lost world? It will send us to our knees. It will cause searching of heart. There will be burning of bridges, but it is worth while.

Perhaps you have heard the story of Ole Bull and John Ericson. You remember that they were boys together in their native Scandinavian country. John Ericson became the mechanical man, the great inventor. His name will never perish. Ole Bull became the wonderful violinist that thrilled the world. Ole Bull was in New York City, where he was playing to crowded houses in one of the largest theaters. He ran across his old friend. He said, "John, come up and hear me play." "No," said John Ericson, "I have not time." "Well," said Ole Bull, "if you will not come up to hear me play, I will play to you in your shop." "If you bring that fiddle into my shop, I will smash it into flinders," replied Ericson. Most of us good Christian workers would have given up in despair at his stupidity, and said: "Well, he is past redemption," but not so Ole Bull. He went down one day with the violin. "John," he said, "there is something the matter with this instrument, and as I know you to be a skilled mechanic, I have brought it to you." John sat down by him and talked about the different parts of it, and by and by Ole Bull said, "The philosophy of the thing is this," and he was getting the bridge erected and tightening the strings, and by and by he drew his bow across these strings, and there rolled forth one of the finest of his great pieces, and the men in the rooms near by dropped their tools and crowded about him; and the master went on and played as only he could, and when he had finished and the bow dropped, John Ericson rose up, and with tears rolling down his face, said, "Go on, go on! I never knew before what was lacking in my life. It is music that I long for. Go on, go on!"

Perhaps our preaching has been mechanical,—perhaps we have not learned the music of the Spirit-filled life. Let us pay the price. Let us surrender our lives completely to our Master. Begone worldly ambition, pride and all, and the Spirit of God will send us to preach the song of divine redemption into the ears and hearts of multitudes who are now beyond the reach of our ministry.

S. Topic.

Our last week's topic carried us out in thought into eternity. How vast and how inviting to far-away wandering of thought and desire from the small and hard duties of the little, present moment. How much easier to imagine ourselves having a part in the great things of eternity than to drive ourselves to the irksome drudgery of the very present duty.

Some people identify piety with the yearning for the things of eternity. This disposition may be so cultivated that it will make it exceedingly difficult to fulfill the duty which the great Lord has laid upon our time and hand.

The fact of eternity and all that it contains offers for us a matter of helpful and steadying contemplation. But it is intended to make us readier to do the day's work. It is clearly taught that the bliss and complete joy of eternity depends upon the faithful performance of the daily drudge. Thus the future helps the present.

The Scriptures are always dazzling our eyes with ideals, but every ideal is linked with an actuality. The real is made the stepping stone to the ideal and in turn the ideal gives us strength to rise and to carry our daily duty with us as we go.

In the beautiful yet solemnly suggestive parable of the life of the coming kingdom those who were entrusted with the great concerns of the future life were the ones who had been faithful in "that which was least." That teaching of Jesus ought to help us and comfort us.

There are plenty who strive for the great thing, feeling that they achieve honor in the eminence which it gives them. This is to work to reward one's own pride. It is difficult to get people to do the humbler things. It is easier to fill the reception committee for the social than the dishwashing and the clean-up committee. If Jesus taught true, the ones who refused to wash dishes that they might be on the reception committee will be relegated to the kitchen in the days to come.

It should help us Christian Endeavorers to know that our joy and place and power in the life to come depend upon the faithful performance of our daily duty. Here is a young fellow whose daily duty gets him out of bed at 4 a. m. to carry morning papers. No matter whether it is hot or cold, or wet or dry, whether he wants to sleep or not—duty, drudgery, drives him. But that is his daily task. If he shrinks there will be no place for him in the greater life to come. If he is faithful in this little thing he will be entrusted with greater things, and he will not have to wait until eternity.

This sweet girl has to rise early in the morning and help get breakfast and dress the little sister, and help with the week's ironing and hurry the last minute away to high school and hurry home in the afternoon to help again in the many duties of the home,—suppose she were to establish herself in the parlor for pious meditation upon the bliss of heaven while her mother was wearily working in the kitchen! The religion that pleases the Lord is the spirit that lays hold with alacrity upon the daily duty.

Here is a young fellow ambitious in his college work, Greek and mathematics. Great visions of the future are filling his head. How provoking that his father should suggest to him to help do the family washing or bring a bucket of water or make the beds,—but it is to his honor that he recognizes his daily duty. And does any one think he is the worse for it in his class or that he makes a poorer prayer on consecration night in the Endeavor meeting?

What a fine thing it is that the future which holds for us seemingly all desirable things is conditioned upon faithfulness to daily duty. What a daily help, and how much richer the needy world is because of our faithfulness.

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

The following note will show that the movement in Missouri to add 50 per cent to the attendance on our Bible schools; together with a general toning up of the various features of their work, is bearing fruit. Watch these schools grow. What they are doing, you can do.

"Liberty, Mo., Sept. 30, 1907.

"Dear Brother Hardin—Beginning the first Sunday of October and continuing through the remainder of the year, the Sunday-schools of the Christian churches of Liberty, Cameron and Lexington, will have a contest. The points counted are: On time, two points; tardy, one point; each new pupil, five points; each 5 cents of the offering, one point; studying lesson half-hour, one point. We anticipate a spirited contest, and hope for much good for each of the schools.

"Graham Frank, minister."

It will be encouraging to know that the Clay county convention, held in the summer, made definite arrangements for the enlargement of the Bible school work in the county, as a leading part of the year's work.

BIBLE SCHOOL WORK IN GREATER KANSAS CITY.

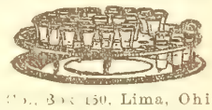
The Officers' and Teachers' Union of Greater Kansas City held its first meeting for the autumn in the Independence Boulevard Church. President D. P. Gribben, superintendent of the wide-awake, growing, enthusiastic school at Ivanhoe, was in the chair. Almost all of our schools in the great radius of Kansas City and vicinity were represented by groups of workers. Our youngest school, Roanoke, at Fortieth and Wyoming, organized during the summer just closed, now numbering 50, had seven teachers present, led by their superintendent, W. A. Anderson. No regular minister has yet been provided for Roanoke, but they meet for Bible school at 11 o'clock every Lord's day and after the Bible lesson the table is spread and they break bread according to the Scriptures. This course will make a church of power, whether they get a regular preacher or not. This is the course which ought to be pursued by hundreds of small groups of brethren and their children and neighbors all over the country.

This course solves the problem of the country and village churches which find it impracticable to have a settled minister among them. Who will try it and tell us how it works?

The occasion referred to was one of high purpose and stirring inspiration. The principal address of the evening was delivered by E. E. Stauffer, of Lawrence, who is the state president of the International Association in Kansas. His address was well conceived, delivered in a pleasing way, and listened to with hungry interest by the large gathering of workers intent on learning whatever is going for the advancement of their and we all felt that our autumn and winter's work had received a helpful send-off. Such work. There was much counsel and planning a meeting in St. Louis, St. Joseph, Springfield and in all other cities and towns where we have two or more churches, ought to be held at once.

Among other things mentioned was the purpose to form a large training class for our teachers in the whole city, for the coming winter. This will no doubt be done.

I want the names and addresses of the teachers of Bible classes in our churches in Missouri, and I want them now, and I want them badly. I have something mighty good to tell them. Will not every such teacher send me his or her name and address on a postal card? Will not every superintendent and pastor send me the names of such teachers in their churches? Do this now!



Send in your pledge to our state Bible school right away. Address as above.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

What to Do in Doubt.

Topic, October 16.—Matt. 11:2-6.

Only the unthinking have no doubts. Doubts mark the limitations of knowledge, where faith begins. Indeed, doubts are often but shades of believing. The inquiring mind is always running up against Colorado canyons and Rocky Mountain ranges. Only little minds, living on the dead level of monotonous existence, or swinging around in little circles of selfishness, with faces to the ground and thoughts that rise no higher than the daily stint of toil, or hourly round of pleasure, have no doubts—if such, indeed, there be. I dare affirm that all great souls have been great doubters. The man who never doubts is the original "standpatter" in politics, religion, invention, discovery, or what-not. The progressionist, the reformer, the founder of new religions, new states, new sciences, have all been magnificent doubters. The faculty of doubting is co-ordinate with what has been called the "faith faculty." The man who is not capable and who has not the courage of daring doubt will never be distinguished for splendid faith. Abram, the Hebrew, must have questioned the whole religious teaching of his fathers or he never would have listened to the Voice of God speaking in his soul, telling him to get up and out to a land that should be afterwards given him for an inheritance. His faith was shown in going out after something better. The pioneers of every new movement for the betterment of the race have belonged to the small class who have the courage to doubt existing systems, customs, policies (though accepted as final by those who claim authority in all things, and with whom old things are always best) and who, along with all their doubts, have had the constructive faith that moves, with a mighty impulse, the mind to act, the heart to hope and the hand to help, and which leads out and on, not knowing, yet trusting and triumphant. Some kinds of doubts are fatal. "He that doubteth is condemned already: because he hath not believed on the name of the Son of God." "He that cometh to God must believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Faith in the eternal is fundamental. The man who will not look up cannot be lifted up. Jesus said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." But he can only draw those who are willing to come. Faith follows the highway of the willing heart. Misgivings mark the mile-posts along our wilderness way. To question may be but the quest of faith after that certainty which sweeps away the spiderwebs of doubt and satisfies. The holiest quest is that after the peace that comes only in laying hold of the unseen and the eternal—grasping with outstretched hands of faith the things beyond our armslength. Paul was grasping after the eternities when he said, "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things unseen." But spite of all our aspirations, all the searchings of our souls, doubts will trouble us, as they did John the Baptist. For him and for us, ofttimes the cure for misgivings and even dreadful doubts is to look about us and see what the Christ has done. Again and again we need to be reassured of the foundation of our faith, which rests not in the wisdom of man but in the power of God. The miracles wrought in human lives are not less wonderful, the benevolences inspired by the spirit of the Christ in the world are not less potent to-day than when the Master walked the ways of suffering man almost two thousand years ago. After all, there is nothing like actually trying to live the Christian life to strengthen our faith in Christ as a present help and our living hope. "Do something for some one," is the prescription of a wise physician to a nervous and mentally troubled individual. Doubts will not trouble us much if we keep busy. And when they persist in bothering us, there is one unfailing cure: "Remember Jesus Christ!"

The Capture of Jericho.—Josh. 6:8-20.

Memory verse, 20.

Golden Text.—By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they had been compassed about seven days.—Heb. 11:30.

As Israel entered Canaan by crossing a river without fording it, so she began the conquest of Canaan by capturing a city without fighting for it.

We are beginning to learn experimentally in these modern days that the power of the sword is not supreme. If the history of the rise and fall of nations teaches anything, it teaches that military strength is no guarantee of the perpetuity and ultimate triumph of a nation. The path of the centuries is strewn with the wrecks of empires whose prowess could not save them.

Somehow, some way, early in her history Israel grasped this truth that faith prevails when the sword fails. Her leaders sometimes and her people often, lost sight of it, but the truth was always there, in the background if not in the foreground of the national consciousness, as a principle to which the nation returned after every period of forgetfulness or apostasy.

How did Israel get that idea which the wisdom of men needed centuries to develop? Perhaps the easiest way is to believe, as they believed, that they got it through revelation—a revelation which expressed itself partly in the teachings of wise men who were moved by the spirit of God, and which found even more significant embodiment in the events and experiences of the national life.

The conquest of Jericho was one of these experiences. Into this record is wrought that splendid conception that physical force is less potent than spiritual force, that faith and the objects of faith are more real than mere things. And from it flowed a renewal and strengthening of that conviction.

But faith did not do the whole work. The people had more to do than to march and blow and shout. The walls fell down, but the fighting men of Israel still had to take the city. The falling of the walls gave an opportunity for conquest, but it did not dispense with the necessity for vigorous effort. There was doubtless some fighting to be done, though the record passes over the fact in its greater interest in the more marvelous part of the story. Faith brought opportunity and aid; it did not give victory outright.

Dependable Books

—Faces Toward the Light. Sylvanus Stall. This is for the devotional hour. Every phase of the Christian life—its joys and sorrows, its temptations and triumphs—is treated in reverent and deeply spiritual manner that is sure to prove helpful and inspiring to every reader. $1.00.

—Lectures on Preaching. By Phillips Brooks. These are stenographic reports of lectures delivered by this prince of preachers before the divinity school of Yale College. It is a beautifully bound volume. Considering the wealth of learning it contains, together with the beauty of expression and inspiration to become a useful preacher, it is cheap at $1.30.

—Huck's Synopsis of the First Three Gospels. By Ross Z. Finney. This contains an analytical outline of the parallel passages of the synoptics that has received the commendation of many able Bible scholars. The appendices are valuable. In them are listed Old Testament quotations in the synoptics, Johannine parallels to the synoptics, parallels and duplicates, etc. $1.00.

—Christianity's Storm Center. By Charles Stelzli. To the author the storm center is the city, and the problem of the city is an industrial one. He believes that if the church can be aroused to face the problem, investigate conditions and alter its own methods it will win the fight for uniting the church and the laboring masses. Through it all there prevails a contagious optimism. $1.00.

—The Evangelistic Note. By W. J. Dawson. The address on "Self-Reservation" was delivered to the students of Yale University. The remaining thirteen were given during a revival held by this truly great preacher for Newell Dwight Hillis in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. These are all on lofty spiritual plan and will be most helpful. $1.25.

—Object Lessons for Children. By C. H. Tyndall. The eye is the first avenue to the soul. It is the shortest. It is the easiest and quickest. The author believes in using the eye as a medium for the communication of instruction in the Scriptures and in the ways of life. The book contains a great many brief but strikingly illustrated talks to children. It will be helpful to every preacher and Bible or secular school-teacher. $1.00.

—The Cyclopedic Handbook to the Bible. Agnes Green. This is one of the profoundest and most helpful introductions to the Scriptures ever offered the reading public. The Country the Nursery of the American People.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Your country church symposium is worth all the special subjects that have been discussed in our leading papers for ten years.

City and town women are bearing but few children. The breeding ground and nursery of the American people is in the country. The majority of our town and city people are born in the country. A Catholic priest has said: "Give me the child until he is ten years old and you can have him, for he will be a Catholic all the same." Our neglect of the country, which is our source of supply, is shameful. Some one has said that we are not alone in wrestling with this problem. That is true, for we have the Presbyterians and Episcopalians with us, also the Congregationalists. But there is a Methodist or Baptist church and preacher at almost every crossroads in America. The Baptists are not one-third so strong in the country as the Methodists, but there are thousand of Baptist preachers in the country. Some of us wonder why the Methodist churches both north and south will grow and prosper and get in the lead in our best towns regardless of any errors or mistakes. Their answer is, "We scour the woods." Another is, "We visit the hen's nests in the rural districts and gather the chickens where they are hatched." If you ask the question, "What is the secret of Methodist power?" the answer will come, "The circuit rider." He stays out where the people are born and gathers the twigs while they are tender and shapes them into Methodists. These men become successful farmers, move to the country towns and join the Methodist churches and make them strong. From the towns the more successful of them drift into the cities and join the Methodist churches and make them strong. As a propaganda in cities Methodism is a failure; and yet it is the strongest church in America because the Methodist preacher in the country has for hundreds of years been present at the birth of American citizenship. In other words, the Methodist church leads America even in the cities, because they have watched the "source of supply."

Our people in the South have simply thrown the country away. We have gone entirely wild over the "centers of influence." For sixteen years I have served as state corresponding secretary, and both my conventions and the boards have kept up the howl for "the centers of influence," and we have spent a bushel of money sawing our way into cities already full of churches.

I have no pride in the matter at all, for I have established churches in some of the greatest cities in the land, and to-day have more calls for that kind of work, and that at a better price than I ever had in my life, and yet for one I volunteer to give the balance of my days of usefulness to country work. Now don't let some one say, "He is looking for a job," for I have a permanent position with all the salary I want or need. I am willing to go to the country and do that work if it cost me half my salary, or all of it but a bare living for that matter. But, brethren, we can do just as well, financially, in the country as anywhere, for I have tried it. May God help us to get alive on this question. John A. Stevens.

Baptists—Disciples.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I most heartily plead guilty to all the impeachments—soft or hard—contained in the comprehensive editorial "Forbearing One Another in Love," of September 19. We have all gotten so much in the way of differentiating abruptly between North and South that injustice has been done both.

We talk of "southern hospitality" as though the North were inhospitable, and of "northern enterprise" as though the South were unenterprising. I would be the last to wish to perpetuate any such fictions or to stimulate any prejudices between the sections. Both North and South have been very good to me and mine, and as an Englishman I take advantage of this opportunity to acknowledge my indebtedness. I love the United States, North and South, East and West. I love the Baptists of the South and the Disciples of the South, and it is because I love them that I have chastised" them as I have. They are a plain-spoken folk and they can understand plain talk, and for their own good it is best that they be spoken to plainly. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend." As to the matters at issue, a study at close range of several years has convinced me that there is not even a remote possibility of even a distant union—a union in the dim and distant future—between the Baptists in the main and the Disciples in the main in the South. The Church conception of Christianity absolutely impregnates the thought of both bodies. "We are the Church," assert the Baptists. "We are the Church," assert the Disciples. Each body asserts it as strongly as does Rome, and when they unite with Rome they may unite with one another. Wherever the Church conception prevails there is no hope for unity.

Baptists, with their close communion; Disciples, with their close baptism, emphasize the close corporation conception of Christian (?) fellowship. Baptists becoming Disciples, Disciples becoming Baptists, have to submit to re-baptism. Baptists are re-baptized "for the remission of their sins." Disciples are re-baptized into the Baptist church. While this is not universal, it is general in the South. Of course there is not much crossing of the lines, but such practices and the spirit in which they are conceived keep the bodies not only from unity but from fraternity. They both need to learn the fundamental principle of the universal brotherhood of all Christians before there can be any substantial hope of unity.

Let me say in conclusion that I believe we all need to learn more of that principle, and also that, whether right or wrong, the tenaciousness of the Baptists and the Disciples South is a tribute to the conscientiousness and the conservatism of that historic section.

In my first article the word "baptism," in the fifth line, should be "Baptistism."

"The Church as Seen by a Pastor."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

The article in your issue of August 29, "The Church as Seen by a Pastor," not only merits but compels a word of thanks. Seldom has this subject been so succinctly put and clearly stated. Brother Wise has manifested a temperate and brotherly spirit, while exposing in a candid and fearless way the difficulties and hardships of the minister and his relationship with the congregation.

About ten or twelve years ago, according to my recollection, there was an extended discussion in the "Christian Standard," CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and perhaps other papers, concerning the use of the term pastor, as commonly applied to preachers; and also the general duties of the bishopric. There are some of us very tender on this point, sensitive to the misapplication of the term. I, myself, would far rather be a minister and be expected to do the work of an evangelist; but when I have to be evangelist, bishop, deacon and "helps" combined, I can see no ground for objecting to being called pastor—unless for the fun of a logomachy decision of no good results. The term becomes appropriate.

I take for granted that the conditions Brother Wise describes are general. They are as far as my own observation extends. And we are a people endeavoring to set up the New Testament church. We need a reformation of the Restoration; or else we must abandon our ideals. It is true that these matters of the minister's place, work and relation to the congregation; the bishop's qualifications and work; the deacons' duties and local church government should be opened for a new consideration. OBITUARY.

GREENE.

Carlin W. Greene was born in White County, Tenn., January 1, 1838; died in Homewood, Kan., September 24, 1907, and was buried from the Christian Church, Homewood, September 26. The writer, being a warm personal friend, conducted the funeral services in the presence of a very large and deeply sympathizing audience, convened from various parts of the country. Death rarely removes from the circles of earth one who would be more sincerely and sadly missed. The church will be long years in recovering from the vacancy made by his death. He was a large-hearted and liberal-minded man, which naturally identified him intimately with every interest of the community, financial, moral, religious and educational. His parents moved from Tennessee to Mason County, Illinois, in 1846. Here he grew to manhood and married Miss Malinda Kincaid. From this union four children were born; one died in infancy, the others grew to manhood and womanhood and fill honored and useful places in the business world and society. The mother died near Ottawa, Kan., February 17, 1872. She was a lady of rare excellence, a faithful wife and loving mother and left the impress of her excellent qualities upon her children, who hold her memory in sacred regard. On the 25th day of December, 1872, Brother Greene married Miss Maria L. Spears. This proved to be a very happy union. To them four children were born, all of whom are living except one. Miss Beulah, a young lady of very pleasing personality and intellectual attainments, is the supreme comfort and consolation of her sorrowing mother, being still at home. Upon Sister Green have fallen grave and varied responsibilities and increased cares, but she is of brave heart and firm Christian resolution and will be equal to the unexpected obligations placed upon her by the hand of death. As her husband was, so is she, associated as a leader with all good work; is gentle in her ways, kindly considerate of the interests of all and is held in loving esteem by the church and community.

THE LITERATURE OF TO-DAY

At Seventy-five and Other Poems. By W. T. Moore. Price $2. Hand-made paper. Printed in three colors. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

["The St. Louis Republic" contains the following review of this handsome new book just published. It is one of the most beautiful examples of the printer's art ever made in the West. Not often does a daily paper give such extended notice to a book of this kind.]

When a man has reached the age of three score and ten, it is generally supposed that he is incapable of any great work, but W. T. Moore, M. A., LL. D., of Columbia, Mo., has demonstrated by the publishing of a book of poems on his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary, that his mind is as fertile and productive as any of lesser years. The book is entitled "At Seventy-five and Other Poems." They are a fine collection and realizing the breadth of the author's experience they give us an insight into the sunset of what has been a delightful life.

The publishing of this book is the author's method of celebrating his seventy-fifth birthday. Many of the poems were written back in college days, while others have been written in the glowing sunset of life. In the first poem in the book, called "At Seventy-Five," the author puts Oslerism to rout by declaring:

They say I'm growing old.
That may be so;
The years do seem some
Shorter as they go;
And that, by law of nature
And of grace,
Is proof that age is creeping
On apace.

Still age may have a meaning not correct,
And in my case that's true, as I suspect,
For life is brighter as I near the shore
Of that good land we name "Forevermore."
And as our lives consist in thoughts and deeds,
And not in figures on the dial or creeds,
Why should the age of sev'nty-five be old?
Why not be sane and at the same time bold?
Do I not speak within the bounds of truth,
By saying that before me lies my youth?
So that I'm sev'nty-five years young to-day,
No matter what mistaken friends may say.

One of the longest poems in the book is entitled "Heroes and Heroes," and consists of twenty good-sized cantos. This poem shows great labor in its making, and proves first-class reading. But the author does not confine himself to the serious poem altogether, for he has a poem entitled "How the Sewage Comes Down from Chicago," suggested by the controversy between St. Louis and Chicago in reference to the opening of the drainage canal. In part this poem runs:

Here it comes seething,
There it goes breathing—
Breathing with endless germs of disease;
Now it moves slowly,
With mien calm and lowly,
As if some merited wrath to appease.
Again it moves faster,
Bearing death and disaster
In every dark crest of its foam;
